The proceedings of the seventeenth annual convention of the South Dakota Bankers Association, which was held at Deadwood, July 8th and 9th, is out in book form. Secretary J. E. Platt has gotten up a very attractive volume, and as it contains President George E. Roberts' address on the "Central Bank," in full, it will be much sought after. It also contains an address on "Wall Street and the Country" by Sereno S. Pratt, editor of the Wall Street Journal. This is another drawing card. Another instructive address is one by J. J. Jones, Public Examiner for the State of South Dakota on "Our State Banks." This book is so indexed that one can turn in a second to that which he wishes to find.

Regulations for Public Moneys

Secretary Cortelyou has ordered that hereafter all moneys received by custodians of public buildings, under the control of the treasury department, from the sale of old and unserviceable government property, from ground rents, from privileges, from rents accruing from government properties, or moneys received from any source in connection with the authorized use and occupancy of public buildings and grounds by outside parties, will be deposited in the nearest sub-treasury, or with a duly designated national bank depositary authorized to receive such funds, to the credit of the treasurer of the United States, in his general account, in their own names as custodians, on account of sale or rent, or whatever the source may be describing the same; and separate certificates of deposit therefor must be obtained.

Separate accounts covering the receipts and disposition of moneys coming into their hands, as above, must be submitted by custodians of public buildings, to the department. Receipts of the character named must not be associated with revenues or funds having relation to customs collections, internal revenue collections, postal receipts, etc., but must be kept distinct therefrom and separately accounted for.

San Francisco Clearing House Report

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., February 24.—Thomas H. Brewer, vice-president of the Exchange National, was one of the prominent speakers at the fourth annual convention of the Inland Empire Retail Dealers' Association in Spokane, February 9th to 11th, when he discussed, "The Value of Credit and How to Protect It," laying emphasis upon the fact that "short settlements make long friends." He said among other things:

"No merchant ever built up much of a business without using his credit extensively. Good credit is a merchant's most valuable asset. Good credit and ability go hand in hand. There is plenty of money in the banks to loan to merchants who use it wisely and can be depended upon to return it when needed. Ordinarily, loans to merchants are the most satisfactory the bank has, and if the merchant will manage his bank affairs carefully his credit will be limited only by his ability to handle large affairs.

Good Balances

"It should go without saying that the merchant using his credit will be careful about his obligations to the bank. Good balances make the banker glad. Among eastern banks a balance of 20 per cent of a loan is required to be kept on deposit, and, though things are more free in this western country, it will help a merchant's credit mightily in this part of the continent if he keeps a good credit in the bank.

"The extending of credit to customers by the merchants is a great problem. Few merchants can do business without extending some credit, and the success one has in handling this difficult question often makes the difference between success and failure. It is my experience that it is practically impossible to do a strictly cash business in country towns, but that does not mean that it is necessary to extend credit recklessly. It is much better to have the goods on the shelves than to put them out to parties where it is doubtful whether they will be paid for. It takes nerve to let the trade go to the other fellow, but perhaps if you are shrewd you can load him up with the dead beats and you will soon see him hang out the signal of distress. You will get most of the cash trade of the other fellow's credit customers anyway."

Hits upon Novel Idea

D. W. Twohy, president of the Old National, has hit upon a novel idea to obtain the best plans for a twelve-story office and bank building, to be erected by his company, by holding a prize contest for architects. So that competitors whose plans are not accepted may be compensated for their work, the bank offers a premium of $1,000 for the second best plans and $500 for the third. The first will not receive anything outside of the regular commission. Competing architects will be permitted to follow their own ideas in the style of architecture and general plan, the only requirement being a plan for a twelve-story fireproof office building, 100 by 142 feet. The contestants have two months in which to submit their plans. W. J. Krommers, cashier of the bank, has charge of the contest.

Master of "High Finance"

Don Carlos Wiseley, 21 years of age, who pleaded guilty to stealing $10,000 from the Old National, where he was employed as a clerk, was sentenced by Judge J. D. Hinkle in the Spokane County Superior Court to serve not less than one year nor more than 10 years in the penitentiary at Walla Walla. Nearly $9,000 was recovered by the bank. Superintendent Minster of the Pinkerton Detective agency at St. Louis, where the boy was arrested a month ago, said this of Wiseley's operation: "He has a scheme so simple and yet so effective that it would make a Wall Street juggler look like a novice in comparison, and puts this young man in a class by himself as a master of 'high finance.' The plan he has thought out is so good that I hesitate to reveal it for fear it would be used more generally."

Has Exceptionally High Credit

W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National, says that Spokane has an exceptionally high credit and that its bonds are eagerly sought in the eastern financial centers. Spokane's school district bonds, issued July 1st, 1908, bearing 4½ per cent interest, are quoted in Chicago and New York at 108 7/8 per cent, selling at a premium of 8.78%. This brings the rate of interest to buyers at present quotations, down to 3 85-100 per cent, but the investment looks so attractive to bond buyers that there is a brisk demand for the bonds. He says that other securities issued by Spokane are firm, on the reports circulated in the east that the true value of Spokane's real property is more than $100,000,000, its assessed valuation upward of $62,000,000 and its total debt only about 3 per cent of the assessed valuation.

Hears "Call of the Soil"

R. C. Royce, cashier of the Yakima Trust Company at North Yakima, Wash., has resigned to engage in the management of a 154 acre orchard in April. Associated with him will be M. E. Olson. Like many other professional and business men of the Yakima country, Mr. Royce has heard the "call of the soil," and decided that fruit growing is more profitable than any other line of business in the country. The ranch he has acquired is one of the best known properties in the Yakima valley.

"150,000 Club"

James C. Cunningham, secretary-treasurer of the Union Trust Company, was appointed chairman of the publicity committee, and W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National, was named head of the committee having charge of the collections of funds, for the children's home by H. J. Neely, president of the 150,000 club of Spokane. C. Herbert Moore, mayor of Spokane, is chairman of the City Beautiful and parks committee. The 150,000 club has 3,000 members, whose chief aim is to make Spokane the best city on the continent. The club will disband in 1910 to be reorganized at once as the 250,000 club.

Clarence Dawson, formerly of the City National, of Mason City, Iowa, has accepted a position of teller in the Exchange National of Spokane.

Gold Standard for Siam

The United States Minister at Bangkok advises that in pursuance of its policy to place its currency on a gold basis, the Siamese government has enacted a law providing for a gold coinage and establishing a fund of 12,000,000 ticals (about £925,000, or $4,501,513) as a gold reserve for maintenance of the stability of the exchange value of the silver currency already in circulation. At present there is practically no gold coin in circulation. The law provides for gold and silver coins of a new design, as well as new subsidiary coins on a decimal basis.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

CHAS. E. WARDELL, cashier of the State Exchange Bank of Macon, Mo., sends out the February 5th statement, showing deposits of $605,650.60. The capital stock is $100,000 and surplus and undivided profits, $12,445.76. This bank is the result of a consolidation of the State Exchange, a state bank, with the First National, now doing business under a state charter. John Scovern is the president, and Thos. E. Wardell, vice-president. The growth of this institution has been steady, and it bears a most excellent reputation.

BANKERS will be surprised to learn that there were several ghosts registered at the Denver convention. A liberal interpretation of this statement means that there were present those who were mean enough not only to register from banks which were not actually represented but to register in the names of men known to be dead. In the great hurry to secure badges and room accommodations, there always is a rush at the registration desk, and it is not possible for Mr. Fitzwilson to personally identify every person who presents himself.

IT is not possible to prevent this species of small swindle, but at the Chicago convention, it is expected, that those who register falsely in order to secure tickets, badges, and other complimentary offerings, will be closely inspected by a secret representative of the American Bankers Association. It doesn't look well to have a big book of proceedings appearing with the names of two or three dead men present as guests or delegates at the convention. To register falsely is about the smallest, petty offense that a banker or "near banker" could be guilty of. It should not happen ever again.

THE local committee of Chicago bankers to make arrangement for the big convention has not yet been appointed. From present plans, it does not seem that they will have a very strenuous time in securing rooms for visiting bankers. Those who wish to make reservations should address the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, for rooms in the Congress, the Auditorium, and the Annex hotels. On the same block with the Auditorium are the Victoria and the Stratford, two most excellent hotels. Failing to get into the Auditorium proper, either of these would be a very fine substitute.

THE committee of arrangements headed by Mr. Farnsworth, postponed the calling of the convention from September 6th to September 13th to insure the readiness of the New La Salle Hotel. It is expected that every room in that finest of new buildings will be taken. In café and dining room service, it will be equal to anything in the country. Reservations can be made by addressing that hotel direct.

IT is understood that the banks of Chicago will not undertake to secure or hold rooms for their correspondents. Everything in Chicago is done so openly and so fairly between banks and bankers, that there will be no violation of this agreement. All intending to come to the convention, who do not make their own reservations, will be provided for later by a committee yet to be appointed.

SECRETARY FARNSWORTH very confidently predicts an attendance of 5,000, and no banker in Chicago, judging by inquiries for rooms and other particulars, doubts that he has made a good guess. The Illinois association expects to decorate every attendant with a handsome state pin. There will be other little attentions yet to be provided, which will make this the banner convention of all those ever held by the association.

THERE were great doings down at Belleville, this state, on Saturday last. The principal out-of-town guest was J. M. Appel, of the state auditor's office at Springfield. He came wearing his very best clothes to officiate at a most important ceremony. Under his supervision, an audit was made and the books closed after a charter life of 50 years, for the Belleville Savings Bank.

IN a very few minutes, without a change of costume, an entirely new institution with the same officers, same capital, and some surplus, had been brought into existence, with the very same environments of the deceased institution.

THE Belleville Savings Bank was chartered in 1859, for 50 years, the certificate going originally to the St. Clair Savings and Insurance Company, which reorganized under the same charter ten years later. This is the third oldest banking institution in the state of Illinois, and it has a record of which any bank, large or small, might be very proud indeed. The original paid-in capital was but $13,200, it being a day of small things in a thinly populated commonwealth. To-day, capital and surplus are well above a half million, all accumulated and paid up out of earnings. Dividends always have been paid, and the deposits are $1,680,000.

THIS is the bank of which the late Edward Abend was president for over 45 years. Of the original incorporators but one is now alive. Of the original 140 stockholders, four are still living. In 50 years, they have had but four cashiers, and Richard Wangelin, who holds that position at present, was elected in 1879. The bank has prospered from its very beginning and enjoys the reputation in its own locality for having been always faithful to its trusts and an institution of the greatest patriotism during the Civil War. It subscribed as it was able to every government loan of that period.

WHEN the pleasant ceremonies, over which Mr. Appel presided, were concluded, the entire official staff of the bank, together with such stockholders and depositors as were present, adjourned to the Zur-Welle Café and enjoyed a fitting banquet in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Belleville Savings Bank.

GEORGE WOODRUFF of Joliet has arranged to spend much of March in California, if business does not intervene. He never overlooks business.

SAYS Wm. B. Hughes, for the Omaha Bankers: "This is to announce the capture and conviction of Harry F. Brown and Wm. Hall for the robbery of the DeWeese State Bank. We got them in St. Joseph and had them held until we had parties from DeWeese go to St. Joseph at the Association's expense to identify them if possible. The Association and the National Surety Co. together employed special counsel to be sure that the case was correctly pushed. After looking after the case at every possible point, we had the satisfaction of seeing the men convicted. Each man received a ten-year sentence."

NEBRASKA has a standing "$1,000 reward" offer but also has a detective system of its own which is so effective as to often save the reward. Here's a pointer for a certain Mr. Farnsworth of New York and elsewhere. Mr. Hughes has "two other cases" about "ready for report." Good! wouldn't it stir your blood if the old A. B.

A. could modernize its methods as our western states have done?

THAT Group Seven, Iowa, address by "Sunny Jim" Latta, of Minneapolis was so good that we learn that several state secretaries with unfilled programmes are hitting the Northwestern trail. Everyone will like Mr. Latta for he is good-to-be-with as well as a fine talker.

EDWIN L. LOBDELL of this city says "bond market conditions are still highly satisfactory; easy money continues, both in this country and in Europe, and there is little in the outlook to indicate higher rates in the near future. General business is likely to continue quiet and few new enterprises will be undertaken until the details of the proposed tariff revision are definitely settled; by that time, it is probable that the outlook for the coming crops will be fully known and business will be gradually adjusted to the new conditions."

GEORGE F. ORDE came down from Minneapolis last week with C. B. Mills of Iowa, "for a day in La Salle Street." He's just as proud as ever of Northwestern banking and business conditions.

"OHIO Banks Go Under" was the striking headline in a Chicago paper which sent a thrill down La Salle Street's spinal column until the text made it clear that the banks which went under were those of the Ohio river, the stage of water at Cincinnati being about 59 feet.

WE don't deal in rumors but here is one too good for the basket. "Oh, say, did you hear" said the voice on the wire? "Did you hear that George Reynolds had swapped his grip on the Treasury portfolio for Franklin MacVeagh's big block of Commercial National and that a consolidation, etc." If you like rumors that ought to last you for a day or two.

EMISON Chanslor made no bad guess when he saw the opportunity for a bank in the big Union Station at St. Louis. In four weeks on a capital of $50,000 he can show deposits of $340,925.75 which is going some. He calls the baby The Union Station Bank and it is said he joined Keyser's Missouri Bankers Association in advance of the opening, just to show where he stood on organization matters.

A LETTER from P. C. Kauffman, at Tacoma, says that while he actually was not looking at Mt. Tacoma while his A. B. A. picture was being taken, he was thinking about it. His tri-state convention at Seattle, June 24th, 25th, and 26th is booming. Oregon, Idaho and Washington will join plays for a big time.

Secretary L. P. Hillyer, of the Georgia Bankers Association, has called a meeting of the executive council in Atlanta to-day, when all plans for the holding of the next state convention will be perfected. It is probable that the meeting of the association will be held in Savannah, as the Clearing House Association of that city has made a very strong bid for it. The last convention was held in Brunswick.

The Making of an Accurate History of the United States and Its People

No American library is complete which is not furnished with the best and most accurate history of the United States. Some works of great value have dealt with periods or issues but the great master-work for all ages has waited upon a time when men able to write, and men willing to spend a fortune in the work, might join in the mighty enterprise. The banker-student of our country has waited for such a work. In a set of volumes, sixteen in number, entitled "A History of the United States and its People," now in its fifth volume, all requirements seem to have been met. Twenty years of hard labor were spent upon it before volume one was ready for the public. The writer, Elroy M. Avery, has been a student and teacher of history for a generation. As a writer he easily might be considered in a class by himself. His publisher is that rarest of all things, a genius and a man of means. Charles William Burrows was a young New Englander with a West Point training when he went to the city of Cleveland years ago. To-day he is the head of a big publishing house and already is famous as one of the two men who are making over our history according to its facts, and not the fancies, more or less correct, with which most historians have contented themselves.

And in this great and interesting task, to which he is devoting his time and his fortune, he is constantly tripping over the mistakes made by the less careful chroniclers of the past.

Twenty years ago he conceived the idea, which was with him a patriotic purpose, of producing an accurate history of the United States and its people from the earliest records to the present time. He saw in his mind a row of eight or ten octavo volumes which would, in the course of a few years, realize his ambition.

Too busy to assume the writing he sought his friend and fellow-townsmen, Elroy McKendree Avery, already well known as an author and scholar. The two went over the preliminary plans for the vast work and agreed that it would be at least a matter of four years.

At the end of four years not even the first volume had appeared, though both men had been working away steadily and enthusiastically. At the end of ten years it was the same. Now, at the end of twenty-one years, five volumes have come from the press, and the total number to be issued has been increased to sixteen.

And back of the quartet of tomes that are and the remaining twelve in various stages of preparation, are scores of experiences romantic enough to form foundations for so-called works of fiction.

Thousands of school children have learned that the first raising of the Stars and Stripes in battle was on August 2, 1777, when, as a matter of fact, the correct date of this important event is August 3, 1777. The flag was not made until the morning of this latter day!

Multitudes have read how Columbus, on his return to Spain, cast anchor in the port of Palos on Friday, March 14, 1493, and yet there never was such a date as Friday, March 14, 1493! It was Friday, March 15th.

ELROY M. AVERY
Author of a "History of the United States and Its People"

With many persons it is an historical fact that the immortal encounter between the Bon Homme Richard and the Serapis took place off the coast of Flamborough Head, Scotland, on the evening of September 25, 1779, and that the contest was waged through "the long hours of night," whereas, in truth, it was off England, on September 23d, and the fight was finished by 10:30 p. m.!

These are but two of the thousands of popular errors which have been toilsomely and expensively run down and corrected for all time.

When you pay for and give time to the reading of a history it, above all things, should be correct. Macaulay says: "The perfect historian is he in whose work the character and spirit of an age is exhibited in miniature. He relates no fact, he attributes no expression to his characters, which is not authenticated by sufficient testimony. But, by judicious selection, rejection, and arrangement, he gives to truth those attractions which have been usurped by fiction. In his narrative a due subordination is observed: some transactions are prominent; others retire. But the scale on which he represents them is increased or diminished, not according to the dignity of the persons concerned in them, but according to the degree in which they elucidate the condition of society and the nature of man. He shows us the court, the camp, and the senate. But he shows us also the nation. He considers no anecdote, no peculiarity of manner, no familiar saying, as too insignificant for his notice which is not too insignificant to illustrate the operation of laws, of religion, and of education, and to mark the progress of the human mind. Men will not merely be described, but will be made intimately known to us."

A famous American writer and critic was so interested in the great work that he went to Cleveland and spent days with Burrows and Avery in their great historical laboratory. This he wrote to his own publishers and to the public:

"As to the literary excellence of the work, the four volumes now off the press proclaim it a masterpiece of historical writing. Dr. Avery has the rare ability of making a few words say a great deal, as witness this description of the discovery of America, from the first volume:

"In his journal, Columbus says that on this Thursday they encountered a 'heavier sea than he had met with before on the whole voyage,' and that 'after sunset they sailed twelve miles an hour until two hours after midnight, going ninety miles.' When, at 2 o'clock in the morning, Rodrigo de Triana sighted land two leagues distant (its direction from the ship is not recorded), the mariners 'took in sail and remained under square sail, lying to till day.'"

"With what impatience the dawn must have been awaited! Who can comprehend the emotions of Columbus in those hours? The wisdom and the sublime faith, the persistence and the enthusiasm that for eighteen years had kept him from despair, had guided him to triumph—triumph over the sneers of monks and scoffs of sages, triumph over the treachery and doubts of monarchs, triumph over the errors of ages and the superstitions of millions, a triumph that revealed the great mystery of the ocean and realized the visions of a lifetime.

"There before him in the gloom of early morning lay the Indies, with all the opulence and splendor of her palaces and cities. There in peaceful slumber lay the countless millions to whom he had come as the messenger of the glad tidings of salvation. He thought that he had discovered a new route to India. He knew not, nor did he ever know, that he had found a world and not a way. He had sailed upon the unknown sea to seek the El Dorado of wealth and power, and found instead the battlefield of liberty.

"Each volume thus far produced has been written and rewritten, and no manuscript has been allowed to reach the printers until the best of authorities on the subjects included therein have had it in hand for revision and possible correction. In this way it is hoped to get at and preserve the truths of our history for all time, and to sanction these truths the wide world has been ransacked for nearly a quarter of a century, and neither of the men interested can say how much longer it will take to complete the task.

"Already Mr. Burrows has spent a fair fortune—nearly $200,000—in the acquisition and preparation of the facts, but this does not seem to bother him in the least.

"Of course, I do not expect to get it back," he says, "but I shall be fully repaid if I am allowed to live long enough to see the work finished as Dr. Avery and I have planned it."

In volume three the intense conflict of years between British "prerogative" and popular rights was told with hundreds of illustrations and in volume four Mr. Avery tells how the shackles finally were broken and the colonists prepared for the grand struggle for liberty. Mr. Avery believes and gets it into the mind of the reader that "the revolution" was as much in the blood as in environment. Vol. IV contains 287 pictures, all flags, uniforms, portraits, and the like being in the finest of color work. The period covered in Vol. IV is from 1745 to 1764, closing with the Cherokee and Pontiac wars. Maps, arms, plans of battle, forts, buildings, medals, coins, fac simile signatures, and relics furnish the illustrations.

No review can do these matchless volumes, matchless in matter, in wealth of illustration; in style; in typography; in binding and in fine paper, full justice. The Burrows Publishing Company, Cleveland, send free a booklet upon request which shows as nothing else can, the character of "A History of the United States and its People."

Fisk & Robinson

Fisk & Robinson, of Chicago, in their virile investment circular issued Tuesday discuss the various momentous problems now confronting the nation and note that substantial progress is being made in arriving at an understanding of the limitations of government and of corporations. "The most influential factors in our business growth to-day," they say in part, "are the problems facing the new Congress and incoming administration. To the final determination of the status of corporations, to the inauguration of a wise and scientific revision of the tariff and to the creation of a proper banking and currency system, all other national questions are secondary. In view of the importance to the nation of a right disposition of these problems, it is encouraging to note the progress already made toward their settlement.

"As to corporations, not only is their value and desirability now recognized by the public, thus practically removing them from the field of political chicanery, but great strides have been made in securing those mutual concessions necessary to insure sound development and right conduct. When we recall the recent unintelligent uproar on the subject, it seems incredible that we should now find the commissioner of corporations advocating in his annual report that 'The control (of corporate interests) by the Federal Government should be broadened into a general constructive system, based on these tested principles of supervision, publicity and co-operation.' At the same time the admirable address of Chairman Gary of the Steel Corporation at the Illinois Society banquet contains an urgent plea for the co-operation of corporations with the Government in promoting the public welfare. Senator Elkins, the author of the disturbing commodity clause in the so-called Hepburn law, has presented an adverse report on the Fulton bill, which proposed to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to pass in advance on increases in railroad rates, and sternly admonishes the senate that 'it is not a time to experiment' and that 'the country is now demanding repose in its industrial upbuilding.' Almost simultaneously Mr. Harriman is quoted as informing the citizens of Texas that the railroads have not conducted themselves always as uprightly as they should have done, and urging upon them the desirability of mending their ways. In spite of the circuit court of appeals' adverse decision in the case of the Landis fine, we see the Standard Oil of Missouri, acting, it is true, under pressure, willing to go into partnership with that state rather than surrender its lucrative trade. The International Harvester Company also is willing to engage in a similar combination with the state of Kansas, doubtless in the hope that it will result in the promotion rather than the restraint of trade.

"As a matter of fact, all the interested parties, from one cause or another, are recognizing more clearly their duties and limitations. The problem before Congress and the administration, so far as corporations are concerned, is the development of a scheme of nationalization of and supervision over them, which will not retard their growth, but on the contrary, facilitate it along sound and righteous lines. * * * On the wise and just reconciliation of the unfortunate and unnecessary conflict between our political and business life; on the establishment of a tariff which will recognize our expanding commercial relations with all the nations of the earth; on the installation of a banking and currency system which will command the admiration of the world, depends the future prosperity of the United States. To all of these propositions the next administration is committed."

Savings Bank Insurance

Boston, February 28.—Large employers of labor are being urged by the Boston Merchants Association to join in a movement to interest wage-earners in savings bank insurance. The committee on wage-earners' insurance announced yesterday that it was going to establish a bureau of information and enter upon a vigorous campaign of education. Already a large amount of printed matter has been prepared and it is stated that a well equipped man, posted on insurance, will be employed by the association to go about the state and arouse the interest of both employer and employee in the movement.

The report of the committee declares that two or three large employers have been interested to the extent of spending some of their own money to develop savings bank insurance among their employees and had found the result "satisfactory."

Chicago Bank Clearings for February

Chicago continues to grow as a financial center, by rapid strides. It made another new record in February, in the amount of its bank clearances. The total exchanges for the month were $1,004,039,362. Clearings never before reached the billion dollar mark for any one month. These figures show an increase of $147,123,752 over the clearings for the same month a year ago. In the first two months also of this year the clearings of Chicago banks have been higher than in any similar period. The total was $2,126,000,000.

Effect of New Law in Ohio

The State Banking Department has advised various department stores to discontinue doing a banking business. Some of these stores have been accepting deposits, allowing 4 per cent interest to depositors.

General Counsel Paton, of the American Bankers Association, when questioned in regard to department store banking, stated that last year the legislature of Ohio enacted a general law relating to the organization and inspection of banks and created the office of Superintendent of Banks with full power to carry out the provisions of the law. Mr. Paton said that the Ohio law provides a general scheme for the incorporation of commercial banks, savings banks, savings societies, safe deposit companies and trust companies, or one institution can be incorporated having departments for two or more, or all of these classes of business. It is probably under this newly established banking system that the Superintendent of the Ohio Banking Department derives power to prohibit department store banking by mercantile concerns.

Under the New York banking law the superintendent has no such prohibitory power.

The Mason Bank Company

The Mason Bank Co. of Mason has been chartered with a capital of $25,000. N. W. Voorhis, E. C. Morrison, John Thompson and G. Lowe are interested.

The Cincinnati Money Market

There is no material change in the Cincinnati money market. The general tendency is easy, and indications point to further reductions in interest rates. The leading banks are well supplied with money, and country institutions report an accumulation of idle funds. Collateral loans are readily accepted at 3½ to 4 per cent on call. Discounting of prime paper is mainly at 5 to 6 per cent.

Secretary Rankin's Warning

A colored man, representing himself to be Geo. M. Brown, recently swindled a member of the Ohio Bankers Association in Southwestern Ohio, by the following method. He opened an account and deposited $15.00, giving for same a check (supposed to be a pay check) for $33.00 in his favor, drawn on the First National, Cincinnati, and signed C. H. Myers. The balance of $18.00, he took in cash. The same day he passed a check by this method on a Hardware Company in the same town. Brown claimed to be a painter and decorator. He is about 5 feet in height, very heavy, good looking, light in color, and well dressed. Keep an eye out for him.—S. B. Rankin, Secretary.

The Central Trust and Safe Deposit Company

The second oldest in the state is the Toledo Savings Bank & Trust Company, which was organized forty years ago.

Court of Appeals Decision

In the case of The National Safe Deposit, Savings & Trust Company vs. Hibbs decided by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, it appeared that the plaintiff company had in its possession certain certificates of stock indorsed in blank deposited with it by a customer as collateral security for a loan. It had among its employees one Myers, whose duties were to make entries in plaintiff's cashbook, act as note teller in the absence of that officer, and also to receive from one of the plaintiff's officers collateral securities to be delivered to customers on payment of the loans secured thereby.

It is a general mortgage of five and twenty-five years, 6 per cent gold bonds, and was signed up February 1, 1909. The mortgage is printed in pamphlet form, with all of the signatures written out. The document covers a total of 93 printed pages, and the fee for transferring it to the records was $28.55. Deputy Recorder Sproat expects to be real busy for several days to come. ### Banks Asked for Details as to Payment Methods

Washington, February 28.—Comptroller of the Currency Lawrence O. Murray in preparation for the investigation of modes of payment which he has been requested by the National Monetary Commission to make is sending out to banks the following letter:

"The National Monetary Commission, created by an act of Congress on May 30, 1908, is seeking information concerning the bank deposits and the proportion of payments made on average throughout the country from day to day by means of checks and similar instruments of credit. On several occasions in the past the Comptroller has made requests of this kind, but the last such inquiry was made thirteen years ago. It is desired on this occasion to obtain returns as complete and representative as possible and to get a response not only from the national banks but from state and private banking institutions of all kinds. Similar inquiries are being made for the monetary commission during the current year in England, France, Germany and other European countries for purposes of comparison with the practice in our own country. For this reason, and on account of the importance of the present investigation and of the purpose for which it is to be used it is earnestly requested that the recipients of the bank will give it their best attention and return it promptly to the Comptroller.

"Information is desired as to the number and classification of depositors, methods of paying wages, etc., as indicated in the questions relating thereto. The statistics asked for will be published only in a general summary, the figures for the individual banks being treated as confidential."

The blank accompanying the letter asks that the information requested be furnished so as to give the conditions existing at the close of business on March 16th and the letter and circular are being sent out not only to the national banks but also to state savings and small banks and to loan and trust companies.

During February permits issued amounted to 114,314 more than they did during the corresponding month of last year, and January showed a gain of $43,823 over January, 1908.

By J. IRVING COOPER

The contract for the erection of the new eleven-story building at the northeast corner of Arch and Twelfth streets for the Peoples Trust Company, of Philadelphia, has been awarded to W. W. Rea's Son, who will do the work upon a commission basis. Estimates are now being taken by the contractor for the steel and concrete work.

The building will measure 45 by 134 feet, and will have an exterior of terra cotta. The first floor will be occupied by the banking rooms and three stores. The upper floors will be finished for lofts. Sauer & Hahn are the architects. The trust company bought the property nearly a year ago through the firm which is now Herkness, Stetson & Cochran.

James K. Rice, Jr., & Co.

This firm is well known in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia Commercial Paper Market

The commercial paper market in Philadelphia is remarkable chiefly for the scarcity of the very best grades of notes, termed "gilt-edged," bankers and not brokers said. This has led to an apparent advance in rates, as the less-desirable names cannot be placed on as low terms, the bulk of the paper sold being at 4 to 4½ per cent at present. Whenever accommodations are wanted on gilt-edged names, however, there is no difficulty in securing them on a 3½ per cent basis, and a few institutions shade that figure.

Kentucky Court of Appeals Decision

The Kentucky Court of Appeals held, in the case of First National of Hazard, Ky., vs. Barger, that where a bank receives a general deposit from one who is indebted to it, it has the right to charge the depositor's account with such indebtedness, but that where a deposit is received with notice that it is for the purpose of meeting outstanding checks drawn by the depositor, it has no right to charge his account with sums due to it by him and thus defeat those holding outstanding claims from collecting their checks.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Benjamin Baer has been elected president of the American National to succeed Joseph Lockey, who has resigned on account of ill health. Mr. Baer has been vice-president for several years. Mr. Lockey was elected chairman of the board. C. J. Peoples, assistant national bank examiner in the district which includes the Twin Cities, Milwaukee and Chicago, has been elected vice-president of the bank. L. H. Ickler is cashier. The American National is capitalized at $200,000. It has surplus of $50,000. Deposits at the last statement were $1,468,873, a gain in a year of $218,726. A contemplated transfer of 1,000 shares of stock at 110 to convey the control of the bank to other interests did not materialize.

The Capital National

Walter F. Myers is to resign as vice-president of the Capital National, when the offices of first and second vice-presidents will be merged in W. B. Geery, the other vice-president. Mr. Myers has sold his stock to president J. R. Mitchell. Mr. Myers learned the banking business in Wall Street. He established a private bank at Wells, Minn., in 1893. He came to St. Paul in 1897 as vice-president of the bank which was later reorganized as the Capital National. At that time, in 1906, Mr. Myers was made vice-president. Mr. Myers is a patriotic citizen and belongs to the Sons of the Revolution and the Society of Colonial Wars in Minnesota. Mr. Myers may travel abroad before going into other business.

Joseph Chapman, Jr., Elected Chairman

Joseph Chapman, Jr., vice-president of the Northwestern National, has been elected chairman of the citizen's pure water committee of twenty-one in Minneapolis. H. F. Hawley, treasurer of the Farmers' & Mechanics' Savings bank, has been added to the commission, making three bankers in all. Strange to say Mr. Hawley has been elected to fill a vacancy in the commission due to the departure from the city of the representative of the bar association. Mr. Hawley is a lawyer.

Test to Come Off in Sixty Days

The Ely-Norris Safe Company of New York has challenged all makers of "so-called" round door solid manganese steel safes to a competitive test at St. Paul. Copies of the challenge have been sent to the Mosler Safe Company, the Victor Safe Company, the Diebold Safe and Lock Company, the National Safe & Lock Company, and all other manufacturers, in which it offers to open any safe from the competing manufacturers in one-third the time that they can open an Ely-Norris safe. The test is to be in sixty days and under the direction of a committee of St. Paul bankers.

Personal Mention

Frank Y. Locke, president of the Security Trust Company of St. Paul, has been in the East on business.

E. W. Decker, vice-president of the Northwestern National, will leave to-night with Mrs. Decker for St. Augustine, Florida, from which point they will make trips as fancy dictates. Mr. Decker will be away one month.

J. S. Pomeroy, cashier of the Security National, has gone to New York.

Legislative News

Senator A. L. Hanson, a Banker at Ada, Minn., has introduced another depositor protection law in the legislature. He divides the banks into the larger city class and the small city class. City banks will be allowed to take deposits up to eight times the capital and surplus. Country banks may accept ten times the capital and surplus. If any bank exceeds its limit a receiver must be appointed at once by the public examiner. City banks must pay a tax of one-fifth of 1 per cent on deposits and country banks one-tenth of 1 per cent. There must be kept 2 per cent of the country deposits in the state treasury as a protection fund and 1 per cent of the city bank deposits. An assessment on the banks will follow a decrease of the fund below the maximum amount. Receivers of defunct banks shall report to the examiner the amount necessary to pay depositors in full, and this sum is to be turned over at once. When assets are realized upon the amount it is to be restored to the treasury fund so far as possible.

All bank bills in the hands of legislative committees in Minnesota were discussed this week at a joint meeting of the senate and house committees. Representatives of the Minnesota Bankers association were present. The hearing was public and was well attended by Minneapolis and St. Paul bankers. Those who were present were warmly in favor of the bill creating a separate bank examination department for the state, and the V. L. Johnson bill making it an offense to obtain credit under false representations. The proposed gross earnings tax on banks to get away from local taxation, and the savings bank bills were discussed also.

Minneapolis Standing "Pat"

Just because Armour & Company are about ready to realize their intention, dating from four years ago, to build a packing plant in the neighborhood of the Twin Cities, with its office in Minneapolis, and its plant yards in Hennepin and Ramsey counties, the old antagonism between St. Paul and Minneapolis is aroused. St. Paul is making a bitter fight in the legislature for a bill which will prevent the plant being built on the site which Armour has bought, ostensibly for fear of odors. Minneapolis is standing pat. Even the bankers have taken interest in the revival of a controversy which was supposed to be dead. Says E. W. Decker, vice-president of the Northwestern National: "The younger class of business men of the two cities have been trying to forget the intense rivalry of recent years and were in favor of working hand in hand in the future, but the stand taken in the present fight will undoubtedly prolong indefinitely the same intense feeling of one city against the other."

"There is bound to be a clash between the 'private banker' members of the Michigan Bankers Association and the state and national bank members," said a Detroit banker this week.

"The members in general have long felt that some such legislation as is now proposed by the association, directed at the private bankers, was absolutely necessary. There are some private bankers, of course, who do not like the idea of being compelled to use the term 'private banker' on all of their stationery and advertisements, as there are some at present that are doing business in a manner that would tend to make the public believe they are regularly incorporated institutions. This is true of some of the smaller towns in the state."

"Will some of the private bankers withdraw from the association if the law is passed?" the banker was asked.

"Possibly, but I am of the opinion that it will have the effect of forcing some of them to organize under the state laws."

The private bankers will hold a conference in Detroit this week. Hal H. Smith, secretary and attorney for the association, will meet with them. About 25 are expected at the conference.

The First National of Detroit

The First National of Detroit has issued an excellently prepared booklet containing a detailed history of the institution from the day of its organization, June 26, 1863. It is superbly illustrated with half-tone pictures of the various homes the institution has had on Griswold Street, including exterior and interior pictures of its present magnificent quarters in the Ford building. It also contains the names of all its former directors and officers and thus forms a valuable little history of what is claimed to be the largest national bank and the largest commercial bank in Michigan.

Savings Deposits Increased $2,476,609

The increase in the savings deposits in Detroit state banks since September 23, 1908, has been $2,476,609.

Commercial deposits in these banks showed a total of $15,040,351.80 in July; $15,172,325.65 in September, $14,742,264.83 in November; and $14,976,856.98 in February.

Trust Company Acts as Receiver

The Detroit Trust Company, receiver in bankruptcy of the bankrupt National Supply

Co. of Lansing, has sold the effects of the company at public auction. The highest bid was $6,280 and it has been put up to the court for confirmation. The National Supply Co. dealt in farmers' supplies.

"Dead" Insurance Laws

Commissioner of Insurance Barry, with the assistance of the attorney-general, is preparing several repeal measures for the "dead" insurance laws which now exist.

The German-American Bank

Charles Donaldson, who for several years was receiving teller of the German-American Bank of Detroit, has been advanced to paying teller and Edward C. Bloss, formerly assistant paying teller is now receiving teller.

Young Woman Banker

Miss Iris Hancuff, aged 19, of Williamsburg, Pa., who is said to be the youngest woman assistant cashier in any national bank in the United States, accompanied by her father, V. H. Hancuff, arrived in Pittsburgh this week, and is stopping at the Seventh Avenue Hotel. Mr. Hancuff is a director of the First National of Williamsburg, of which his daughter is assistant cashier. Mr. Hancuff expects to spend several days in the city visiting large banks.

The Chatham Savings Bank

The stockholders of the Chatham Savings Bank of Chatham, Va., have elected E. S. Reid, for many years cashier, to the presidency. Frank Marshall, Jr., who has been assistant cashier for about sixteen years, was elected cashier, and E. S. Reid, Jr., assistant cashier. The officers and A. D. Bennett, J. I. Pritchett, H. C. Allen, and J. H. Whitehead compose the board of directors.

The Jackson Bank

Oscar Newton, Jr., has been elected president; T. McClelland, vice-president; A. M. Nelson, cashier, and M. S. Crafts, assistant cashier of the Jackson (Miss.) Bank.

New Banking Laws for Nebraska

One by one the Western states are brushing up their banking laws and even Illinois has symptoms of coming back to life on the subject. In Nebraska they have ten or twelve new bills up, all directed at some feature of the banking business. The provisions of the more important ones can be briefly told, and may afford ideas for those in other states, who are interested in all phases of banking law reform. One of the new ones is in favor of giving banks the right to give security for county deposits by putting up government or state bonds or bonds of counties, cities, villages or school districts, or real estate mortgages on farm lands, all subject to proper regulations. Securities may be exchanged. Surety Company bonds may still be used if desired. This bill provides another method of securing deposits where there are objections to giving personal or surety company bonds. Another bill contains the same point applied to state funds. A third provides for the same on county money, but has been amended by committee to provide that the securities so filed must be double the maximum deposit.

There still is another bill which provides that "when a deposit in any bank in this state is made in the name of two or more persons, deliverable or payable to either or to their survivor or survivors, such deposit or any part thereof, or increase thereof, may be delivered or paid to either of said persons or to the survivor or survivors in due course of business."

The trust companies are to have recognition also in a bill authorizing them and it is commonly spoken of as allowing commercial banking to be carried on in connection therewith, the part in question reading "corporations may be created under this act for any one or more of the following purposes and shall have power: to receive money in trust, and to accumulate the same at such rate of interest as may be obtained or agreed upon, or to allow such interest thereon as may be agreed; to receive upon deposit for safe keeping personal property of every description; to guarantee special deposits and to own and control safety vaults, and rent the boxes therein." Many Nebraska bankers are opposed to trust companies doing a commercial banking business.

One of the most interesting of the new bills is the bank slander bill and is without doubt desired as a law by nearly all bankers, most of whom have felt the need of it? It provides "for an act to prohibit the wilful and malicious circulation or transmission of any statement, rumor or suggestion written or printed, or by word of mouth, which directly or by inference may be derogatory to or affect the financial standing of any bank, banking institution, or trust company in this state or to induce another to circulate any such statements or rumors, and to provide penalties for the violation of this act," and is the bill advocated by the American Bankers Association.

The tax feature has not been forgotten and the new tax assessor bill provides among other things that "he shall examine the deposit records of every bank in his county and the books kept by the secretaries of all building and loan associations." Another bill provides that all promissory notes and bonds must be stamped by the tax assessor each year in April or May or they will not be received in evidence in any action at law. This clinches the first one.

Lest the Mighty Commoner of Lincoln might feel neglected they also have from the banking committee a bill for the guaranty of deposits. It creates a banking board with the governor as chairman and the auditor of public accounts and the attorney-general as the other members and gives it full control. A secretary with three years' actual banking experience is provided for. Examinations as often as deemed necessary by the board, and at least twice a year. A majority of the directors must be residents of the county or adjacent counties and each director must own at least one-twentieth of the capital stock of the bank. Loans shall never be more than eight times the capital. Not more than 4 per cent shall be paid on time deposits. An assessment of one per cent during the first year on the average deposits is contemplated, and after that one-twentieth of one per cent on the first of each January and the same on the first of each July. New banks pay in not less than one per cent of the capital in starting. Special assessments limited to two per cent in any one year. There are five or six others, most of which are merely amendatory. The Nebraska banker almost is afraid to sleep nights lest some new form of objectionable legislation should slip through unnoticed.

Healthier Credits and Business

We have had very little to say in the matter of the failure of the A. Booth & Co. firm. It was at first regarded as a "rub o' the green," but serious developments, following investigation, have led to criminal indictments. Bankers, practically alone, have fought this good fight for better credit statements and honest methods. Illinois laws are deficient and rarely it happens, if the falsifiers have had "good" legal advice, that they can be reached by law. When the question of whether or not to prosecute was a burning one among the losers, a letter of inquiry was addressed to B. Frank

Harris, a prominent banker at Champaign. His reply was prompt to the point, and had great influence in bringing the present state of affairs about. Mr. Harris, to the inquiry replied that "It occurs to me that while it may not be necessary, yet I should encourage, as all good men and bankers should, the thorough investigation of the criminal side of the Booth Company. From such facts as come to me, I cannot but feel satisfied that there are those in that concern who should be criminally prosecuted. Good bankers must be on the side of law. Officers of corporations or of firms that in a criminal way filch from the banks, the public, or their stockholders, should be made to suffer for it, not alone from a law enforcement point of view, but to get a healthier condition of credits and business management. The Heath and Milligan matter passed along and is almost forgotten. It, of course, was evidently not so bad a case, from a criminal standpoint, as the Booth case, which should result in a prosecution to make the matter memorable and act as a wholesome lesson. That we happened to have a small amount of Booth paper and that some of my friends had stock in the concern, have nothing to do with my opinion in this matter, yet I feel that the members of the Bankers Committee owe themselves, the fraternity, and the public in general, a duty in prosecuting every man in connection with the Booth concern, who is amenable to law."

Every right banker in Illinois will indorse Mr. Harris and feel glad that he and others had the courage to advocate at a time when it counted, the war measures now being handed out to the Polo Player and his accomplices.

The convention season is about to open. There will be a dozen conventions in the month of May alone. Many who are new to the business will be sent to these conventions by the banks which they represent, to visit their old customers and secure as many new ones as possible. To all of the beginners and a few of the older heads who never learned the art of getting business without injuring the competitor we give this advice. Remember that you can't saw wood with a hammer. No new-business agent ever secured an account by abusing or underrating a rival institution. Slurring a rival simply raises a doubt in the mind of a customer. He probably decides very quickly that he does not care to do business with such a person. Tell him what you can do, what your bank can do and stand on your statements. If you are not thoroughly convinced that your bank can handle his account to advantage, well and thoroughly, don't bid for it. If you are sure of it, talk on that assurance, and speak well of your competitor or speak not at all. Brag, bluff and the hammer do not belong in this business. Success

California Banking News

By WILLIAM J. HOLLISTER

The California Bankers Association will hold its 15th annual convention in Del Monte, commencing May 27th, and continuing for three days. San Francisco bankers predict that it will be the best attended and most interesting meeting in the history of the association, and the date was chosen because the two days following the last day of the convention are holidays. The convention is to close on Saturday, May 29th. Memorial day falls on Sunday, and the day will be observed on Monday, a legal holiday. This will afford officers and committees time to complete the work after the convention has adjourned and return to their homes without sacrificing any time. Bankers of California say that, in no time within their recollection, has so much interest to the banking business taken place as during the past two years. The crisis which necessitated the issuance of the clearing house certificates in 1907 was followed by a strenuous attempt on the part of the last National Congress to enact remedial measures. The months intervening have been replete with conferences and discussions by national and state legislators with the leading bankers of the country and a joint currency commission was sent abroad to study European banking methods. The Comptroller of the Currency, desiring a more rigid investigation of banks by the national examiner, recommends a grouping into districts, each district to be under a competent examiner, who shall report direct to the Comptroller. This is in line with the work of the joint legislative committee appointed by Governor Gillett and the legislative committee of the California Bankers Association, which drafted the new banking act, providing for a superintendent of banks, who shall be a capable and experienced banker, and be held responsible for the proper examination of banks within his jurisdiction. In harmony with this move is the formation of the State Clearing House Association for the purpose of bringing all California banks under a uniform system of examination, in conformity with the changes in national legislation and state bank control.

Money to be Used for Benefit of Depositors

E. L. Webber of Napa, attorney for H. D. Brown, president of the wrecked Bank of Calistoga, announces that he has paid Receiver S. L. Johnson of the bank $7,500. The money was received from the sale of property near Calistoga which was owned by Brown. Brown is in the East at present. A special grand jury of Napa County, called by the district attorney, is investigating. Steps to close the bank will be taken. Brown conveyed a large part of his property to Webber several weeks ago. The money just received by Receiver Johnson will be used for the benefit of the depositors. It is believed that the wrecking of the bank was due to gross mismanagement of the concern by some persons.

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the Associated Chapters A. I. of B. in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Independent Action and Universal Membership

Los Angeles Chapter Senate

The very latest thing in the activities of the Los Angeles Chapter, and something entirely new in its history, is the organization of a senate for drill in parliamentary law and practice in debate. This project promises to be the keenest thing in the way of a "live wire" that ever struck the chapter, and the fellows are going to it like a bunch of mice after a piece of cheese, over fifty men having signed us as charter members.

The idea originated with N. M. Converse, of the National Bank of California, one of our hustlers, and a future legal light. Mr. Converse drew up the constitution and by-laws, and under his able direction the plans were whipped into shape and the undertaking launched at the regular meeting of the chapter on January 21, 1909.

The meetings of the senate of Los Angeles Chapter, for such it is called, will be held every two weeks, and will not conflict with the regular meetings of the chapter. There will be a spectator's gallery for those who do not belong to the senate, but it will be a lonesome place for a bank clerk, because all his friends will be down taking part in the game.

The senate will be as far as possible an exact duplicate of the body of the same name in Washington, D. C., the committee system being worked out thoroughly, so that every member will be serving on some committee. There will be a senior and junior senator from every state in the Union, each member, if possible, representing his own state. All political parties will be represented, republicans and democrats predominating, with a few socialists thrown in to add spice; the whole to be diluted with prohibitionists.

At each meeting twenty minutes will be devoted to rapid-fire drill in parliamentary practice before the senate proper convenes. Many bills will be introduced and acted upon, thus leading to the discussion of all the live questions of the day. Charter amendments, bond issues, the re-call, free harbor, civic improvements, etc., will take care of local conditions, while questions of national interest, such as the tariff, trusts, labor problems, national resources, postal savings banks, currency reform, and others will be settled with neatness and dispatch. Thus will the members not only keep abreast of the times, but will attain that most excellent thing, the ability to stand on their feet and think and talk, all at the same time.

Call any body of young men together to-day and lay before them a question for debate, and a silence as of the grave falls over the assembly, reminding one very strongly of a convention of clams presided over by an oyster, the noise is so similar. True, some half dozen may arise and say their say, but at the next meeting it is always the same fellows who must do all the speaking, while the vast majority show themselves experts in making the big silence. Many men, not famous as linguists, can be silent in thirteen languages and three dialects without turning a hair, and many a chairman has been tangled up worse than a cat on fly-paper.

To correct such conditions is the object of the senate. We do not claim that it will give sight to the blind, nor hearing to the deaf, but it will surely restore speech to the speechless, and give a tongue to those who have been dumb for lo, these many years.

A student of affairs at Washington recently said that six men ruled the senate: Aldrich, Hale, Elkins, Cullom, Gallinger, and Foraker. We sincerely hope that no such condition of affairs will obtain in the Los Angeles senate, and that no magazines will have in their pages in the future any articles headed "The Shame of the Senate" as applied to the one in our midst.

However that may be, if you want to see something doing, if you want a chance to observe action, just come out some evening and watch the senate at work. And then get to work yourself.—The Chaptergraph.

Detroit Chapter Meeting

Henry S. Hulbert, of the Wayne County Probate Court, spoke Friday night before the Detroit Chapter on "Wills and Legacies." Mr. Hulbert addressed the chapter last year. Mr. Hulbert is always ready for a "quiz." The boys regard Mr. Hulbert's speeches as real educational treats.

The Bank Clerk

BY H. C. HURST.

The bank clerk is a happy hunch,
He works from ten to three;
He gets an hour and a half for lunch—
Now that sounds good to me.

In state he stands behind the scenes,
Mid stacks of gold immense;
But often the money in his jeans
Makes a noise like thirty cents.

Ledgers and journals are his best friends,
The adding machine is a chum,
And he finds it best for his private ends
To hustle and make it hum.

Although his hair may grow quite gray,
And his form become quite bent,
He knows some day, if he pegs away,
He'll be the president.

Year after year finds him on deck,
To shuffle out the tin;
But when old Death presents his check
He promptly cashes in.

And when he comes to heaven's gate
And wants to get inside,
Saint Peter says: "You'll have to wait,
You're not identified."

Spokane Chapter Meeting

The Spokane Chapter of the American Institute of Banking at its last meeting gave the following program: Chalk talk on "Bank Statements and Blotter Sheet," by Charles M. Culp, certified public accountant with E. G. Shorrock & Co.; vocal solo by Morton McCartney, which was followed by a discussion on the Parcel Post System, by E. W. Everson.

"Dry Rot"

Will somebody please point out to us why our chapter meetings have shown such a falling off in attendance lately? There seems to be an impression among the members that the chapter is only a "hobby" of its officers who derive a great deal of fun and recreation out of the continuous work and trouble they undergo to arrange these meetings and entertainments.

Do you not realize that the chapter was organized, exists now, and will always be for you and you only?

You may think this is pretty strong talk, but let us stop a minute and reason this out.

Organized for you.

There is no doubt about that, is there?

Officers elected by you.

Election day proves that beyond a doubt.

Monthly meetings arranged for your benefit.

Because the governors have their own little meetings, which last sometimes a great deal longer than yours and they work for you. (Don't let me say, "while you sleep.")

The speakers and instructors at these meetings know what they are talking about, but they come there to tell you about it. They are learned men in their respective professions and spend their evenings with us for your benefit.

We have a great deal to learn.

You may write a volume on things you know, but a whole library on things you don't know.

Knowledge is a very light but profitable burden. But what you don't know will count heavily against you some day.

This is not idle talk, and in your own heart you will agree with me.

Who gets the Bulletin every month, full of instructive reading matter? You.

Who pays his dues, $3 per year to the chapter? You.

It is a pretty poor business man, who does not take all he can get for his money. Just ask any one of our prominent business men, they will tell you.

May be because it is so cheap that you are afraid to be buncoed.

Just try the next meeting. Your fellow clerks want to meet you, and get acquainted with you.

Don't tell me that you do not care for that, because you know better. Among three hundred good men you certainly will find a few congenial ones to mingle with.

Our meetings are well regulated. Some educational features and some good clean fun, some music and something to satisfy the cravings of an empty stomach. There is no meeting but what you can gain by it.

Did you ever stop to think what a glorious and satisfying feeling creeps all over your system, when you answer a difficult question which no one else in your bank can answer?

The next time they will come direct to you to ask another question. May be you can answer that one. Then they come again. Then your superior officers will ask you about something. May be you know all about that too.

Here is your opportunity. The next vacancy will be filled with a man who is well posted on everything, that is you again.

Every chapter meeting you attend will bring you nearer to the coveted place because you get "well posted."

Now you may be able to understand what I mean with my caption "Dry Rot."

The man who does not want to learn, or use his natural ability and brains to help himself and improve his position in life when he has the chance and opportunity to do so, will easily be overcome and out-distanced by his competitors. His shortcomings are a result of that disease "Dry Rot." Are you infected?

Now if you know why our meetings are not better patronized come out with it in this magazine. If the governors do not provide the proper features, say so; if you know of an improvement, tell us. But don't sit down and die of "dry rot."

Or if you think my arguments are not strong enough, produce something better.

But do something.

Yours sincerely,

Los Angeles Chapter Meeting

J. W. Wilson, clearing house examiner, addressed the Los Angeles Chapter recently on the subject of "Bank Examinations," and as a preface to his remarks spoke of the earlier times when the methods pursued by the examiners were, to say the least, extremely careless, and in some instances not even bearing the semblance of being examinations. He spoke of how the government, as the country developed, kept abreast of the times, and how each succeeding Comptroller of the Currency strove toward a higher standard of bank examinations. He told of the famous "twenty-nine" questions which Comptroller Murray has propounded to the directors of the various banks and said that the object of these questions to his mind was simply to impress upon the mind of the man who was made a director, that it meant something for him to be on a directorate and that he was not supposed to be a figure head.

He then spoke of the work being done in Chicago, Minneapolis, San Francisco, and Los Angeles in the clearing house examination idea and what a great thing it was for the affiliated banks to have the advantage of such an arrangement. The country clearing house idea was also touched upon and the advantages that would accrue to the banks who were members of it.

He mentioned the new state banking law which was passed by the assembly on February 18th, and said it was the finest state banking law there was in the United States, and that Los Angeles ought to be proud of the fact that the law as it stands was written entirely by a Los Angeles banker, Mr. Sartori, of the Security Savings Bank.

It would seem that judging from what the clearing house examination idea has done in the cities that have tried it, it would be worth the while of all banking communities that have a clearing house to look into the matter with the determination of adopting it. It has developed no draw backs and its advantages are becoming more apparent every day it is in use.

American National's Financial Letter for February

The American National of San Francisco in its February 25th financial letter says in part:

Twenty-seven rainy days in January and twenty so far in February have provided abundantly for the coming crops, but the dampness has not been helpful to present business. People who might otherwise have bought many things have preferred to stay indoors and avoid the mud, and there has been a good deal of enforced idleness among workmen, with consequent curtailment of spending power.

Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the bank clearings in San Francisco have uniformly exceeded those of the same period in 1908, and the occasional days of fair weather show how trade will be stimulated when it gets a fair chance. There is no good reason why it should not go ahead. Lively business in the bright holidays cleaned up merchandise fairly well, there is little overstocking, liabilities have been reduced to even less than normal levels, and the steady march from Van Ness Avenue "down town" is putting merchants in a position to carry full lines without the exaction of a ruinous rate of fire insurance.

In the export trade there has been marked activity. For example, the foreign shipments of refined petroleum from this port in January were 8,238,313 gallons, as against 3,507,389 in January last year; of crude oil, 3,990,000 gallons as compared with 3,654 a year ago. Dried fruit shipments by sea in January were 2,676,000 pounds, against 2,543,291 last year. Wine was also more active, the January shipments by sea being 876,334 gallons and 310 cases, against 465,497 gallons and 277 cases last year. Reports from the San Joaquin Valley indicate that the raisin situation is adjusting itself, and the grape industry ought to be in much better condition this year than last.

The sale of $5,400,000 worth of city five per cent bonds at a premium of 12 1/3 per cent is a substantial recognition of San Francisco's secure credit. At the price paid by N. W. Hasley & Co., the bonds will yield 4.05 per cent interest, and the underwriters are finding no difficulty in placing them with investors at a 3.90 interest basis.

The Comptroller's call for a statement of condition February 5th found our national banks practically as they were three months ago, with the exception of one million dollars United States deposits withdrawn to pay current expenses of the government.

The government, by the way, continues to be a liberal old spender, despite its reduced income. During the past nineteen months expenditures have outrun receipts to the extent of 143 millions of dollars, while the national lawmakers have worked overtime trying to point out how banks and other corporations should conduct their business. The Treasury deficit is now $85,000,000, and is increasing at the rate of seven millions a month. As the disposition of Congress is to contrive new extravagances rather than to curtail those existing, there is little likelihood that any marked reductions in the tariff will be made at the forthcoming session of Congress. Instead of that, there is talk of increasing revenues by restoring the taxation of the Spanish War period, requiring yellow trading stamps on promissory notes, bank drafts, stock certificates, etc. It is either that or borrow money by the issue of bonds. The simpler method of curbing the deficit by checking wasteful and reckless expenditure seems to meet with no favor.

During the early part of the month, California received a flattering amount of attention, and a deal of most unflattering comment, from Washington and other centers of wisdom, because of certain proposed measures pertaining to our relations with Asiatics. The legislation was possibly ill-timed, and was very properly defeated, but not before it had tapped a vast reservoir of misinformation concerning the motives and desires of California.

West of the Rocky Mountains, the possibility of war was not discussed. But on the Eastern seaboard the clouds of danger were thick, and very black. It seems a little remarkable, in view of the loud cries of warning that emanate from the East whenever the name of Japan is mentioned in California, that the Pacific Coast and our insular possessions should be left but half-guarded, while the globe-trotting battleships of the United States settle down once more in their peaceful resting place by the shores of the Atlantic.

If the peace of the world is disturbed in the next decade, it will not be on the Atlantic, surrounded by nations whose difficulties have long since been fought out and adjusted, but on the Pacific, where new and untried relations are being formed, and new questions, affecting the United States, are continually rising for settlement.

The California incident was not without value if it serves to make clear and emphatic the attitude of the Pacific States toward the immigration of Orientals. It should be clearly understood that the opposition is not that of a few labor agitators and demagogues, but is universal, and has its origin in a racial and world-old antipathy to the influx of peoples who will not and cannot by any possibility be assimilated into our social order. Industrially we need the Chinese and the Japs and—yes, even the Hindoos—but far more we need to keep the Pacific West free of a new race problem. And if the development of our resources must wait a generation or so for lack of workers, why, let it wait.

The bank of England has at last succeeded in stopping the outflow of gold, and is now quietly accumulating a reserve. Consequently sterling exchange has been quiet, influenced principally by the movements of the New York stock market and moving in exactly the opposite way; that is rising when stocks declined and falling when stocks rose.

Continental exchanges weakened considerably, showing the bidding for gold in the world's market has stopped for the present. The Bank of Germany has reduced its rate of discount to  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent and is now for the first time in a long while only  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent above the French and English rates.

The long-expected Russian loan has now passed into history. The portion of $240,000,000 allotted to Paris was oversubscribed thirty times, and as the terms of subscription called for a deposit of twenty per cent, this meant a movement of funds of not less than $1,440,000,000. It is said the underwriters obtained the handsome commission of three per cent.

Eastern exchange as usual in February has reached the top notch, and large amounts in gold have been shipped to New York.

Silver and Oriental exchanges have been rather quiet, with ups and downs, which is customary after Chinese New Year.

P. J. Maloney

Peter J. Maloney, who has been one of Finley Barrell & Company's representatives in the wheat pit on the Chicago Board of Trade since 1899, has been admitted to the firm.

Mr. Maloney has purchased a seat on the New York Stock Exchange, and will give their business on the floor of that Exchange his personal attention.

This arrangement will greatly facilitate their service and the execution of orders on the New York Stock Exchange.

On March 1st their crop experts, George M. Le Count and R. W. Kinyon, have taken the field, and will cover the entire winter wheat country, reporting by wire daily, conditions as they observe them.

As the growing wheat and its probable outcome is the key to the price situation for the coming year, they will leave nothing undone to present truthfully the real conditions as they develop in the winter wheat belt.

The Bankers Trust Company

The Bankers Trust Company of Oklahoma City contemplates erecting a new bank building.

Mobile May 11th and 12th

Secretary McLane Tilton, Jr., of the Alabama Bankers Association, is sending out the following important bulletin:

Please take notice that our convention will be held at Mobile, Alabama, May 11th and 12th, and not on 14th and 15th, as was first announced. This change was necessitated to prevent conflict with other meetings at Mobile and elsewhere and at request of the Mobile Clearing House.

Headquarters will be at the New Battle House, Mobile's million dollar hotel, and first day's session will be held in its auditorium. Make your reservation early.

Second day's sessions will be held at sea on special chartered steamer, stopping for lunch at Port Clear or Fort Morgan.

A very interesting program is being prepared, attractive souvenirs will be distributed, which, with a pleasant series of entertainments in Mobile, promise to make this meeting, the best in the history of the association.

Immediately after adjournment May 12th, the association will proceed to New Orleans by special train, as the guests of the Clearing House of that city. A tri-state convention of the Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama Bankers Associations will be held May 13th and 14th. This outing is a new departure in connection with our conventions and if it turns out to be as successful as hoped for, we will follow the lead of many other associations and arrange some similar trip each year.

In order to provide adequate and comfortable transportation, as well as to comply with request of our New Orleans hosts, it will be necessary to know at once about how many of our members will make the trip to the Crescent City. The run is only about three hours from Mobile and members can return home as may suit their convenience, so this office will be obliged, if you will use the enclosed card to give us the information desired. The expense will be small, the time consumed very little, and it is safe to say that the returns will make all of us glad that we visited two of the most interesting cities in America and participated in the first tri-state convention of bankers ever held.

The San Francisco Savings Union

The San Francisco Savings Union has made several important changes in the personnel of its officers. At the meeting of the directors of the bank, the resignation of E. B. Pond, identified with the bank for the past 15 years as director and president, was accepted, as he wants to retire from active business and go abroad. Lovell White, cashier of the bank for the past 40 years, was chosen president to fill the vacancy. John S. Drum, who has relinquished the practice of the law, was elected vice-president, and will be associated in the active management of the bank with vice-president C. O. G. Miller. Assistant Cashier R. M. Welch was promoted to the position of cashier and secretary. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro have been appointed attorneys. The plans for the new bank building to be erected at Grant Av. and O'Farrell Street are completed, and the bank is expected to occupy its new quarters within 14 months.

Pacific Coast Bank Deposits

Personal deposits in all the banks of the Pacific Coast States have increased by $480,000,000 in eight fiscal years, an average increase of $60,000,000 a year, or $5,000,000 a month, as follows: 1900, $359,203,000; 1904, $562,057,742; 1906, $797,455,561; 1907, $868,423,765; 1908, $839,738,555. Trust companies are not permitted to come under the provision of the law. New banks must wait a year before being permitted to become guarantee banks, and savings deposits are protected when not in excess of $100 for each individual depositor.

Partial arrangements have been made for the pleasure trip of the Texas bankers which is to take place in July. The itinerary has been announced by Colonel S. H. Kendig, traveling passenger agent of the Santa Fe, who has just returned from Fort Worth and Brownwood, where the arrangements for the trip were completed.

The bankers will concentrate at Fort Worth for the next annual tour. Tickets will be on sale from all parts of the state, but Fort Worth will be the concentration point. Leaving that city over the Santa Fe, the party will proceed to Los Angeles. The Southern Pacific will carry them from Los Angeles to San Francisco and then to Portland, where the Northern Pacific will furnish the transportation to Seattle and Victoria, B. C. Returning from Victoria, the party will visit Spokane, Butte, Livingston and Colorado Springs. During the trip, at convenient times, side trips will be taken to the grand canyon of the Colorado in Arizona, to the Yosemite valley, the big trees, Catalina island and Yellowstone park.

The special train carrying the party will leave Fort Worth on July 2d, and the bankers will probably arrive back in the state about July 24th.

The annual meeting of the Texas Bankers Association will be held in Houston, May 11th and 12th and the pleasure trip follows in the summer time according to the usual custom.

Commerce Men Visit the Comptroller

Dr. W. S. Woods, chairman of the board of directors; J. T. Bradley, cashier, and Elijah Robinson, attorney of the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, had an hour's conference this week with Lawrence O. Murray, comptroller of the currency. They refused to give any information regarding the subjects they discussed with the comptroller. They will go to New York before returning to Kansas City.

The Angelina County National

At a meeting of the stockholders and directors of the Angelina County National of Lufkin, Tex., held last Saturday, it was decided that unless the legislature should pass a bank guaranty law that the bank will continue as a national, instead of being changed to a state bank, as was announced some time ago.

A motion was made, and prevailed, to increase the capital stock of the bank from $25,000 to $50,000, and to include a $20,000 surplus, which the bank now has, and the $2,000 which in all probability will be the amount of undivided profits earned this month.

It was decided also to authorize each of the original stockholders to add to their stock a sufficient amount to make the book value of their stock worth two for one, and to have additional stock issued to them; so as to double their stock holdings.

A resolution was also passed authorizing an additional amount of $10,000 to be added to the capital stock of the bank, and to be sold to those who had subscribed for stock at par value, which will make an aggregate of $60,000 capital stock.

The increase in the capital stock and the change from a $25,000 to a $60,000 capital stock bank will come into effect this month.

St. Louis Money Market

Some of the St. Louis banking institutions take the position that while they are disposed to lend freely on demand they do not care to commit themselves on the present low basis for quotations. Beyond the four months' period, deposits are holding up well, but they are not increasing at the rate of about two weeks ago. Demand for accommodations has not increased to any material extent.

Jackson County Banks

The banks of Jackson county, outside of Kansas City, now have approximately 2¼ million dollars on deposit. There are sixteen of these banks, of which four are in Independence and three in Lee's Summit, while Blue Springs and Oak Grove have two apiece. Other smaller places in the county have one each. The aggregate capital stock is $576,000; the aggregate deposits $2,243,318, and the total amount of loans $1,951,578.

Kansas City Building

The cost of buildings for which permits were issued for the month of February in Kansas City was $839,525. This is a gain of $308,460 over February, 1908.

Treasurer Submits Report

At the close of business Saturday Treasurer James Cowgill of Missouri submitted his report to the governor showing the condition of the treasury and its transactions for the month of February. January 31st there was a balance in the treasury of $2,716,147.71. The receipts in February were $570,411.99 and the disbursements $7,620.65, leaving a balance on hand at the close of business Saturday of $3,278,930.05.

The Rockdale State Bank

The Rockdale (Tex.) State Bank has elected the following officers: I. P. Sessions, president; S. G. Hodge, vice-president; H. C. Meyer, B. Loewenstein, J. W. Garner and Dr. R. W. Wallis, directors.

The Oklahoma State Bank

The Oklahoma State Bank, of Atoka, Okla., with a capital of $25,000, has been organized. J. D. Langford, P. A. Roberts, O. L. Dulaney, P. Watson, John Wylie, J. W. Phillips and others are promoters.

Bucket Shop Bill Safe

Frank J. Merrill of Paola, Kan., who introduced the anti-bucket shop bill in the Kansas legislature, was in Kansas City last week. He was graduated in the law department of the University of Kansas two years ago and this is his first experience in Kansas politics.

"The anti-bucket shop bill will pass both branches of the legislature, without a doubt," Mr. Merrill said at the Hotel Baltimore. "I hope the Kansas legislature will keep faithfully the pledges made to the people in the Republican platform last fall," he said, with a strong emphasis on the "hope." There appeared to be some doubt in his mind, but he didn't care to give expression to it.

The Faxon State Bank

The Faxon (Okla.) State Bank with a capital of $5,000 has filed articles of incorporation. The promoters are J. Whatley of Chickasha, F. E. Benson, O. Rhodes and H. P. Galyon.

Last Days of Kansas Legislature

According to the present plans, the Kansas legislature will stop the consideration of bills and messages from either branch Saturday night at 6 o'clock. The final adjournment will be March 8th. The consideration of original house and senate bills will stop and appropriation bills will be considered until Saturday evening. Thursday evening at 9 o'clock the house committee on state affairs reported out the resolution fixing these dates for the final consideration of bills and the final adjournment.

Oklahoma State Banks

By a straight party vote and against the recommendations of the state bankers of Oklahoma, Oklahoma's house of representatives Friday passed the Roddy bill to withdraw 75 per cent of the guaranty fund from the state guaranty deposit banks and invest it in state securities, bonds and warrants. The remaining 25 per cent is to be left in cash to be deposited at the discretion of the state's bank

New York Banking and News Letter

By J. R. MORGAN

The preamble and resolutions prepared by the bill of lading committee representing the American Bankers Association and various commercial organizations with the purpose that they be adopted by all interested associations, has been considered at a special meeting of the New York Mercantile Exchange. The draft proposed is as follows:

Whereas, It is a frequent practice for the agents of railroads in different parts of the country to issue bills of lading to shippers before the goods are received, under which practice such shippers are enabled to raise money on such bills as collateral and thereafter purchase and deliver to the railroads the goods called for by the bill of lading, from which practice it not infrequently results that the goods are never delivered and that the railroads deny liability therefor to those who pay drafts on the faith of such false bills; and,

Whereas, It is also the practice for bills of lading to be filled out with lead pencil, as a result of which such bills are often raised to larger amounts, and,

Whereas, The frequency of losses sustained through bills of lading signed by the agents of the transportation companies and common carriers, and afterwards repudiated by such transportation companies on the plea that such transportation companies and common carriers only authorized their agents to receipt for goods, be they merchandise or produce, when actually received, is becoming alarming and the necessity for the protection and safeguarding of interests is a matter of immediate action, therefore, be it,

Resolved, That the members of the New York Mercantile Exchange in meeting assembled agree by a majority vote that they will on and after May 1, 1909, decline to pay or to accept any drafts against either "order" or "straight" bills of lading unless such bills of lading meet the following requirements:

1. Every bill of lading must, in addition to the signature, bear also the official stamp of the authorized issuing agent, such stamp giving date of his signature.

2. All the writing on said bill of lading must

New Stock Brokerage Firm

George I. Landon, of the New York Stock Exchange, retired from business March 1st and the newly formed firm of Cameron, Hale & Co. was his successors. This firm consists of Alexander Cameron, Jr., Eugene Hale, Jr., Norman T. Reynolds and Charles Hitchcock, Jr., who will represent the firm on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange. The firm will transact a general commission business in stocks and bonds with offices at No. 20 Broad Street.

Commercial Paper

Sales of commercial paper this week were not so heavy as formerly, due in part to the heavy recall of Treasury funds. The supply, however, is so light that everything of attractive quality can be readily placed on terms advantageous to drawers.

The National Reserve Bank

The Consolidated National, uniting its assets with the resources of the Oriental Bank, started out on a broader basis under the title of the National Reserve Bank of the City of New York, on March 1st. The new bank began business with $1,200,000 capital and $600,000 surplus. William O. Allison is president, R. W. Jones, Jr., and Thomas J. Lewis, vice-presidents, and Erskine Hewitt, chairman of the board of directors. The Consolidated National, of which Messrs. Allison and Lewis were respectively president and vice-president, removes to the office formerly occupied by the Oriental Bank, at Broadway and John Street, remaining in that location until the new quarters of the National Reserve Bank are ready. These quarters are to be in the City Investing Building, one of the most strikingly modern of New York's recent business structures, at 165 Broadway.

W. E. Edmister Elected President

Willard E. Edmister has been elected president of the Hamilton Trust Company, of Brooklyn, to succeed the late Silas B. Dutcher, at a special meeting of the board of trustees. Mr. Edmister has been a trustee of the Hamilton Trust and quite active in the management of the concern for several years. He was the partner of Mr. Dutcher in the insurance business in Manhattan for about 25 years prior to the latter's death. Mr. Edmister is a director of the Metropolitan Bank, trustee of the Union Dime Savings Bank and a member of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

Proposed Amendment to Banking Law

An amendment to the banking law which has been introduced by Assemblyman Weber requires the trustees of every savings bank to establish equal quarter yearly periods to compute and credit the amount of dividends or interest due depositors. All deposits are to be credited with dividends or interest from the commencement of the period following the date of such deposits and withdrawals are not to lose interest for a longer period than from the last day of the quarter yearly period last past to the date of withdrawal.

New York Money Market

Bankers have difficulty in putting out all their surplus funds on stock loans. Short maturities are not wanted, as day-to-day money is available on easy terms, while the confidence that rates will remain low during the greater part of the current year is causing borrowers to refrain from making extensive long-term commitments even at 3 per cent, the figure now ruling for five and six months' funds. A few one-year loans have been made at 3½ to 4 per cent. The range is as follows: 2½ to 2¾ per cent for sixty days, 2¾ to 3 per cent for ninety days, 3 to 3¼ per cent for five and six months and 3½ to 4 per cent for one year.

Government Bonds and National Banks

Frank A. Vanderlip, of the National City Bank, discussed "Government Bonds and the National Banks" before the banking and investment class of the West Side Y. M. C. A., 320 West Fifty-seventh Street, recently.

United States Mortgage and Trust Company

The United States Mortgage & Trust Co., New York City, has assumed control of the National Safe Deposit Co., whose offices are at No. 32 Liberty Street. The vaults of the Safe Deposit Co. immediately adjoin the offices of the Trust Company, and as the latter already controls safe deposit facilities in connection with its branch offices at 73d and 125th Streets, it is now able to afford the same advantages at the home office. The National Safe Deposit Co. has been in operation for the past fourteen years and has modern, well constructed safe deposit vaults and boxes located on the street floor, No. 32 Liberty Street, and easy of access from the Cedar, Nassau or Liberty Street entrances of the Mutual Life Building.

Trust Companies' New Plan

This week the trust companies began offering special inducements for "thirty-one day deposit accounts." Such deposits, represented by certificates, free the companies from all reserve requirements, since the 15 per cent provision applies only to deposits payable on demand or within thirty days. On thirty-one day accounts the trust companies offered a 3 per cent flat rate.

J. W. Castles Back at Desk

John W. Castles, president of the Union Trust Co., has returned to his desk, after a brief absence.

Elected a Director of Mutual Alliance Trust

Frederick H. Pouch, president of the American Dock & Trust Co., has been elected a director of the Mutual Alliance Trust Co. of New York.

Argentine Bonds Offered

The official circular of the $48,650,000 Argentine Government 5 per cent internal gold loan of 1909 has just been issued. The offering in this country aggregates $9,730,000 and J. P. Morgan & Co., First National and the National City Bank are prepared to receive subscriptions at 99.

"Double A" Crane of Minneapolis

"Double A" Crane is what the Philadelphia papers call A. A. Crane, vice-president of the Northwestern National. The Philadelphia Bulletin photographer happened to get a glimpse of Mr. Crane entering a bank, and thinking it was the new president of the United States photographed him. After discovery of the mistake the Bulletin made good with a half-column interview in which Mr. Crane was compelled to tell his age, weight, height, etc., and how many times he had been taken for Taft. Mr. Crane decided to stay away from the inauguration at Washington to avoid complications.

New Bank and Land Project

A company of Eastern men will establish a bank at the town of Creswell, on the Southern Pacific main line, 12 miles south of Eugene, Ore., at once, and will also purchase 5,000 acres of land in the vicinity of that place, most of which will be cut up into tracts of five and ten acres each and sold to homeseekers from the East. The company will set 800 acres of the tract to apples and cherries, and the small tracts are also intended for fruitraising. The name of the banking institution to be established is the Creswell Fruit Growers Bank, and the capital stock is $10,000. The directors are: A. C. Bohnstedt, F. A. Richardson, E. S. Darling, T. R. Sloan, George Pirie, L. D. Scarbrough, B. F. Martin, F. W. Ogram and George L. Gilfrey.

The True Province of Government

By John Schuette

I see my brother banker, Andrew Frame, who deluded himself in the belief that the temporary lull in the discussion of Deposit Insurance by B. ended the matter, and gave him peace, is again aroused and sees danger from another quarter.

He appears in the Sentinel in battle array, trying to stem the advancing army of Postal Savings Banks, 40,000 strong.

Ten years ago and often since he heard me predict that this would be the final solution, unless we bankers forestall their advance by insuring our depositors. Had he believed me then, he would not be aroused now.

He has just fired his first broadside at Congress, but by it he has hurt himself more than those he intended it should affect.

In trying to prove that postal savings banks, (as he tried in reference to deposit insurance by banks), are tyrannical, socialistic, and not within the true province of government, he quotes that part of the constitution, which reads:

"To insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and happiness of our people." Now let me remind him that by this argument he gives his case away completely.

This declaration is the very one on which deposit insurance by the banks, or by the government, can and should be founded, because the uncertainty of the safety of deposits in banks in undermining the tranquillity, welfare and happiness of our people more than anything else.

Then he quotes Jefferson as saying; "Agriculture, manufacturing, commerce and navigation are the four pillars of prosperity, and should be left free to individual enterprise." What has this to do with postal savings banks? As Jefferson does not include banking, we may infer that he intended that these should not be left free to act, as other industries, but under government regulation.

He argues further that good laws and regulations will reduce the losses to depositors in failed banks to a minimum, and therefore depositors need no guaranty on their deposits.

Just because of this infinitesimal loss are we more easily enabled to extinguish the little panic spark by which our enormous devastating conflagrations are kindled.

By the failure of but a few banks in 1907, the whole country was thrown into a panic by which, as one ex-president of the American Bankers' Association estimates, the country sustained a loss of over two thousand million dollars, owing to loss of confidence which paralyzed every branch of industry. Now mark, the direct loss to depositors in failed national banks was less than one million dollars, consequently, by safeguarding the depositors at the cost of only one million dollars we could have saved the indirect loss of two thousand million dollars, besides the nervous shock and worry to a whole nation.

The promise of better laws, and enforcement thereof, will never prevent bank panics, for it is an impossibility to so control the 26,000 banks that no bank can fail, and as no one can tell which may fail, the people will not feel safe.

It is about the same as lightning; while it strikes but one in a million, many thousands get a nervous shock every time they hear and see a flash; while we cannot insure ourselves against this, we can against the panic flashes. Another proof that better laws will not pacify the people.

Would the people of a city feel safe where they carried no insurance on their buildings, because the city officials promised strict ordinances, regulations and enforcement, and each individual would be continually on guard to prevent fire? Not much; they will feel a continued unrest, and when only one house out of a thousand is on fire, they would like to put their houses into a safety box, if that could be done; and if there are added a few more fires, they will get into a panic. This would be the kind of confidence depositors would have in promises of better regulations of banks.

If the people were given an opportunity to vote separately on the insuring of deposits, not only would the depositors nearly unanimously vote in favor of it, but also all others who sustain the greater loss resulting from bank failures.

This had been recognized by our politicians and legislators, but the strong prejudice against Bryan who fostered the plan, and the influential selfish bankers who condemned it has so far influenced Congress to hesitate in enacting a general deposit insurance act, and to go slow, and try first to protect only the poorer class by guaranteeing their deposits in Postal Savings Banks.

I could not unselfishly oppose this, were it not that it will only protect a small number, and not prevent panics, while something far better can be attained by which one and all can be protected and panics prevented.

I am as much opposed to paternalism as any one; I believe in the maxim "that the government should not do what can be done as well by its citizens." But when there is a great disturbing element in our banking system which the bankers can easily remedy and fail to do so, and when even the most influential oppose remedial measures offered, then they have no reason to complain if the government steps in and performs its duties as prescribed by the constitution, which declares that it will protect and promote the general welfare of its people.

What's the Truth About Sixes vs. Fours?

Many an automobile owner and prospective buyer asks this question, and here is the best answer we can give:

Theoretically the six so far outshines the four that the four hardly casts a shadow.

"Four" makers do not advertise the superiority of the four—they wait until their salesmen reach you personally, and then they say that the six is great in theory, "but—."

That "but—" is meant to get you to buy a four. Its true import is, that most of the makers who have experimented with sixes (probably the maker whose salesman sees you, is one of them) have not reached success.

But (and here's a "but" that is positive, not negative) know this: The reached success nearly two years ago. So great has been its success that the Winton Company has not produced a four-cylinder car since June, 1907. We could not, in good conscience, try to sell you a four in competition with the Winton Six.

We are in business to sell cars. Do you suppose for a minute that if our sixes were not better than fours (and by the way the old Winton Model M of 1907 is today as good a four as you are likely to find anywhere), we would have put our factory, our investment, our faith and our future into sixes exclusively?

Not likely. No, just give us credit for ordinary business judgment; and, as a precaution against being influenced to buy a four on misinformation or misleading suggestion, get the facts about the Winton Six.

Two Sizes—$3000 and $4500. Our literature is fully explanatory. "Twelve Rules to Help Buyers" and "The Difference Between Price and Value" are especially helpful. Write today.

Banking News, Milwaukee—Wisconsin District

Z. G. Simmons, for thirty-eight years president of the First National of Kenosha, resigned his position Monday, and Charles C. Brown, general manager of the sales department of the Simmons Manufacturing Company of Kenosha and Chicago, was elected to succeed him. Mr. Brown served as cashier of the bank for twenty years. The retirement of Mr. Simmons came as a great surprise to the banking interests of the city.

Wisconsin State Banks

The abstract of the condition of state banks reporting to the state banking department under date of February 5, 1909, shows there has been an increase in resources of about $5,000,000 since the date of the last call, November 27, 1908. The number of banks reporting has increased from 450 to 456, while the total resources are $129,842,781.66, as compared with $124,845,425.46, and the individual deposits subject to check are $35,722,202.84, as compared with $32,426,652.47 in November.

1,241 Bills Introduced

Up to Saturday 1,241 bills have been introduced into the Wisconsin legislature. In the senate there are 400 bills and in the assembly 841 bills have gone to the printer. Many of these bills are duplicates and some have been withdrawn, but it is safe to say that there are 1,000 bills awaiting action. The legislative reference bureau has a calendar from the California legislature showing that 1,401 bills have been introduced into that body while in New York more than 4,000 have been sent to the clerks' desks.

Wisconsin Trust Companies

The twelve trust companies of the state reported to the state banking commissioner a total of $10,706,546.15 in resources February 5th. Loans to the amount of $7,265,228.07 were outstanding and bonds totaling $1,871,498.23 were held. The deposits footed up to $4,906,679.13.

H. A. Plumb Nominated

Harry A. Plumb has been unanimously nominated secretary and treasurer of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, to fill the unexpired term of the late William J. Langson.

A special election will be held Friday.

The nomination of Mr. Plumb was made by S. W. Tallmadge and seconded by George A. Schroeder. Mr. Plumb has been assistant secretary for a year, and previously had been employed in the secretary's office for sixteen years.

It was found by the board of directors that in order temporarily to fill the office an election must be held. The annual election will be held on April 5th.

The Wisconsin Utilities Law

The Wisconsin Public Utilities Law has been the model for those of many other states so that the proposed modifications of that law made in the annual report of the Wisconsin commission just issued possess unusual interest. Another feature of interest in the report is that the commission admits to making strained or liberal interpretations of the law in order to make the law fit the commission's ideas.

The State Bank of Rice Lake

Insurance Record

The sixty-fifth annual report of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, represented in Milwaukee by A. L. Saltzstein, general agent, Mack block, shows that during the year 1908 the total premium receipts were $6,455,234, and that the directors voted $1,200,000 to be paid in dividends during the present year to policy holders. As this sum represents 18½ per cent of the year's premium receipts, the record is considered remarkable, particularly when considering that the New England never sold tontine nor long deferred dividends, the sale of which is now prohibited by law, and the amount of dividend declared represents a saving of only one year.

Wisconsin Bankers Association News

If negotiations now being conducted by M.

A. Graettinger, secretary of the Wisconsin State Bankers Association, with the Goodrich Transit Company are adopted, the next annual convention of the Wisconsin bankers will be held on water during the three days' trip.

The plan is to charter a steamer to leave Milwaukee with the convention members on board on the night of June 20th, arrive at Green Bay the following morning, where members from that part of the state will be taken on board, and proceeding thence to Sturgeon Bay and Mackinac island, arriving the morning of the second day. The entire day will be spent on the island, the convention leaving in the evening for Milwaukee and arriving there on the morning of the fourth day.

Several members of the organization favor the plan and all business will be transacted on board the steamer during the first and third days.

F. H. Peterson Elected President

Frank H. Peterson, of the F. H. Peterson Carpet and Furniture Company, has been elected president of the Union State Bank of Minneapolis. He succeeds Andrew E. Johnson, who has been at the head of the bank since its organization three years ago. L. S. Swenson, former United States minister to Denmark, has been re-elected vice-president. The office of second vice-president has been abolished. A. E. Nelson will continue to serve as cashier. The bank is in a process of transformation. Besides the issue of additional stock, and the bringing in of new interests, the bank is considering larger quarters, either at the same place or elsewhere. It has a large Scandinavian clientele.

The Bank of Montrose

The Bank of Montrose (Va.) has elected the following directors: R. H. Stuart, G. C. Mann, J. F. Robertson, A. E. Carver, B. L. Bottaille, J. L. Healy and R. E. Beddoo.

In and Around Pittsburgh

By
LATIMER T. LAWTON

Judge George Kunkel Friday declared the act of June 13, 1907, prescribing the method of taxing trust companies, unconstitutional. The decision is of far-reaching importance, as it affects every trust company doing business in the state.

The auditor-general's department said that the decision means an addition of at least $300,000 annually to the tax revenues of the state.

This is the first judicial construction of the law. The decision was handed down in the case of the commonwealth vs. the Mortgage Trust Company of Pennsylvania, on appeal by the defendant from the tax settlement made by the auditor-general.

Judge Kunkel goes exhaustively into the statutory regulations of the taxation of trust companies and discusses the objections raised in the appeal of the defendant.

The act of 1907 put trust companies in a separate class for taxation purposes and on an equal footing with state banks. The act of 1889 and the amendment thereto of 1891 provided that the method of the taxation should be upon the shares of stock as representing the value of the property to be taxed.

The act declared unconstitutional by Judge Kunkel provided that the actual value of each share of stock be fixed by adding together the amount of capital stock paid in, the surplus and the undivided profits, and dividing the amount obtained by the number of shares. The court decides that under this method inequalities in the assessment of taxes have resulted in contravention of Article IX, Section 1, of the constitution, which provides that "all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects."

Instances are cited in which one trust company paid taxes in excess of the actual value of its shares of stock and another paid in $1,100 less than the actual value under the statutory method of assessment, and these cases are held to work inequalities.

An appeal will probably be taken by the commonwealth to obtain affirmation of the decision of the Dauphin county court by the Supreme Court.

Pittsburgh Stocks

The weekly letter of Childs & Childs says: "Our local market, while sympathizing with the weakness in New York, was at no time demoralized. It should not be forgotten that Pittsburgh stocks never had any decided recovery from the slump of 1907, and it is certain that the local market will be benefited by a revival of industrial activity in this district, even if this revival is at the expense of profits of the steel corporation."

First National of Westchester

The directors of the First National of Westchester have elected Elisha G. Cloud a director of the institution to succeed the late Bennett S. Walton.

To Investigate Cosmopolitan's Affairs

For the specific purpose of looking into the affairs of the closed Cosmopolitan National, special examiner Frank L. Norris arrived in Pittsburgh last week from Washington. Mr. Norris comes at a special request made to the Comptroller's department and his visit has been expected for at least six weeks.

Mr. Norris held a conference with Assistant United States Attorney Gibson and later with bank examiner Harrison W. Nesbit, in charge of the Pittsburgh district. He professed entire ignorance of his visit to the city.

"I really don't know what I am here for," he said, "until I have had my talk with Mr. Nesbit, who will probably have some instructions. I know nothing in particular of the Cosmopolitan case. All I know is that I am here."

Since the closing of the bank last fall a 10 per cent dividend has been paid to depositors.

A. J. ZWART, Cashier

Des Moines, March 4.—The bankers of Keokuk County have set an example for other bankers of the state in the organization of a County Bankers Association. This association was formed at Sigourney, when 46 bankers met and perfected the organization. The bankers in attendance had a general discussion in the morning, were served with lunch at the Merchants Hotel at noon, and in the afternoon officers were elected and the organization made permanent. The most important feature decided upon was that after March 1st, all banks of the county would accept time deposits on certificates issued for six or twelve months and that they pay interest for the time specified only in the certificates. The officers elected were: J. R. Mackey of Sigourney, president; Harry Lynn of Hedrick, secretary-treasurer; J. L. Mitchell of What Cheer, John Randolph of Keota, A. F. Bridger of Richland, J. R. Dunn of Delta, and Frank Snakenberg of Sigourney, executive committee. Many bankers from adjoining counties attended the meeting and it is not unlikely that other county associations will be the outgrowth.

Group Six Meeting

It is probable that the meeting of the bankers of Group Six in Des Moines, March 11th, will be devoted to a general discussion of the guaranty of deposits. The executive committee of the Des Moines Bankers Club held a meeting Saturday at noon and it seemed to be the consensus of opinion that the topic is fruitful at this time when the Iowa legislature has three or four bank guaranty bills pending. Group Six consists of the counties of Boone, Dallas, Guthrie, Greene, Jasper, Marion, Marshall, Madison, Polk, Poweshiek, Warren, with a total membership of 174 bankers, and 234 banks. S. M. Leach of Adel is chairman, and John W. Foster of Guthrie Center is secretary.

The Darrah Bill

The liveliest committee meeting held since the Iowa legislature met was the joint session of the senate and house committees on banking to consider the Darrah bill, providing for a guaranty of bank deposits. Arguments in favor of the guaranty law were made by Attorney Jerry Sullivan of Des Moines, John P. O'Mally of Perry, who is president of the Iowa Democratic Bankers Club, Attorney Theodore M. Stuart of Chariton, and President Cunningham of National Bank at Knoxville. Those who spoke against the measure were: Attorney C. L. Powell of Des Moines, Attorney E. A. Stevenson of Rockwell City, Parley Sheldon, a banker from Ames, and Karl Johnson, a banker from Osage. From questions which different members of the committee propounded to the speakers, it would seem that the majority of the committee are in favor of the Darrah bill and that it will be recommended for passage.

Knew Condition of the Bank

Attorney Powell caused the excitement of the meeting when he said that he was called to Chariton immediately after Frank Crocker shot himself and that he was told that many Chariton folks knew of the condition of the bank.

"If they had exercised good business judgment they would never have been caught," he said.

Representative Darrah, author of the bill, lives at Chariton, and he took vigorous exceptions to the statement while Mr. Powell soon found himself a target for a number of questions as to present bank conditions, and he said that he is in favor of more efficient bank inspection. He declared that the essential argument against the bank guaranty is that it makes one banker responsible for the mistakes of others. Attorney Stevenson said that the guaranty law would soon put the nationals out of business, and wipe out the national bank currency which he thinks is essential. Attorney Stuart of Chariton scored one when in referring to Mr. Powell's statement, he said that if the other bankers of Chariton knew that Crocker's bank was about to fail but said nothing about it, they showed carelessness, and that if under the guaranty law, they would have been held responsible, they would not have kept silence. Mr. Darrah presented letters favoring his bill from President H. D. Copeland, of the Chariton National, and L. T. Richmond of the First National at Albia.

Approves the Bill

Mr. Darrah has a letter from Lyman J. Gage, the well known financier, approving his bill. Mr. Gage says he sympathizes with the object which the measure is intended to accomplish; to give stability to the business of banking, and afford higher protection to the public. Mr. Gage says however that the provision in the bill which permits ten banks to start the guaranty fund should be changed to twenty-five banks with a minimum capitalization of $1,500,000.

Banking Committee Does Not Agree

The banking committee in the house has not been able to agree upon the bill providing for the placing of all public funds at interest. Representative Moore of Cedar Rapids, a banker, amended the bill to make the bank pay interest on the minimum deposits during the month instead of the average daily deposits. This stirred up the committeemen who thought they saw in it a scheme whereby the treasurer might check out heavily one day, and the minimum deposits be very slight. No action has been taken on the bill. Representative Ward introduced a bill whereby a man charging usurious rates of interest may recover the surplus so charged, and put it in his own pocket whereas under the old law it goes into the school fund. This is thought to serve as an incentive to a man to correct usurious abuses by "loan sharks." Representative Burt put in a bill permitting a man to deduct from his assessment only those debts which exist in Iowa. The Ward bill providing for a filing fee in place of a direct tax on real estate mortgages was recommended for passage. The senate passed the Proudfoot bill which makes a bank liable for payment of a forged or raised check only in case the depositor notifies the bank within six months.

Des Moines Savings Banks

The call for the condition of savings banks of Iowa upon February 20th, issued last week by State Auditor J. L. Bleakley, found the Des Moines institutions in excellent condition. The gain in deposits in the city, state, and savings banks since the last call total something over $1,000,000. Of this amount the most remarkable gain is in that of the Central State, the bank into which Simon Casaday removed a few weeks ago. This bank alone gained $900,000 in deposits in three months. At the November call, the bank had deposits of $1,030,902.55. On February 20th, it had $1,930,464.55, a remarkable showing and due largely to the popularity of Mr. Casaday, who resigned as president of the Des Moines Savings to become president of the Central State.

Money in Country Banks

Des Moines bankers are at their wit's end to know what to do with the flood of money that has been rolling from the country banks. Just where to invest it so as to get an adequate return is a puzzling question, but it is expected that March will witness a noticeable clearing and an increase of rates. These have been very low for the past few weeks but Des Moines bankers are optimistic as to the situation.

The Defunct Bank of Corning

Directors of the defunct Bank of Corning have been served with notice of suit of intervention on the part of depositors who allege that the directors were negligent and failed to do their duty. The question will be watched carefully and with interest by Iowa bankers since it involves a question as to responsibility of directors of a bank in such cases. The bank failed five years ago for $250,000 with the Iowa National and Des Moines National, both of Des Moines, as its heaviest creditors.

Banking Notes

The LeMars Savings is undergoing a series of improvements and repairs in keeping with its general policy of advancement.

County Clerk Clark of Decorah is said to be the chief candidate for the position of national bank examiner made vacant by the resignation of H. J. Hjerleid, who was forced to give up the place because of defective hearing.

Parley Sheldon, at Ames, announces the erection of a new three story brick bank block to cost $25,000. The Landsman Bank at Kimballton will erect a new brick bank to cost $7,000.

Miss Mildred Hertert, daughter of President E. M. Hertert of the Farmers and Merchants at Harlan, was married to E. R. Hastings of Oklahoma City.

Origin of Gold Deposits

The current theory of the formation of gold bearing alluvial deposits assumes that the gold existed originally in the central nucleus of the earth in the forms of sulphide and telluride, which subsequently became dissolved in the waters of hot springs and were deposited together with gelatinous silica. Thus were formed veins of auriferous quartz which, in consequence of erosion, gave rise to alluvial strata containing particles of metallic gold.

M. Fieux, however, asserts that the erosion of outcropping auriferous veins of quartz does not account for all deposits of metallic gold. He finds that some gold bearing strata show no trace of quartz, but consist wholly of clay with fragments of diorite or diabase, and moreover are so situated as to preclude the existence of quartz veins. He has seen beds of streams become richer in gold after every rain, though they showed no trace of quartz. Finally, in certain auriferous strata which contain much quartz, not a particle of gold is found in the quartz, though some gold occurs in the diabase which accompanies it.

Hence Fieux concludes that the erosion of quartz veins cannot be the sole source of auriferous alluvial strata; and furthermore, that the almost constant presence, in those strata, of heavy basic rocks, containing diorite, amphibolite schist and diabase, indicates that native gold is one of the subsidiary ingredients of those rocks.

According to this new theory, therefore, certain of the heavy eruptive rocks have carried with them in their eruption some of the gold existing in the metallic state in the central nucleus of the earth. After reaching the surface these rocks were oxidized by contact with the air and eroded by water, which washed away the lighter materials and left the heavier, including the gold. —Scientific American.

Former Bank Teller Arrested

Traverse City, Mich., February 27.—Ellsworth Hale, formerly paying teller of the First National of this city, was arrested Saturday night by United States Deputy Marshall Mosher of Marquette, charged with embezzling $5,800 of the bank's funds. Hale resigned his position to open a 5-cent theatre. It was not until after his resignation that the defalcations were discovered. It is said that he confessed and started to repay what he had taken. Hale's theatrical venture was a failure, and it is supposed he could not make good his efforts to repay the money taken. He was bound over to the United States court in the sum of $2,500.

"The Spell" by William Dana Orcutt

The Harper Brothers have sent out a fine new novel for the discriminating reader. A man and two women—one his wife—give the motive but there are other charming characters. The telling and the plot are superb. It is the tale of a young wife who struggles against the passionate fear that her husband is happier in the companionship of another woman—and who loves and protects the other woman! A handsome young dreamer is the husband, a student of the Old-World classics wrapped up in his scholar's passion for the past, adoring his beautiful "society-girl" wife, but finding a mysterious, sweet companionship in her friend, whose intellect flashes back to his. As these two work together in an old library, the pretty wife makes up her mind that her husband prefers her friend. And when you read the story you learn whether or not this is true. The wife's frank offer to her husband to give him up brings on a climax which sets "The Spell" altogether apart from most novels of married life. Because it is a story of love to-day, and has an ideal heroine, it will capture the average reader; but it will also win the reader who is above the average, for it is written with intellectual force and fine artistic feeling.

A Standard Bible Dictionary

After several years' patient and industrious labor, this important dictionary—"A Standard Bible Dictionary"—made along original lines, has been completed, and comes to the public in worthy dress. The leading scholars to whom the work was intrusted were Dr. Melancthon Jacobus, and Prof. Edward E. Nourse of the Hartford Theological Seminary, and Prof. A. C. Zenos of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, assisted by some thirty or more of the leading Bible students of America and Europe. The special value of the work is to be found in its thoroughness and its peculiar attention to sensible proportions. Taking as a basis for their work the concordance of the English Bible, the editors have given every topic its place, and those of special significance are given many pages. Many claims are justly made for the volume. For the first time in the history of the making of a single-volume Bible dictionary the work has been assigned to a selected corps of specialists in Bible lore. Such topics as agriculture, artizan life, diseases and medicine, etc., are covered with such thoroughness as to be greatly helpful to historical students. The attitude of the authors has been that of open mindedness, and there is general acceptance of the proved facts of modern scholarship. In the cases of still-debated problems both sides are stated impartially. Furthermore, the publishers claim that this is the only dictionary of the Bible that gives the pronunciation of the title word in a perfect system of notation; that it is the only work that transliterates the Hebrew and Greek so that the reader unfamiliar with these languages can get an intelligent idea of the words before him, and that it is the only single-volume work of its kind that for the reader supplies the key to further study on the subjects with which it deals by giving bibliographies at the close of all the important subjects which it treats. These are but a few of the points of excellence which may be recommended in the volume.

Group Seven, I. B. A., Meeting

By W. F. CURTISS.

The annual meeting of Group Seven of the Iowa Bankers Association, was held at Cedar Rapids recently. The attendance of fully two hundred members was a record breaker for the group.

Cedar Rapids Clearing House Bankers know how to entertain, and this meeting was no exception. A short session convened in the Club room of the Montrose Hotel, at 11:30 A. M. The opening address was by our veteran and able State Secretary, J. M. Dinwiddie.

On account of the group secretary, Chas. A. Blossom, of Belle Plaine, being detained at home by illness, J. S. Brocksmit, of the Merchants National, Cedar Rapids, was chosen chairman of the meeting. Mr. Brocksmit by his able and hustling ability, made a first-class presiding officer.

The convention now being organized, passed the time until the luncheon hour, in an informal discussion of the "Overdraft" problem,—how to avoid it, the discussion brought the fact that while its practice should be condemned, still many of the country bankers could hardly avoid it in cases of their farmer customers, cattle buyers and others, going out to buy live stock, it appears to be an almost universal custom, for the checks for purchase of live stock to be first given out, the bank pays the checks and afterwards the valued customer comes in, and arranges for a credit to take up the overdrafts.

At 1:00 P. M. luncheon was served in the dining room of the hotel. The following was the menu:

Bouillon, celery, olives, fillet of beef, mushroom sauce, mashed potatoes, peas in case, string beans, chicken mayonnaise, wafers, ice cream, assorted cake, coffee, and cigars.

At 3:00 P. M. the convention was called to order, the afternoon session being held in the auditorium of the Public Library building.

J. A. Latta, vice-president of the Northwestern National, Minneapolis, Minn., gave an interesting and profitable address on "Problems of Investing funds of a Bank," one of the best things of the session.

"Pending Legislation," a well written essay by E. M. Scott, of Cedar Rapids, a convincing argument that we should keep in close touch with our representatives in the legislature. If we don't watch out, we may have some laws enacted that will materially affect not only our business but business in general.

"Bank Examinations" a paper by F. J. Eighmey, vice-president of the First National, Waterloo; and a paper by W. A. Dexter, of Toledo, Iowa, were right to the point and were well received.

Convention Notes

Waterloo had a special car, with large banners, one on each side of the car, labeled, "Iowa State Bankers Convention Held in Waterloo in June. Come!"

The Montrose hotel is justly the pride of Cedar Rapids. It is a splendid structure, one of the best hotels in the state.

This was one of the best group meetings of the year.

"Iblis in Paradise"

The story of Adam and Eve has been told in a little leather and silk bound book by George Roe, he who gave us "Omar Khayyam" and all lovers of it will welcome another Persian classic that breathes the same mystical charm of the Orient that pervades the quatrains of the Tentmaker. Like Fitzgerald's Rubaiyat, Mr. Roe's Iblis in Paradise far transcends the limitations of the slavish translation. Though for the most part founded upon well-known Eastern Oriental legends, it is original in form and is, as it were, a composite version of several ancient folk-tales that center about Adam and Eve, the Garden of Eden, the Serpent and Israfel, the fallen angel. Published by the Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia, at $1.25.

F. J. Eighmey of Waterloo on Bank Examinations

In response to the invitation of Group Seven, Iowa Bankers, to take up briefly the important matter of bank examinations, I assume that all bankers will agree with me that examinations cannot be too thorough. I believe there should be the utmost confidence between the examiner and the banker relative to assets and liabilities of the bank, and in speaking of the banker, this should include the officials and directors of the bank.

I am heartily in accord with the present system of examinations as made by examiners of national banks (I use the word national, as I am not familiar with the methods used by examiners of state banks), in calling in the directors at time of examinations and going over loans with them. I would suggest going even farther, by mailing a copy of the examiner's report to the chairman of the board of directors, with criticisms (if any) and ask an acknowledgment of same by at least three directors.

I think the examiner should in general terms give his opinion of the condition of the bank under examination, as he finds it, describing the character of its assets and calling attention to any unwarranted conditions or gross irregularities, should they exist. I am also of the opinion that the examiner might without prejudice point out any irregularities he might find in any bank to the bankers in the city where such bank is located, or possibly to the executive committee of clearing house associations, where such associations are found. I might also call attention to the fact that in some instances bank examinations are hurried, and it might be a wise move on the part of the government to give each examiner an assistant, and especially in larger banks where there is necessary much detail work, and a large part of the work of the examiner necessarily falls on employees of the bank under examination. I firmly believe that the present system might be remedied by salaried examiners instead of so much for each examination, based on capital stock of the bank.

I also believe the prudent and conservative banker will welcome at all times the bank examiners, and the others will be obliged to.

I believe directors of banks should examine and verify loans frequently, and where collaterals are held they should examine such collateral. They should see that all accounts are verified monthly—they should verify certificates, certified checks, and also cashiers' checks, and insist on certified checks and cashiers' checks showing name (to whom listed, dates, etc.), being properly transcribed on ledger. Cash should be counted periodically; profit and loss and expense accounts should be checked and examined. They should compare the reports of condition as made to government or state from time to time with the books of the bank as of the same dates, in other words, the directors of a bank should keep themselves informed as to the general condition of the bank, and especially should they know the "habits" and "haunts" of the employees of the bank. Overdrafts should not be allowed, and especially by employees and a director of course should never overdraw his account, nor allow any institution in which he is interested to get the "habit."

In other words, if directors of banks will examine banks in which they are interested at least twice a year, and diligently and conscientiously direct the affairs of their respective institutions, examinations will be a pleasure, and bank failures will not occur. I have only touched briefly on a few of the important things necessary to help make bank examinations more thorough, and in thorough examinations the depositor finds protection, and the whole community is benefited thereby. In conclusion, let us remember that integrity, honesty, ability, careful consideration, and courtesy tell in banking as well as in any other business. If we have these qualities in good measure, our banks will be under examination each day, and we will hail the bank examiner with delight, knowing that a "clean bill" will be handed us when he departs.

Let me add still further, let us do a straightforward, legitimate, and upright business, let us not be tempted by the prospect of large gains, by buying everything offered us that looks good, and let us not engage in operations not sanctioned by laws governing our respective institutions, and above all, let us examine our own methods each day and prove to our own mind conclusively that we are right, and then we shall welcome the sunshine, and never fear the storm.

Banker Answers Burglar

The house of a prominent banker, whose name was not given out, was entered last night by a burglar, who left behind the following note:

"Why don't you poison that dog of yours? I went upstairs and pulled his tail and he just snored a bit louder, that was all. The fruit was very nice; ta ta. Yours truly, Bill Sikes, alias Raffles."

The banker gave out for publication this evening the following reply:

"I was much disappointed. A gentleman so distinguished, who writes such excellent English, who is so kind as to warn me that my faithful watchdog, Dandy, has become incapacitated with age, is indeed welcome to my best overcoat, shoes and rubbers. But really it was unkind to suggest that a trusty old dog should be poisoned because he let a burglar pull his tail. I am grateful for the care you took not to arouse the family, and as you showed no desire for mere pelf, but only took food and clothing, you're indeed welcome, and deserve, as you have, the thanks of Dandy's master."

H. P. Hilliard

Bankers always are interested in what may be done or said by the brilliant Mr. Hilliard of St. Louis. His leaving the Mechanics-American to accept the presidency of the Central National, of his own city, on Saturday last will bring further prosperity to that lusty three-year-old. An able public speaker, a skilled financier and a man who has "made good" everywhere, is a short, truthful character sketch of Mr. Hilliard.

Mr. Hilliard has been a banker for twenty-six years. He came to St. Louis six years ago from Austin, Tex., where he had been president of the Austin National. The deposits of this institution under the direction of Mr. Hilliard grew so that they exceeded those of the five other banks of Austin. Mr. Hilliard came to St. Louis to become cashier of the Mechanics' National. Soon after he was made vice-president. When the Mechanics' National merged with the American Exchange in May, 1905, Mr. Hilliard became vice-president of the consolidated institution. Mr. Hilliard realized on the assets of the Mechanics' National amounting to $24,000,000, with a loss of less than one-fourth of 1 per cent.

Mr. Hilliard was president of the Texas Bankers Association while he was in Texas, and later he became a member of the Executive Council of the American Bankers Association and a member of the Committee on Credits of that association.

The stock of the Central National is well divided, so that the control rests with the directors, although they do not own a majority of the stock. The holdings of ex-president Forman, according to the last return made to the assessor, were 776 shares. He was the second largest stockholder, the largest being L. A. Browning, with 806 shares. Other large stockholders are Forrest Ferguson, 650 shares; L. A. Goddard, 500; R. E. L. Winter, 445; Adolph Schmitz, 650. The par value of the stock is $100 and its book value is $112.

The position of vice-president of the Mechanics-American will, according to President Walker Hill, remain vacant for some time, no arrangements having yet been made by the directors for filling it.

News of the change in the Central National came as a surprise to St. Louis bankers and brokers. The fact that there was no trading whatever in the stock of the institution preceding the change shows that very few knew it was in contemplation.

Mr. Forman has been in the banking business in Illinois and Missouri since 1870. He filled positions with banks in Tamaroa, Nashville and Duquoin, Ill. Then he became a national bank examiner. His first St. Louis bank connection was as cashier of the Continental National Bank in 1892. In 1906 he organized and became president of the Central National. Mr. Forman is now president of the City Council, his term expiring in April. He has acted as Mayor of the city during the absences of Mayor Wells.

The resignation of Hamilton A. Forman and the election of H. P. Hilliard was not all that happened. Simultaneously with the change of control, several changes were made in the directorate of the bank, Ferdinand Diehm and A. N. Kingsbury, who were assistant cashiers of the institution as well as directors, resigned as directors, but retained their other positions. To fill these vacancies Floyd Shock, vice-president and a large stockholder in the Vandeventer Trust Company, and Judge William F. Evans, general attorney of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific and general solicitor of the Frisco Railroad, were elected. Myron R. Sturtevant remains as cashier of the institution and J. J. Broderick and L. A. Browning remain vice-presidents.

The Central National had a picturesque beginning in 1906. Before its organization late in that year Hamilton A. Forman had been president of the Fourth National. The Fourth National was turned over to the National Bank of Commerce by the controlling stockholders without the consent and over the protest of Mr. Forman, who was forced out by the Commerce interests. Mr. Forman at once got his friends about him, and with them organized a new national bank, with a capital stock of $1,000,000. He opened the institution in the location it now occupies. The bank has grown and prospered. It now has a surplus of $140,000 and deposits amounting to $8,000,000.

The Peninsular Savings Bank

The Peninsular Savings Bank of Detroit will have another branch institution in the near future. David Stott is erecting a fine business block at Grand River and Warren avenues and in this structure will be one of the best equipped branch banks in the city, for the Peninsular Savings.

Rockland Trust Company

The directors of Rockland Trust Company of Rockland, Mass., have declared an initial semi-annual dividend of $2.50 per share, payable April 1st. This is the first trust company organized under the law permitting the incorporation of trust companies with a capital of $100,000 to declare a dividend.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

IN the Charlotte Record, we find a glowing account of a grand opening at that place of the Merchants & Farmers' Savings Bank on the very day that Mr. Taft became President Taft. Charlotte is a vigorous and prosperous little city in Clinton County, Iowa, not many miles from the city of Clinton and among those interested in the formation of the new bank are J. H. Ingwersen, and W. W. Cook, president and cashier, respectively, of the People's Trust and Savings Bank at Clinton.

CASHIER COOK in reality was the man who lighted upon Charlotte as a good prospective point for a savings bank and the new institution very likely will in many ways operate in harmony with the savings bank at Clinton. The officers of the new institution are T. H. Manion, president; Harry Beeby, vice-president; Peter C. Duer, cashier and Charles Hanrhan, assistant cashier. The stockholders of the new bank comprise the principal, prosperous and influential business men and farmers of the locality. They came in in sufficient numbers to assure success from the beginning. Mr. Duer has been many years in business in Charlotte and has a very wide acquaintance.

MR. DUER was a merchant in Charlotte and believes in advertising. Consequently, the opening of the new bank was announced in large cards in the local papers, outlining the policy of the new institution, telling who the directors are and offering 4 per cent interest on savings. The capital of the new bank is $50,000 and new business began with a rush.

MANAGER CALDWELL of the bond department of the American Trust & Savings Bank of this city, recently received a prospectus from a small corporation wishing to establish a goose farm and to open a small line of credit at the bank. The outline of the business as set forth by the stockholders, three in number, takes into account the rapid multiplication possible through the modern incubator apparatus and quotes all prices at which sales are to be made at the highest retail rates showing that on their $300 capital, each stockholder expects to draw in profits $113,233.33 per year. The percentage runs up into the thousands and reminds one considerably of the expectations that investors formerly had from Belgian hare farms.

THE Financial Calendar Company of 25 West Broadway, New York, is sending out its 1909 edition of the Financial Diary. To those who wish to have a complete reference as to prices and full particulars as to stocks, mortgages, dividends, and other information of the kind, it will be invaluable. The publishers issue a supplement of their annual calendar weekly and enjoy large support among the banks.

"THE only bank at the National Stock Yards" which means the National Stock Yards National, is sending out a folder entitled "An Object Lesson in Hogs." At first thought, this does not sound very like a title for banking literature, but when we remember the location of the bank and the fact that it is the only one at that particular point, the title will take on some additional meaning. This bank has made a great success under the administration of President Chesney by promptly crediting all proceeds on the very day that the stock is sold. This brings the recipient from one to four days' additional interest on every shipment and a big advantage in prompt bank credit.

THEY have a story in Philadelphia that it wasn't Taft at all that swung around the Southern circuit eating possum and being measured for goats' hair breeches but that it was "Double A" Crane of Minneapolis, who has been known to have been taken for Mr. Taft times without number.

FROM Washington comes the report that Franklin MacVeagh was the first of the new cabinet ministers to reach his desk and that he fully appreciates the desperate encounter which he is expected to have with the treasury deficit. Mr. MacVeagh has never been disconcerted in the least because a thing appeared to be difficult and he never has held the opinion that public office is a sinecure. Hard work and sound business and financial judgment are expected by the new president and will be delivered promptly by the new secretary of the treasury.

THE new administration has not made public fiscal policy as yet and the public interest is very keen in the matter. Probably the first severe test to be undergone by the new administration will be the public reception of its treasury policy.

LEWIS E. PIERSON, of New York, as the country paper would say, "Sundayed" in Chicago this week.

A BANKER up in Wisconsin has sent the following Swedish-American composition to his Chicago correspondent (American Trust) just to show him how effectively the two languages may be joined by one of the mechanical turn of mind. Here's the letter as it was forwarded to a Chicago firm:

I receev de engin witch I by from you alrit but for why dont send no pullie. Vat is de use of de engin when she dont have no pullie. I am loose to me my kustomer sure ting by no having the pullie and dats not very pleasure for me. Vat is de matter with you mister Field-Bruntage Companee, is not my moneys so good like onnerder mans? You loose to me my trade and i am vere anger for dat and now i tells to you dat you are a dam fools and no good, mister Field-Bruntage Companee. I send you back at wunce your engin tomorro for sure bekwase you are such a dam foolishness peoples.

Yourse respeckfulee,

OLE OLSEN.

P. S. Since i rite this letter i find dee pullie in de box. Excuse to me.

MR. OLSEN might have torn up his letter after finding the pulley but the world would have lost a piece of curious literature thereby.

H. P. TAYLOR & CO. devote their March circular largely to the tariff and make it quite clear that Pittsburgh only desires a fair measure of protection. They conclude that "capital will show considerable hesitancy until the effect of coming adjustments can be ascertained and until financial interests are fully in accord therewith. The banks throughout the country will continue to accumulate money and, as rates are low and unprofitable, a large proportion of the idle funds is being invested in the bond market, which is certain to remain active, pending recuperation in general trade and industry. Bonds have been unaffected by the collapse in stocks, the latter having been grossly manipulated, while bonds have been selling on their merits."

THE Illinois Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago has issued a pamphlet which should set a mark for other large banking institutions of the country. This pamphlet not only sets forth the bank's resources and liabilities, but goes so far as to publish the names of every person who owns stock in the institution. Other banks do this but more might follow the laudable practice.

CASHIER.

Tennessee Convention News

Secretary Heflin, of the Tennessee Bankers Association, is sending out the following circular:

Convention 1909. Hotel Patten, Chattanooga, May 25th and 26th. Full information as to program, hotel, and railroad rates, etc., will be sent you later. Make your plans to come. Bring the ladies.

Legislation. Pending bank legislation is having the attention of the legislative committee, and you will be kept fully advised as to what is proposed.

Attorney. W. D. Witherspoon has been re-elected association attorney, and will continue to answer questions on banking law without cost to members. Inquiries should be sent to the secretary.

Membership. Only a very few banks in the state are not members of the association. We hope that every bank in Tennessee will identify itself with the organization before the convention, and we offer the assurance that every effort will be made to give membership a constantly-increasing value.

Insurance. Is your insurance—fidelity bonds and burglary—placed through the association? The plan affords the best of protection at low rates. Do not let yourself be persuaded to insure elsewhere.

Headquarters. The executive council has authorized the establishment of association headquarters at 1015-16 First National Bank Building, Nashville. We cordially invite you to make this your Nashville office, where you will have at your disposal an abundance of literature on banking subjects, telephone, city directory, and stenographer.

Problem of Investing a Bank's Funds

The subject which was suggested to me for this address is one which concerns the most important feature in the conduct of a banking business. It is not so difficult to organize and direct the machinery which handles the routine business, for the clerical work can be arranged by a good office man, and with the exercise of reasonable intelligence, the methods will always readily adjust themselves to any change in conditions of the business.

The central and vital point of the bank is the loans and investments. In other words, they may be considered to be the heart which furnishes the life to the whole organism. With that organ of the anatomy of the institution sound and healthy, the whole body will perform its functions. If the heart be not strong and sound, the vigor of the whole organization will depreciate, and gradually suffer decay, leading, if not remedied, to disaster.

This applies not only to banks but to all financial organizations, as the investment of funds always plays an important part. The nature of the business may vary; it may be life or fire insurance or some form of an investment company, but with all, the same holds true; a certain range of ability and experience will supply the necessary equipment to handle the regular routine work. But when it comes to investing the money, an entirely different range of experience and ability comes into play. For that reason it is not an uncommon thing for men whose experience may have been in some comparatively small institution, to be called to positions of great responsibility with large concerns, instead of the positions being filled by promotion. The young man on a moderate salary in a small business centre may be better adapted by experience and ability, to handle the loaning work of a large city bank than some employee who has spent years in the institution and is a most competent office banker, but who happens not to have the particular executive quality required in handling investments.

I do not intend to discount the value of the other work in the bank. The clerical man is an indispensable feature in the business, and the responsibility which he carries in certain positions is unquestioned, but I wish to bring out the point that every line of business has some one department where good management keeps the life blood of the institution pure and strong. In the bank that department handles the "investment of funds."

The investments of a bank may be divided in a general way into three classes:

First, the balances maintained with other institutions for reserve and business purposes.

Second, the loans to its own customers.

Third, the outside investments.

So far as the accounts which are carried with reserve and other banks are concerned, I have only this suggestion to make and what I offer is not new. For your reserve banks, select those of unquestioned strength and in whose management you have confidence. Be not influenced by catchy par lists or unusual and unbusinesslike inducements; these should put you "On notice" to investigate thoroughly. Do not scatter your reserves and thus weaken the value of your accounts. Make it a point to get in touch with your principal correspondents in such a way that they may come to know you and feel the same confidence in you that you have in them.

Paper read before the clearing house bankers of Cedar Rapids and Group Seven of the Iowa organization, by James A. Latta, vice-president of the Northwestern National of Minneapolis :: :: :: ::

JAMES A. LATT

The second class consists of loans to your own customers; and here is required the best of judgment, great tact, and unceasing vigilance. Many features enter into the consideration of these loans, and thoroughness in the investigation and consideration of a proposition, I believe to be an absolute necessity in good management. Modern methods evolved from experience make this much easier than formerly. A very useful adjunct is a system of cards by means of which, at a moment's notice, the bank manager can see the value of the customer's account as indicated by average balances. Business based on balances and responsibility is the most satisfactory and profitable on the bank's books.

While the "policy loan" perhaps has to be occasionally made, yet I think you will all bear me out when I say that unless the amount involved is so small that it could be considered a proper charge to the expense account, experience generally proves that such loans are not profitable unless the paper is absolutely good; in other words, when a "policy loan" is made, it is very apt to result in the loss of much more than the profits on the business which is more or less remotely associated with the loan.

I consider a signed statement just as necessary in dealing with your own customers whom you know, or think you know, well, as in handling the paper of concerns outside and with whose condition you are not familiar. It not infrequently occurs that a statement will bring to your attention some feature of condition of your customer's affairs of which you had no knowledge. Comparison of these statements from year to year will show whether progress or the reverse is being made. I believe that financial statements in smaller banks are more generally on file than they used to be. I will take up this matter a little more in detail later on.

If possible, diversify your borrowing accounts by distributing your loans in different lines of business, thus rendering the volume more stable, and the average rate more satisfactory. Owing to the varying requirements of the different lines of business, your money will be more steadily employed.

Fluidity should never be lost sight of. Train your customers to depend on the bank only for funds to be converted into quick assets by them, which will, as the business seasons come and go, automatically retire the paper. I remember well that many years ago it was the custom to quite an extent, to give a client a line of credit which immediately became a part of his capital and a steady loan at the bank, and the paper could not be collected without losing or displeasing the customer. "Dry rot," the most serious menace to the banker, must be kept out by constant attention to the condition of your borrowing customers. The banker should be on the alert for the slightest evidence of this, and if it appears, learn where the decay has begun and see that it is cut out by vigorous methods, or collect the loan as rapidly as possible.

The personnel of the management of the borrowing concerns should always be considered, and oftentimes the banker receives his first indication of possible trouble through some little thing which comes to his knowledge regarding the character or habits of the borrower. While the most profitable and satisfactory of the bank's loans are those made to its own home customers, yet in a well balanced institution the management endeavors to maintain a fund for outside investment, which brings us to the third class of the bank's investments.

A reasonable proportion of the bank's resources carried in bonds and commercial paper will prove convenient in providing a secondary reserve for the varying requirements of the seasons and unusual or emergency conditions. Bonds carefully selected can be bought on a basis which will give the bank a fair income, and at the same time the securities are usually salable. For a commercial institution, I prefer the first mortgage bonds of first class railroads, which are listed on the New York Stock Exchange, or at least have a market in the money centres. A moderate amount of municipal and industrial issues carefully selected is good, and the rates are more satisfactory than on the class of bonds I first mentioned, but it should be borne in mind that such issues are not so readily convertible in time of need.

Good commercial paper properly diversified both in amounts and character of business is considered an excellent investment for a commercial bank and is more available than bonds, owing to early maturities, while bonds if long time, must be sold and in periods of stress on a poor market. In selecting such paper the banker must have many things in mind. Paper which represents the financing of important staples with a ready market, is preferable to that which would naturally be of a slower liquidation. The financial statement should be carefully examined that a definite idea may be formed as to the volume of quick assets, and whether they be sufficient in liquidation to pay the liabilities. The simple fact that the indebtedness of a concern is large is not necessarily an occasion for fear. If the volume and character of the quick assets show possible a natural quick liquidation, leaving a good margin over the liabilities, that goes far to make the paper desirable. Investigation in the home location of the borrowing concern proves very useful in determining whether the previous history has been satisfactory, and that confidence in the management, without which the paper should not be bought, is warranted.

Keep in touch with your loans by posting up at frequent intervals as to present conditions and prospects of continued success.

A correct financial statement covering in detail and completely the affairs of the borrower is of the utmost importance in buying commercial paper. I believe that the practice of furnishing a statement of condition certified to by an independent and disinterested accountant after a thorough audit, is becoming more general, and that the feeling among buyers of paper is gaining ground that such statements should be insisted upon.

Furthermore, some system of registration whereby the total amount of outstanding paper could be known at any time would be of great value, and while the borrowers might, and probably would object to so much publicity in connection with their business, yet the final result would be greater confidence in those deserving it and the elimination from the market of the undesirable. These are matters which have been discussed at various Bankers Association meetings. The Standing Law Committee of the American Bankers Association has had their general counsel prepare a draft for a law to be introduced in various states providing for the punishment of those who make or use false statements to obtain credit. Such laws are now in effect in a few states, and a bill has recently been introduced in the Minnesota legislature along the same lines. The desirability and propriety of such legislation can not be questioned.

I have so far touched upon the investments of commercial banks in which the proportion of time deposits is naturally small. The investments for savings banks properly may include a large proportion of good bonds and first mortgages on improved real estate. However, as in most states the law prescribes definitely the character and distribution of savings bank investments, I will not go further into that matter.

Vermont Bankers Association

Over fifty bankers from all parts of Vermont met at the Y. M. C. A. building, Burlington, Vermont, last month and organized the Vermont State Bankers Association.

The meeting was called to order at three o'clock by H. L. Ward of the Burlington Trust Company and Chairman of the committee appointed at an informal meeting of bankers at Montpelier last fall when the matter of forming a state association was discussed. C. F. Chapman of Woodstock was then called to the chair to act as temporary chairman. The meeting was addressed by Fred E. Farnsworth of New York, Secretary of the American Bankers Association, who spoke along the lines of association work, stating that there were now forty-six state associations, which comprises also the territories, and outlined in detail the various classes of work which was taken up by these various associations and of their great success and prosperity. He was followed by a number of the bankers present, all of whom favored the organization of an association for Vermont. A constitution and by-laws were adopted being modeled after the constitution and by-laws of the Michigan Bankers Association. The following officers were elected: President, H. L. Ward, Burlington, Vermont; vice-president, C. F. Chapman, of Woodstock; secretary, H. T. Rutter, Burlington, and treasurer, D. L. Wells, Orwell. Executive Council: F. H. Farrington, Brandon, Vermont; John Branch, St. Albans, Vermont; A. W. Ferrin, Montpelier, Vermont; for one year. I. E. Gibson, Bennington, Vermont; H. F. Field, Rutland, Vermont; C. H. Stearns, Morrisville, Vermont; H. C. Cady, Northfield, Vermont; for two years.

At seven o'clock forty-three of the members of the new association sat down to a dinner tendered by the directors and officers of the Burlington Trust Company and served in the assembly hall of the Ethan Allen club. Judge E. C. Mower, a director of the Burlington Trust Company, acted as toastmaster, and the principal speaker was Mr. Farnsworth who talked on the American Bankers Association and Banking and Currency Legislation. Remarks were also made by F. C. Williams of Newport, State Bank Commissioner; C. P. Smith, president of the Burlington Savings Bank; H. M. McFarland, Hyde Park; Senator W. F. Scott of Brandon, F. C. Fleetwood of Morrisville, which was followed by a general discussion and outline of the work it is hoped the state organization will accomplish.

The meeting was a very successful one and insures a live and progressive association in the state of Vermont.

The Bank of Pearl

A bill in chancery was filed recently in the United States District Court in the bankruptcy case of C. A. Manker, who operated a private bank at Pearl, Illinois, known as the Bank of Pearl, which closed its business November 25, 1908, with liabilities of over $50,000. The bill was brought by R. T. Hicks of Pittsfield, trustee of Manker, who is now residing in Pittsfield and is directed against Bluford Heavner of Pearl.

Hicks alleges that Heavner was intimately and confidentially associated with Manker in a number of business deals, the two having been partners in the banking business in Hill View, Ill., several years ago, but they abandoned that business and Manker and Heavner were partners and incorporators in the Manker-Heavner Navigation Company, organized under the laws of Arizona with $9,000,000 capital stock, to promote a certain style of boat, and also in the Hydro-Curve Boat Company of America. Hicks alleges that Manker turned over to Heavner within four months of the time in which the petition in bankruptcy was filed against Manker in the Federal Court at Springfield, notes aggregating $3,000, and that while alone in the Bank of Pearl, on November 26, 1908, after the bank had been declared insolvent and had closed, Manker turned over to Heavner $1,000 in cash, and has also turned over to Heavner his stock in the Hydro-Curve Boat Company of America. Hicks asks that Heavner be compelled to deliver all notes and moneys which he received of Manker, and which were preferences to himself as trustee.

W. H. Mitchell

William H. Mitchell, vice-president of the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, of this city, and father of John J. Mitchell, president of that institution, was 92 years old Tuesday. The officers and employees of the bank extended to him their best wishes and congratulations in appropriate manner, and, according to B. M. Chattelle, the cashier, expressed the wish that he will live ninety-two years more.

Mr. Mitchell, by virtue of his large ownership of the stock, has been in control of the Illinois Trust since 1873. After having given away 3,000 or 4,000 shares to his children Mr. Mitchell now owns 8,750 shares of the bank's total capital of $5,000,000. At present market quotations that stock is worth about $4,375,000.

Mr. Mitchell at the age of 22 left his father's farm in Ohio and engaged in flat-boating on the Ohio and Mississippi river. In 1849 he followed the trail overland from the Mississippi to California and for two years was engaged in transporting goods and gold for the miners. Later he returned to Alton, Ill., and engaged in steamboating, his line being the connecting link of the Chicago and Alton between Alton and St. Louis. In 1873 he sold out his interests there and came to Chicago.

Notwithstanding his extreme age, Mr. Mitchell attends every meeting of stockholders and directors of the bank while he is in the city and goes to the bank on every pleasant day.

State Treasurer D. S. Creamer stated that it would be some time before he would be able to announce the amounts the various banks throughout the state would receive under his plan of competitive bidding for state funds. He will attempt, he says, to allow all banks whose bid is 3.10 or better. The Cincinnati banks which come under this are the Pearl Street Market Bank, the People's Bank and Savings Company, Brighton German Bank, Provident Savings Bank and Trust Company, Metropolitan Bank and Trust Company and the Queen City Bank and Trust Company. The delay is caused by the Exchange.

New Insurance Law

Insurance companies, with headquarters outside of Ohio, better known as "foreigns," will now have to pay a tax on all business done in Ohio. The bill of Senator James Mathews, of Cuyahoga County, passed the House last week, under a suspension of the rules.

The law is to remedy a defect recently pointed out by the Supreme Court in a case in which the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, received a favorable verdict. The law as it was provided that the companies should pay a tax on all premiums paid in Ohio. Those sent to the New York office, by the action of the Court, were not considered as coming within the meaning of the law. Insurance Commissioner Charles C. Lemert, upon learning of the decision, held a conference with Governor Harmon and a new bill was decided upon.

The amendment to the law provides that the tax shall be upon all premiums paid by residents of the state. If a resident should remove to another state the tax upon his premium is not collectable. It does not matter now whether the money is collected in Ohio or by the home office of the companies, it is subject to the tax.

Indianapolis and Indiana Banking News

By CHARLES REMINGTON

Plans for the new bank building of the Mutual Trust and Deposit Company of New Albany have been adopted and the contract for the fire and burglar proof vault has been awarded.

The board of directors of the company met recently, and the plans for the building submitted by E. W. Hillerich, a well known Louisville architect, were adopted and he will be in charge of the construction of the building. The frame building now occupying the site of the proposed bank building on Pearl between Market and Spring streets will be removed within short time and as soon as Architect Hillerich prepares the specification the contract for the erection of the new building will be awarded and will probably be ready for occupancy next fall. The plans for the building call for a structure that will be distinctive and imposing in appearance and unlike the ordinary business block.

Bids were received by the company from a number of the leading safe and vault manufacturers of the country and the contract was awarded to the Diebold Safe Company, of Canton, Ohio. The vault will be modern in every respect and one of the most complete ever constructed in this city and is to be finished and ready to be placed in the building not later than September 1st.

Supreme Court of Indiana Decision

The Supreme Court of Indiana held, in the case of the Indianapolis Northern Traction Company et al. vs. Brennan et al., that the Indiana act of 1883 as since amended (Burns 1908, section 8305), giving a lien on a railroad for work done or materials furnished by certain persons, including "contractors, sub-contractors," etc., did not confer any power for anybody to acquire such a lien except "mechanics, laborers and material men," because they are the only persons mentioned in the title to the original act, and its title has never been amended, and that a general contractor who undertakes the building of a railroad or a large section thereof, to be accomplished by employing large numbers of men, and subletting portions of the work, is not embraced in any of said three classes and cannot have such a lien.

Frankfort Bonds

The $50,000 electric light bonds issued by the city of Frankfort to rebuild the plant, which was wrecked by a flywheel bursting a few months ago, were bid in by J. F. Wild & Co., of Indianapolis, for $52,000. Six Indianapolis firms, two from Chicago and three from Cincinnati submitted bids.

Cannelton Banks

Unusual activity in real estate and building circles prevails at Cannelton, as both banks have purchased choice corner sites in the principal business street, and at an early date will begin the erection of two brick and stone bank buildings, with offices above, the First National's building to be a three-story structure.

Wrecked Banks Paying Dividends

A 10 per cent dividend to creditors has been declared by the wrecked Parker bank of Remington, and 60 per cent by the Kouts Bank.

George B. Caldwell on Security Market Conditions

It may be said that the security markets generally reflect the industrial situation. This is true only in one sense—that sound financial conditions beget confidence, and confidence means a good security market; especially if money is plentiful.

For the past three months the money situation has been all that could be desired and now funds from the interior are rapidly returning to the money centers and rates are very low. Low money rates indicate a reduced volume of credit—limited business activity showing that those having funds or the control of funds are not yet ready to launch new business undertakings.

Some little time must elapse before general business activity will be at its best, and as a natural result of a surplus of funds, gold exports will, from time to time, occur, and bonds of practically all grades will sell at good prices.

The bond market is now all that could be expected and has, for six months, shown an upward trend; until municipals and many of the seasoned issues of railroad and public utility corporation bonds are nearing the price levels of a few years ago. How much further this advancing tendency will go depends, of course, very largely upon the continued easy state of the market. The sentiment both East and West is that the bargains everywhere present a few months ago are a thing of the past, and that higher prices will yet prevail. There is nothing in sight that I can see that will not permit of this sentiment becoming an actuality.

There are many indications to justify the belief that the present year will see a comparatively steady and sound broadening of business activity, and as a counterpart, a far reaching improvement in security values. Certain it is that fundamental or underlying conditions to-day are on a better and different basis than for several years past.

The political events of the past few years have, in many ways, tended to clarify the question of corporate control and the public mind is far more inclined to-day to be satisfied with corporate conditions than it has been for five years. While there is still much anti-trust talk indulged in, yet false standards have been exposed and abandoned for the present, at least; and we are beginning to understand that merely because business is conducted in the corporate form and on a large scale, if honestly conducted, its relationship to the public is not bad nor essentially different than it would be if still carried on under the individual or partnership method.

That this condition is a good thing for the public and helps the security market no one can deny. Under the new order of things even the great railroads of this country are beginning to enjoy a return of prosperity, and willingly admit that the Interstate Commerce Commission has stopped rebating, and in its efforts to regulate rates is not wholly bad or a failure.

The last panic was a culmination of a war for a greater publicity, and the investing public have won a great victory, and I cannot see, with all our wisdom and powers of discrimination, why the business interests of this republic will not gradually recover—adjust themselves to the new order of things and enjoy prosperity for a number of years to come. If this is true, even in part, we will also enjoy an investment field of vast proportions along safe and sane lines.

By J. IRVING COOPER

Plans are under way for the organization of a new state bank, to be known as the Pennsylvania State Bank of Philadelphia. It is being promoted by interests identified with the Franklin Trust Company, Tenth Street and Columbia Avenue, and is to be located in the building now occupied by that company, which will be left vacant by the latter's removal to Fifteenth and Market streets.

It was announced that the Franklin Trust Company had leased the quarters formerly occupied by the Lincoln Trust Company in the Harrison Building. After a thorough remodeling the company will move to its new location within a few months.

The new state bank, which is to take the place of the Franklin Trust Company, at Tenth Street and Columbia Avenue, will have a capital of $50,000, with the privilege of increasing it to $200,000.

The change contemplated by the trust company will be one of the longest jumps ever made by any financial institution in Philadelphia, the distance between the two points being over two and one-half miles. In order to make provisions for extending the scope of its business, the Franklin will also take action soon on doubling the capital stock and surplus, the former being raised from $200,000 to $400,000, and the surplus from $60,000 to $120,000.

The Lincoln Trust Company, which was formerly at Fifteenth and Market streets, is now in process of liquidation, after having twice been in the hands of receivers.

First National of Philadelphia

At a special meeting of the stockholders of the First National the membership of the board of directors was increased from seven to eleven and Theodore Armstrong, Howard S. Graham, Sydney E. Hutchinson, and Edward D. Toland were elected directors.

B. J. Woodward Dead

B. J. Woodward, vice-president of the Tenth National of Philadelphia, died last week.

Personal Mention

Winthrop Smith, of Winthrop Smith & Co., has returned from a trip to the Pacific coast.

Francis E. Bond, of Edward B. Smith & Co., returned from Europe last week, on the same ship which brought Charles M. Schwab.

John H. Brockie has been elected assistant secretary of the Commercial Trust Company.

The Philadelphia Casualty Company

Announcement is made that directors of the Philadelphia Casualty Company have been authorized to increase the capital stock from $300,000 to $1,000,000, the increase to be made from time to time as the directors may deem advisable. The directors have decided to increase the paid-up capital from $300,000 to $500,000 and add $200,000 to surplus.

The Corn Exchange National

The Comptroller of the Currency has wired his approval of the increase in the capital stock of the Corn Exchange National from $500,000 to $1,000,000. This is in accordance with the law, which requires the approval of the comptroller of increases in the capital of national banks.

Philadelphia Stock Exchange Letter

The Philadelphia Stock Exchange has sent a letter to members in reference to the removal question. The letter says that two proposals have been received by the governing committee, one contingent upon the members signifying their desire to move to Broad and Chestnut streets.

It is stated that one offer of $150,000 has been made for the present building, and that the prospective purchaser might increase his proposal to $175,000.

It is further stated that the present building occupied by the exchange is carried at a cost of $216,422.84, being the amount which has been expended upon it by the exchange. The building is assessed at $275,000, upon which the exchange pays a yearly tax of $4,000. During the fiscal year ended February 28, 1908, the receipts from the building from all sources amounted to $21,810.48, and the total expenditures $20,221.93, leaving a net income of $1,588.55. Allowing 4 per cent upon the amount expended upon the building—$216,422.84, which amounts to $2,565.91, and deducting net balance earned by the building as above set forth, $1,588.55, a balance of $7,068.36 remains, which was the cost of rental to the exchange for the space which it occupies in its own building for the year. It may be here added that the exchange has been informally notified that a tenant occupying considerable of its most valuable space will vacate at the expiration of the present year.

Selected List of Securities

Thomas Newhall offers investors a selected list of securities of electric companies under the Stone & Webster management.

The International Bank of St. Louis

Suit was filed at Edwardsville Thursday by the International Bank of St. Louis against C. W. Barton, formerly cashier of the Tricity State Bank of Madison, for $5,000. The declaration in the proceeding has not been filed.

Christopher Winklemeyer, president of the International Bank, stated that he had not been advised of the filing of the suit, but that it had probably been filed by the bank's attorneys for the purpose of collecting the balance due on the bank's claim against Burton on the loan made to him while he was cashier of the Tricity State Bank.

Burton, who is a brother of former Senator J. R. Burton of Kansas, is under indictment on the charge of embezzlement.

Boston Money Market

The Boston money market seems to be adjusting itself more to conditions outside. There is more money and rates on call are weakening. Considerable money has been loaned on call today at 2½ per cent, although the general asking rate is 3 per cent, and some loans are outstanding at 3½ per cent. Time money is 3 to 3½ per cent.

First State Bank of Deer Park, Wash., has these officers for the year: President, O. F. Kelly; vice-president, Louis Olsen; cashier, W. F. Irish. The directors are W. S. Gilger, C. C. Gilger, Louis Wanka, Martin B. Malmoe, L. E. Chapman and Knute Johnson.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Details of the promotion of the proposed central deposit bank in Minneapolis for the state banking institutions have been given out by C. D. Griffith of Sleepy Eye, former president of the Minnesota Bankers Association. The state banks are expected to take half of the million dollar stock at $100. Each congressional district that takes $50,000 of stock will have a director in the institution. In addition there will be fifteen directors at large, to be selected by Minneapolis and the bigger cities. Mr. Griffith says again that nothing much will be doing in the formation of the big bank until May 1st. Name, location, and officers will be chosen soon. Two large banking rooms are open for lease due to absorption of the National Bank of Commerce and the Swedish American National, so that the bank will not have to hesitate because it has not where to open. The proposed enlargement of the Minneapolis State Bank has not materialized as yet. It was touted as being about to start anew downtown where there is believed to be a need for a bank nearer the wholesale district than the financial row.

Among the improvements which are being made in the Northwestern National is a lunch room for the clerks and employees. The lunchroom is served by a restaurateur from a buffet kitchen on several small tables. Along the side of the room is a bench which reaches from one end to other, and when the room is not in use for luncheon it is available for a resting and recreation place for the clerks. The restaurant is in the high basement of the bank, which is not an inglorious place for it, because the directors' room adjoins it. Since it was decided to enlarge the banking room to take all the main floor of the bank, George B. Lane and Eugene M. Stevens & Company, commercial paper and bonds, have been asked to go elsewhere, the clerks have been sent to the second and third floors of the front of the building and some of them to the basement. Mr. Lane opened a fine office in the Security Bank building. Eugene M. Stevens & Company fitted luxurious quarters in the new Farmers' & Mechanics' building, and the directors of the Northwestern were given an excellent meeting place in the basement, so that every one is satisfied. The battery of vice-presidents and assistant cashiers will have better offices when the enlargement of the bank is completed later in March.

The Farmers and Mechanics Savings Bank

The new Farmers & Mechanics Savings Bank is nearly finished. It is an oddity in interior architecture, with a combined domical and conventional effect, but it is an attractive banking room that has been produced from the architect's design. Fine marble wainscoting is a feature.

Eugene M. Stevens & Company

Eugene M. Stevens & Company have engaged the upper floor of the two-story front and have already moved in. They have sublet large quarters to J. Gordon Steele & Company, chartered accountants. Mr. Stevens has the dignity of being president of the new Minneapolis Stock Exchange. Another active member of the company is E. T. Chapman, brother of Joseph Chapman, Jr., who came to Minneapolis three years ago from Ohio. The Stevens company has an office in St. Paul also, in charge of E. C. Kibbee. The office is in the new State Savings bank.

Negotiations Off

Negotiations for the bank building vacated by the Swedish American National last fall and utilized now by the Swedish American Savings Bank, are off. It was expected that the Germania Bank would take the building incident to its enlargement of capital and board of directors, but not so, now at least. The rent for a building with ground space of 50 by 100 feet, and one-story high, is $8,000 a year, which is prohibitory for the average small bank.

T. F. Aspden a Visitor

T. Fred Aspden of Toronto, superintendent for the Canadian Bank of Commerce, with a patrol of 200 branches, has been in Minneapolis talking to cashier George F. Orde and assistant cashier Ernest C. Brown of the First National. In the increasing business association between Winnipeg and Minneapolis Mr. Aspden sees fine prospects for trade extension. He is optimistic over the possibilities of Western Canada in business lines. He says the whole dominion is in a state of prosperity. A big immigration is expected for the territory in the spring, which means more business for the Twin Cities as well as for Canada.

Legislative News

Politics constantly filter into the legislative consideration of proposed banking bills for Minnesota. In the discussion of the Haugland bill providing for the semiannual examination of state banks in Minnesota, one of the Twin City representatives suggested that it was only a scheme to give the democrats a chance to strengthen their machine. He charged that if the bill were passed it would only provide jobs for ward heelers. He offered to show that departments in the capitol were used primarily for political advancement. He offered an amendment that the law should not go into effect until 1911, after the next election. Only one vote favored the amendment.

Senator Thorpe, an active bank legislator, has introduced a bill placing the liquidation of delinquent banks in the hands of the public examiner, to save the expense of receiverships. The bankers back the measure. The examiner is authorized to take possession of banks he deems unsound and unsafe and hold them until the business is resumed or liquidated. The examiner is to work under the jurisdiction of the district court in conducting the business, thus being in all respects like a receiver. He may appoint special deputies and apply for a special attorney. The compensation is to be subject to the approval of the attorney-general and is to be paid from the bank funds. When the examiner has paid claims in full, the stockholders shall decide whether he shall be continued as liquidator, or whether an agent shall be elected for the purpose.

The Marsland (Neb.) State Bank is the title of a new enterprise.

Money on deposit in a commercial bank or in a safe deposit is subject to taxation, if in possession on the first Monday in March. ## The Taft Administration

There is little attempt on the part of the business men and bankers of the country to conceal the fact that they expect more reposeful conditions as a result of the judicial temperament of the new president. Uncertainty is to business just what treachery is to an army. Advances of credit on the one hand and business ventures on the other require stability of policy as well as of laws. Mr. Taft's character is known and his great abilities acknowledged by all. He is not spectacular; is not quarrelsome; lacks vanity, but is of the opposite with all possible emphasis.

Of the important things which Mr. Taft discussed the following have been selected as very important to make note of by bankers:

Recommendation for postal savings bank bill.

The reforms initiated by Roosevelt directed to the suppression of the lawlessness and abuses of power of the combinations of capital must be maintained and enforced. To render reforms lasting however and to secure "freedom from alarm on the part of those pursuing proper and progressive business methods further legislative and executive action are needed."

"Relief of the railroads from certain restrictions of the anti-trust law has been urged by my predecessor and will be urged by me."

Reorganization of the Department of Justice, of the bureau of corporations in the Department of Commerce and Labor and of the Interstate Commerce Commission is needed.

The Administration is pledged to legislation looking to a proper Federal supervision and restriction to prevent excessive issues of bonds and stocks by railroads.

"It is believed that with the changes to be recommended American business can be assured of that measure of stability and certainty in respect to those things that may be done and those that are prohibited which is essential to the life and growth of all business."

The tariff bill "should secure an adequate revenue and adjust the duties in such a manner as to afford to labor and to all industries in this country, whether of the farm, mine or factory, protection by tariff equal to the difference between the cost of production abroad and the cost of production here," with provision for a higher tariff against those countries whose trade policies toward us require such discrimination.

The tariff bill should be drawn and "as promptly passed as due consideration will permit." The need for action on the tariff "is more immediate to avoid embarrassment of business."

Recommendation for a graduate inheritance tax if adequate income cannot be secured by import duties.

"We may hope that the report (of the Monetary Commission) will embody neither the narrow view of those who believe that the sole purpose of the new system should be to secure a large return on banking capital, nor of those who would have greater expansion of currency with little regard to provisions for its immediate redemption or ultimate security."

The full message to the people was a grand effort and the "Peaceful President" made hosts of new friends and lost none of the old, by it.

The Bond Issue for Waterways

The whole of the Mississippi valley was pleased with that portion of President Taft's inaugural address which advocated the issue of government loans for the improvement of internal waterways as well as for the building of the Panama canal. For many years the government has paid for its permanent improvements out of current income. At last the time has come when expenses have advanced more rapidly than have the sources of revenue. This is not a fault of the law makers at Washington, but it serves to call attention in a very emphatic way, to the many advantages the government has of borrowing money at 2 per cent.

The state of Illinois has voted $20,000,000 to permanently improve the water route from Chicago to the Mississippi river. If a sufficiently comprehensive plan can be prepared, why might not the general government issue $200,000,000 to $400,000,000 in bonds to improve the great Mississippi itself? Missouri, Iowa, and Wisconsin, as well as states tributary to the Ohio river, would follow suit immediately and improve their own interior waterways. No nation on earth is so much in need of cheap transportation between the various sections of its territory. Prosperous as the nation is at the present time, it is not advisable that it shall continue to pay out of current earnings for the permanent improvements to be enjoyed for all time by succeeding generations. A bond issue would divide up this cost between all of the beneficiaries greatly to the relief of current taxes. Mr. Taft declared openly that permanent improvements like the Panama canal always should be considered as separate enterprises, paid for by bonds which would distribute the cost between the present and the future generations in direct proportion to the benefits derived. In cases like that of the Panama canal, there would be a system of charges which may be expected to take care of the interest on the bonds and to provide a sinking fund for the ultimate extinction of the debt. In the case of internal waterways, it is likely that no system of tolls would be provided. If necessary, however, all improved waterways could be made entirely self-supporting at a cost to the user so small that it would be forgotten in the light of the many facilities and advantages enjoyed.

The congresses which will sit under the administration of President Taft will have it in their power to create history by wisely providing legislative provisions whereby the cost of much needed facilities for the growth of our country's trade can be distributed over the time of future generations.

False Statements for Credit

Illinois has suffered, is suffering now, because she has no adequate law under which corporations and individuals may be punished for making false statements for credit. Bankers, business men and attorneys have been painfully aware of this for years. There has been a general awakening in many states, owing in large part to the efforts of Pierson and Paton in A. B. A. circles. Now the state associations are fully enlisted in the good work. Bills have been introduced in most western states and there is promise of one in Illinois. In Illinois the bill to be introduced is the one prepared by the Standing Law Committee of the American Bankers Association and fully covers most of the evasions now in practice and provides a fine of $1,000 and five years' imprisonment, one or both. It is to be hoped that all good citizens who believe in making credits more sacred and punishment more certain will join in overtures by letter, by telegram, and orally to the representatives and senators at Springfield, to have the bill passed promptly.

The election of Mr. Hilliard, of St. Louis, to the presidency of the Central National Bank of that city, will add immeasurably to the financial equipment of that splendid money center. Mr. Hilliard has been a quarter of a century in the banking business and has seen deposits grow in the banks with which he has been connected much as plants grow under the skillful manipulation of the renowned Luther Burbank. In the future, President Hilliard and his Central National will take an advanced position in the business and monetary affairs of that great city.

The National Surety Company

The National Surety Co. (Joyce & Co. incorporated) wrote $500,000,000 in bonds during 1908, beating 1907 by $100,000,000. This year this company leads so far. On the Illinois advisory board are such well known men as Charles G. Dawes, resident vice-president, John A. Spoor, D. R. Forgan and A. J. Earling. This company has joined in with many state bankers associations to fight bank crooks and burglars, and pays its share of the expense.

The Peoples State Bank of Auburn has been organized. C. W. McPhail is president; C. H. Macomber, vice-president and E. M. Hollister, cashier.

Julius Haass Elected President

There was a very pretty incident enacted in connection with the election of Julius Haass as president of the Home Savings Bank of Detroit. When the matter was brought up by a member of the board of directors, Mr. Haass immediately requested that no action whatever be taken, inasmuch as W. K. Anderson, vice-president, lies seriously ill in a hospital.

Immediately, James C. McGregor, who succeeded his late father, President James McGregor, on the board, took from his pocket a note written by Mr. Anderson on his sick bed, asking that the directors proceed to make Mr. Haass president.

Mr. Anderson's friends will be pleased to learn that he is now considered on the road to complete recovery, although for a time his life was despaired of.

The Farmers and Merchants Bank of Pittsford

The building and fixtures of the defunct Farmers & Merchants Bank, of Pittsford, have been offered for sale by George Nichols, of Ionia, attorney for the former president, N. H. Burlington, who is awaiting trial in the Jackson county circuit court for making false report to the state banking commission, and Z. C. Eldred, receiver of the institution.

The price asked was $2,250, which is less than half of the original cost. Hillsdale bankers have offered the required amount and if the deal goes through the depositors are promised a prompt settlement at 50 cents on the dollar. Ionia parties agreeing to take the assets and pay that amount. The purchasers of the building expect to start a new bank as soon as possible.

The Detroit Board of Trade

At the regular meeting of the board of directors of the Detroit Board of Trade the following standing committees and officers for the ensuing year were appointed: Executive—John Wynne, F. William Lichtenberg and F. J. Simons; finance—Arthur S. Dumont, A. J. Ellair and J. T. Shaw; transportation—J. T. Shaw, T. G. Craig and F. T. Caughey; information and statistics—William Carson, H. M. Hobart and J. T. Shaw; membership—F. T. Caughey, T. G. Craig and L. A. Parsons; floor—T. G. Craig, A. J. Ellair and F. T. Caughey; inspection—F. T. Caughey, J. T. Shaw, A. S. Dumont, L. A. Parsons, T. G. Craig, A. J. Ellair and F. J. Simons; secretary and treasurer—Frank W. Waring, and chief inspector, Fred W. Harrison.

Owosso Bank Loses $8,000

L. A. Sanderhoof, trustee for the creditors of the defunct Dudley Butter Co., is getting the affairs of the company in shape, and will report on the condition some time this month. The company had plants at Owosso, Saginaw, Evart and Merrill, Mich., and property in Boston. The Michigan plants are valued at between $80,000 and $90,000, and this amount, if realized, will mean a payment of probably less than 25 per cent to the creditors. The Boston property, on which an Owosso Bank held a mortgage of $15,000, was sold recently for $7,000, a loss of $8,000 to the bank.

Depositors to Get 30 Per Cent Dividend

Receiver Godfrey of the Farmers' Bank of Parma, closed as the result of alleged pecula-tions of Cashier William H. Burlington, has declared a 30 per cent dividend for creditors.

Bankers Want Laws

Representatives of the Michigan Bankers Association appeared before a joint meeting of the house committee on private corporations and the senate committee on banking corporations, in the interests of several bills which are now before the legislature, and which the bankers hope to have passed. Among the bankers were H. H. Smith, Detroit, secretary of the association; J. H. Johnson, president of the Peninsular Bank, Detroit; Hugh A. McPherson, Howell; W. A. Acker, Richmond, and Charles M. Pinney, of Jackson.

Loan Bill Recalled

The bill providing for the rate of interest to be charged by loan agents, which caused a squabble among the Wayne members in the house of representatives, and which was later passed by the house, was recalled from the senate last week. It was discovered that a clause which was tacked on to the end of the bill would make it inoperative on the loan sharks. This is because the clause was framed to regulate the operations of pawnbrokers as well as loan agents, and as the former are already governed under another law, the bill would be useless. It is expected that after being rebuilt the measure will again be submitted to the house and senate.

Bill Passes Senate

Senator Kline's bill increasing the bond required of the state treasurer from $150,000 to $300,000 passed the senate.

E. W. Clark Back at Desk

Emory W. Clark, vice-president of the First National of Detroit, is back at his desk after one month's sojourn in the Carolinas. Mr. Clark came home feeling refreshed and in excellent spirits.

The Tower Exchange Bank

It is reported that the Tower Exchange Bank has had a change of owners, D. D. Hanover & Co., selling to William Greenfield and H. L. Sias, the present cashier.

The Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition

At Seattle This Year

By Welford Beaton

Seattle, Wash., March 11.—On March 1st the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition in Seattle was ninety-five per cent complete and work upon what little there remained to do was going forward with such despatch that there was no longer question that the big world's fair, a finished product, would throw its gates open on June 1st, according to schedule.

If there is reliance to be placed in the business computations of the traffic officials of the various transcontinental railroads, then the financial success of the exposition is already assured. That it will be a success from the standpoint of him who comes to see Seattle will give bond, for Seattle is giving, if not the largest, the most beautiful world's fair in exposition history.

The James J. Hill railroads, the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Burlington, are making arrangements to handle traffic on a basis of 1,000,000 fares through St. Paul alone. The Harriman lines, the Union Pacific, Oregon Short Line and the Southern Pacific, from New Orleans to Portland, Oregon, via Los Angeles and San Francisco, are figuring a like of the west, including Yellowstone Park and Banff, the dreamland of the Canadian Pacific region, while en route to the fair.

AUDITORIUM

While the title of the Exposition, Alaska-Yukon-Pacific, would seem to limit its scope to these globe sections, such is by no means the case. Naturally, the biggest parts will be played by the western half of the Occident, by Japan, China and the lands that lie on the Pacific, with Alaska and Canada, but the whole world has declared its intention of making the most of the opportunity for exploitation and as a result, more buildings than were first contemplated have been constructed to meet the always increasing demand for exhibit space.

The Exposition as it stands to-day has cost ten millions of dollars, exclusive of the $600,000 which the United States government has expended in buildings and in assembling exhaustive exhibits from Alaska, the Philippines, Hawaii and the fisheries.

A conservative estimate of the value of exhibits which have already been assigned space, is $55,000,000. Besides the exhibits comprehended in this estimate, there are others, the value of which is impossible of computation, as, for instance, the historical documents, models and relics which the Government is sending from the national capital; the museum of the United States Post Office Department, the mint which Japan is sending, together with the supply of metals which will be used in producing, daily, the coins of the realm; Japan's records of the ancient days of the shogunate and samurai and scores of other exhibits of similar nature upon which no intrinsic value can be placed.

The Northwestern bank exhibit will be a revelation to those bankers of the more eastern states who have never been called upon to solve the fiscal problems which intimate relations with Alaska, a primitive, but tremendously wealthy land, have forced upon Seattle. There will be shown systems of exchange, interest and paper unheard of under any other traffic and making good upon their estimates by assembling equipment to handle it.

Seattle is not so vain as to believe that this unprecedented transcontinental traffic will be due altogether to its exposition. The Alaskan coast tour, from Seattle to Sitka, can be taken in a week at a cost not to exceed the one way fare from Chicago to the Northwest, and it takes the tourist through a wonderland of glaciers and towering snow topped mountains that not even the Alps can show. Another inducement which is operating on a tremendous scale, is the low roundtrip rate to Seattle, being made by the Northern railroads, and the splendid stop-over privileges which are announced. By virtue of these rates it will be possible for the traveller to see every wonder conditions. Classes of securities encountered nowhere else on earth, will be exhibited and processes of collection, unique to say the least, will be illustrated. What banker of the east for instance, ever made a loan of $5,000 on a security of $500,000 worth of gold dust and accepted as acknowledgment, a note which would mature "two weeks after the first water shall run this spring." Pursuing the question, what banker ever went down into the sluice boxes, when the water did "run in the spring," and, clad in parka and hip boots, clean up the gold dust with which to liquidate that note and the three per cent per month interest which attached?

It is such features as these that account for the tremendous interest shown in the coming exposition. It is altogether a departure from the beaten track. It is leading the public into lands little known, but which have as much as have the known lands to show. No exposition that has gone before has had to show so much that was altogether new.

The joint state bankers convention which will meet in Seattle, of Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, on June 24th, 25th, 26th will help to bring an early and interested body of sightseers. The same week, three days earlier the great bank clerks' associated chapters of the American Institute of Banking, will hold a three days' session. Not less than five thousand bankers, juniors and seniors, are expected.

Postal Savings Paraphernalia

Uncle Sam will be swamped in routine work if any of the current schemes are adopted to establish postal savings banks with the paraphernalia of pass books and ledger accounts. In view of the fact that there are now in the United States several savings institutions with approximately 100,000 depositors each, it is reasonable to assume that Uncle Sam would have at least a million depositors if he should meet with any sort of success as a savings banker. To do the routine work in connection with such business would require hundreds of expert bank clerks and thousands of the kind the government would probably get.

When private citizens start a bank one of their first acts is to get a safe that cannot be readily cracked in which to keep cash on hand. In connection with the proposed postal savings schemes, arrangements are contemplated for redepositing receipts in national banks, but if foreigners and other working people are to be accommodated, it will be necessary to receive deposits after regular banking hours and keep various sums over night. Will postmasters carry such money around in their pockets or will Uncle Sam purchase 31,000 suitable safes? My own suggestion would be to hire 31,000 night watchmen with sufficient political influence and pugilistic inclination to make themselves felt at caucus and election times.

If Uncle Sam insists upon becoming a savings banker he should avoid cumbersome and expensive methods and simply issue interest-bearing money-orders in convenient denominations which postmasters could handle without an additional army of clerks or any complicated system of accounting. Perhaps some sort of postal savings bond in popular denominations like the government bonds of France might still better serve every legitimate purpose of postoffice banking.

—George E. Allen, Educational Director.

Pittsburgh Chapter Debate

The debate between a team from Washington & Jefferson college and a team from the Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking, Tuesday evening in the Chapter rooms in the Wabash building, was one of the most interesting meetings of the year. The senior class of W. & J. challenged Pittsburgh chapter to a debate on the proposed Postal Savings Bank bill and the challenge was promptly accepted. W. & J. was represented by William Heber Dithrich, of Charleroi; John Huey Murdoch, Jr., of Washington, Pa.; and George Francis Philip Langfitt, of Pittsburgh. The chapter team was composed of J. E. Rovensky, of the First National; Frank M. Polliard, of the Real Estate Trust Company; and R. H. MacMichael, of the Mellon National.

Mr. Dithrich, of the college team was awarded first honor in oratory in the junior year and Mr. Murdoch was one of the six men selected from the class to compete for the same honor.

Mr. Rovensky, of the bank team was one of the debaters that won from Chicago at the Institute convention at Providence last year. Mr. Polliard and Mr. MacMichael have had experience in various lines of public speaking and in a warm debate last year on the asset currency defeated their opponents. Three prominent business and professional men served as judges.

There was a large attendance as the college sent over a delegation of loyal supporters. The meeting was an open one and bank men were especially invited as the subject was discussed in every important detail. W. & J. won.

Philadelphia Chapter Banquet

The annual banquet of the Philadelphia Chapter of the American Institute of Banking will be held on Saturday evening, March 27th, at the Hotel Walton. Last year's function was the best in the organization's history and no stone will be left unturned to make the 1909 dinner equally successful.

Duluth-Superior Chapter Dance

The second annual entertainment and dance of the Duluth-Superior Chapter of the American Institute of Banking was held recently at Flaaten's Hall. In addition to a dancing program of sixteen numbers, there was a musical and literary program.

Miss Lillian MacAskill gave a piano solo and Miss Ogla Olssen a vocal solo. John Irwin gave a reading and Bruno Eyferth was on the program for some humorous talk. H. C. Matzke, president of the chapter, delivered an address, and Colin Thomson made a few remarks.

The arrangement committee consisted of G. H. Snyder, R. W. Butchart, C. H. McCarthy, C. J. Crogan and A. W. Taylor.

A number of banking officials of Duluth were present at the dance. Among them were W. C. Hegardt, cashier of the American Exchange Bank; Colin Thomson, assistant cashier of the American Exchange Bank; Walter Johnson, assistant cashier of the First National; J. E. Horak, assistant cashier of the Northern National. Several Superior Bank employees were present.

Chicago Chapter Meeting

At a general meeting of the Chicago Chapter on Tuesday evening, at Booth Hall, Professor J. Paul Goode, of the University of Chicago, delivered an illustrated lecture on "When the Coal is Gone, What Then?" The attendance at the previous lectures on topics of commercial geography, delivered by Professor Goode before the chapter has taxed the capacity of the hall, and this one was no exception to the rule. The following resolution offered at the last meeting of the chapter was passed: To amend article 6, section 1, to read as follows: "The annual meeting of the chapter for the election of the executive committee and the officers, and for such other business as may be brought before it, shall be held in the year 1909, on the first meeting of May, and on all succeeding years on the second meeting of May each year."

C. Franklin Cooke rendered a bass solo.

Hartford Chapter Banquet

The annual banquet of Hartford chapter of the American Institute of Banking will be held Wednesday evening, March 17th, at the new house of the Hartford Golf Club. The dinner will be served at 7:30 p. m., the time previous to which may be spent in looking over the club house and holding an informal reception.

Reserve Agent Change

Washington, March 11.—Reserve agent change: The Central National, St. Louis, Mo., for the Southwest National, Kansas City, Mo.

Minneapolis Chapter Debate

The postal savings bank was debated by the Minneapolis bank clerks on Tuesday night. The question was: "Resolved, that the postal savings banks, under the supervision of the government, are for the best interests of the people." The redoubtable L. E. Wakefield, of institute fame, was one for the affirmative, with J. C. Thompson. Paul Sandberg and Joseph Cameron for the negative. Pursuant to the advice of the educational director of the institute, George Allen, that the Minneapolis clerks do no heavy work following the immense amount of clerical effort that had resulted from the continuous bank absorption epidemic, the debaters made the arguments as light as possible without throwing away chances to impress the judges, who were G. L. Lang, F. A. Likely, J. A. Herring. The negative side won.

Supreme Court Decision Far Reaching

An important decision on the question of double liability of stockholders of trust companies and similar concerns existing under charters from the state of Pennsylvania, as imposed by the act of May 11, 1874, was made Monday by Justice Elkin in the Supreme Court in the case of the defunct Union Surety and Guaranty Company. The importance of the decision is seen, when it is remembered that the aggregate capital of Pennsylvania state financial institutions is about $200,000,000.

The opinion affirms the finding of Judge Sulzberger, and marks a legal triumph for former Judge James Gay Gordon, who, with W. H. Hepburn and John McCunaghy, represented the Union stockholders.

The opinion of the Supreme Court, written by Justice Elkin, says:

"There is but a single question to be determined. Does the act of May 11, 1874, which imposes a double liability upon the stockholders of banks, banking companies and other banking institutions, apply to trust companies incorporated under the general corporation act of 1874?"

"Upon this question the reasoning of the learned court below is unanswerable. The words 'trust companies,' used in the act of 1874, can only have reference to those trust companies created by special act passed prior to the adoption of the new constitution, of which there are a few, and which were given the right to engage in a banking business. This is clearly indicated in the title to the act. It is an act fixing the liability of stockholders of banks, and banking companies and other banking institutions."

Celebrating Its Sixtieth Anniversary

The Detroit Savings Bank was organized as the Detroit Savings Fund Institute by a special act of the state legislature approved March 5, 1849, consequently this month marks the sixtieth anniversary of this well known institution. In 1871 the bank surrendered its special charter and reorganized under the general banking law, but, of course, has remained the same institution all the way through from March 5, 1849. It is the oldest bank in the state of Michigan, and by its safe and conservative, and at the same time enterprising management and methods, has attained its present greatness.

Group Two, O. B. A., Meeting

Group Two of the Ohio Bankers Association, which includes 75 banks in 14 counties in Northeastern Ohio, will hold the annual meeting at Celina on April 29th. Mutual protection in time of panic, and protection against swindlers and burglars will be the main topics of discussion. The visitors will be entertained with a trip on Lake Mercer.

J. E. Hidge

A new banker joined the Cincinnati financial community on Sunday, and will make his future home at the residence of J. Ed Hidge, secretary and treasurer of the Provident Savings Bank and Trust Company. The youngster is doing finely.

Prison Accounts Short

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 8.—Convicted bankers, now prisoners in the Western Penitentiary here, have discovered an apparent discrepancy of more than $26,000 in the accounts of the penitentiary, and it is said the amount may be even larger. It is said to be probable the alleged discrepancy may be accounted for by bad bookkeeping.

First National of Kelso

The First National of Kelso, Wash., held its annual election of officers recently. Dr. Henry W. Coe of Portland was re-elected president; L. C. Wallace, vice-president and H. Rostad, cashier. The following were elected directors: Dr. Henry Coe, R. M. Tuttle, L. C. Wallace, Rose A. Strain, Dr. C. W. Bales, John Larsen, Dr. J. Ballard, Dr. F. M. Bell and H. Rostad. A surplus fund of $1,500 was created.

The New Borough National

Plainfield, March 11.—Decorators are at work putting the finishing touches on the interior of the Somerset Street building to serve as the home of the New Borough National of Plainfield, N. J., which will be opened at an early date with a capitalization of $50,000.

The Aliceville State Bank

The new Aliceville (Kan.) State Bank has elected the following officers: W. M. Hinkle, president; C. W. Rudolph, vice-president, and F. M. Ferguson, cashier.

New Building and Loan Law

Washington, March 7.—Shortly before adjournment Congress passed a bill authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to cause examination to be made into the condition of any building and loan association located or doing business in the District of Columbia. The bill provides for at least one report a year to be made to the Comptroller according to any form he may desire, and authorizes him to take possession of any company or association whenever in his judgment it is insolvent or is knowingly violating the laws under which such company is incorporated, and to liquidate the same in the manner provided in the laws of the United States in respect to national banks.

The bill also provides that: "Any misappropriation of any of the money of any corporation or company, formed under or availing itself of the privileges of this act, or of any building or loan association located or doing business in the District of Columbia, or any money, funds or property intrusted to any such corporation, company or association, shall be held to be larceny and shall be punished as such under the laws of said District."

As yet Comptroller Murray has not received a copy of the statute as enacted, but he expects it early this week. He will take no action in this direction until he has been informed of the official wording of the law.

District Commissioner Macfarland has been greatly interested in the passage of this bill, as he thinks it will give the building and loan associations of the District of Columbia a better rating than before. The bill was first proposed by the District Commissioners and former Comptroller of the Currency Ridgley aided them in getting the movement started.

A Day in the Calendar Department

The First National of Joliet sent out certificates with the November Banker stating that a calendar had been deposited for the bearer and might be secured upon presentation of the certificate. Nearly 5,000 certificates were returned.

Enter a young woman stylishly dressed:

"Good morning, is this where you cash these certificates?"

"Yes, just put your name on the back."

"Papa keeps his account here; could I get one for him, too?"

"Certainly, what is his office address?"

"Oh, well—I'll only take one. I thought you only gave one in a family. That's why I asked."

Small Boy:

Kansas City

The new building of the South Texas National of Houston is designed to be a real temple of finance. It is to be for the bank alone with every nook and corner, cranny and alcove devoted to the one single use.

It is announced that the contract for construction may be let soon. Already temporary quarters have been secured.

Whether or not the front of the two-story structure is to be of marble remains to be determined. Upon that question the element of cost rests but, regardless of the material, the directors now engaged in determining the details of the work, propose to raise a banking home as fine as any in the South.

The new building will have a front of 50 feet on Main Street and may be set back in the lot. Great columns will rise before the broad entrance way and to the roof over the two high stories.

Within, the marble and mosaic of a modern banking room will be installed. Upon through the center the way will probably be clear to a glass roof through which a softened light may penetrate to all the offices and cages on the lower floor.

Altogether the South Texas National building, when it is completed, is planned as one of beauty rather than of size. Of course it will be fireproof with giant vaults.

Work on First National Bank Building

High in air above the steel beams and the spiderweb of the steel frame of the new First National annex, of Houston, a celebration was held on Saturday afternoon. It came after a record in hard work that sent the topmost support in its socket and left it riveted home. The flag fluttered from the highest point.

Astride and balanced over a keg of beer two men swung skyward just before the celebration. They were on the refreshment committee and were pulled aloft by the great hoist that has been used in lifting steel to place.

A hundred feet above the ground they hung for some minutes while the side swing to the adjoining roof was being negotiated. Hundreds of people on the streets below, stood watching.

Finally the ropes were properly adjusted and the men with their precious burden were dropped lightly to the roof of the main building.

There the other workmen were gathered. Sandwiches had been provided to go with the liquid refreshments and during the supper hour the force of men who have reared the frame of steel played high in air in celebration of an event in the course of their work.

Oklahoma State Banks

Individual deposits in Oklahoma state banks increased more than $5,700,000 in the seventy days from November 27th to February 5th, bringing the total deposits in state banks to $35,160,714, as shown by the consolidated statement given out by Bank Commissioner Young. In that period the number of state banks increased from 546 to 574, and a part of the gain in state deposits is due to the conversion of thirteen national banks into state institutions. This item adds more than a million dollars. The increase in state bank deposits in less than a year has been more than 17 million dollars.

A year ago the national banks in the state had double the deposits of the state institutions, but now they are practically equal, the last national bank statement showing a little more than 36 million dollars in individual deposits. The report shows the average reserve held to be 49.3 per cent, the cash in state banks $2,973,453 and the capital stock $8,487,565.

The new Home State Bank of Tipton, Kan., has elected the following officers: A. Buech as president; Chas. Hobbie, vice-president, and E. F. Burns, cashier.

St. Louis County Trust Company

A man who gave his name as Fred Harding was arrested in the St. Louis County Trust Company's office Friday night and locked up at Clayton. Several boys were playing in the street in front of the building when they saw a man lying on the floor in the bank. Sheriff John Grueninger was notified that there was a man in the bank, and when he reached the building found the man asleep. The man was released from jail the day before. The janitor had neglected to lock the door of the building.

St. Louis Money Market

Pressure by interior banks for placing some of their surplus accumulations in St. Louis securities has materially decreased recently, indicating an improved demand at home for money. This is an incident of the spring farming preparations, and as these progress, St. Louis bankers expect to find in them opportunity for reducing their own heavy holdings of cash. As a rule, St. Louis bankers are not disposed to shade rates below 4 per cent.

The Worth State Bank of Fort Worth, Tex., has been organized and will start with a capital of $100,000. The stockholders are: Winfield Scott, J. B. Sikes, Marcus M. Mr. Chiles is at the head of a bank established about two years ago at Levasy. He had been for many years a stockholder in the First National of Independence. A meeting of the stockholders will be held soon for the purpose of filling vacancies made in the board of directors by these changes. ### The Ridgewood National

The organization committee of the new Ridgewood National of Brooklyn reports that so far $177,000 of the $200,000 capital has been subscribed and that the institution will be opened in about two weeks.

Clark Williams Acts

Clark Williams, state superintendent of banking, has promptly stopped a subterfuge to evade the law relating to trust company reserves. All trust companies have been notified by the state banking department that deposits taken subject to withdrawal "thirty-one days after demand or notice" are not, even when represented by certificates, exempt from the 15 per cent reserve called for by the new reserve law.

Superintendent Williams states: "Funds not payable within thirty days are exempt from the reserve requirement, if they are represented by a certificate which shows the amount of deposit, date of issue of the certificate, and the specific date when it shall be due or payable."

Certain companies had offered special rates for deposits taken with the understanding that the depositor should give thirty-one days' notice of withdrawal before checking out his balance, thus getting round, it was thought, the necessity for carrying reserves. Superintendent Williams has ruled otherwise, however, so that the practice has been stopped.

Bank Directors Organize

The directors of the National Reserve Bank of the City of New York organized this week by electing the following officers: President, W. O. Allison; chairman of the board, Erskine Hewitt; vice-president, Thomas J. Lewis and R. W. Jones, Jr.; cashier, George W. Adams; assistant cashier, Robert E. Minis; counsel, Sullivan & Cromwell. The bank opened temporarily at the office of the old Oriental Bank, No. 182 Broadway. It will remove to permanent quarters in the City Investing Building as soon as the fixtures and vaults can be installed.

Exports of Gold

New York bankers are of the opinion that exports of gold to Europe might be made profitably next week. The extreme ease of money in America was pointed out as one cause, while the sale of American securities by European investors was given as another. There is some uncertainty as to whether the gold will go to London or to Paris, but the former is taking all the yellow metal it can gather at present.

Margin Trading

The legal aspect of margin trading on the New York Stock Exchange was considered this week at a meeting of the Wall Street investigating committee at the Chamber of Commerce. Further discussion will be had at meetings to be held Friday and Saturday. The committee is progressing satisfactorily in its work of inquiry into the methods of trading on the various New York exchanges. It is confident of finishing its labors by the end of the month.

Two Bankers are Ordered Jailed

Convicted of the larceny of $4,000 from the Eagle Savings and Loan Company, of Brooklyn, Col. Edward E. Britton and Quarantine Commissioner Edward H. Schroeder, formerly president and second vice-president, respectively, of the institution, were given indeterminate sentences in Sing Sing prison by Justice Jaycox, in the supreme court, Brooklyn.

Col. Britton's sentence was from 14 months to four years and six months. Schroeder's sentence was identical, except that the minimum term was placed at one year.

Britton and Schroeder were charged in various indictments with the larceny of upwards of $48,000 from the Eagle Savings and Loan Company, in furtherance of their promotion of the Homestake Southern Extension Gold Mining Company, in South Dakota. Both men were active in social and civic affairs, and Col. Britton was once colonel of the One Hundred and Fourteenth regiment, national guard of New York.

Counsel for Messrs. Britton and Schroeder later obtained an order to show cause why a certificate of reasonable doubt should not issue in their case.

New York Savings Banks

Clark Williams, state superintendent of banks, announces that the reports of the savings banks of the state giving their condition on January 1st last showed that within a year the resources had increased $71,314,870, and the amount due depositors $16,044,237.

October 1, 1909, at least half of every deposit made with the superintendent of banks on the exchange of securities provided for in Section 15 of the law, shall consist of outstanding unmatured bonds of the state, unless the corporation making the deposit can satisfy the superintendent that such securities are not available. It also provides that banks shall before commencing business deposit stocks or bonds of the state, or of the United States, of at least 10 per cent of the capital stock of the bank in each case, and in cities of more than 800,000, not less than $50,000, or if the depositor is an individual banker, to the amount of not less than $1,000, of which deposits at least one-half shall, after October 1, 1909, consist of unmatured outstanding bonds of the state, unless the superintendent is satisfied that such securities are not available.

This is different from the present law in that there is no provision for the deposit of state bonds, and the minimum limit of securities to be deposited is securities bearing interest to the amount of $1,000, and that it is not now required that half the deposits shall be state securities.

Senator Hill also introduced a bill, amending the insurance law by providing that at least half of every deposit and every exchange deposit made with the Superintendent of Insurance by any insurance corporation after October 1, 1909, shall consist of outstanding unmatured bonds issued by the state, unless the corporation can satisfy the superintendent that such securities are not available.

The Bank of Coalinga

Coalinga, which is in the center of a great oil belt in California, has a very enterprising bank in the Bank of Coalinga. It was organized in August of 1905, and has shown a steady growth under its efficient management. At the close of business February 24th, the bank showed total resources of $829,195. It has a capital stock of $50,000. A. P. May is president, and H. C. Kerr, cashier. The directors are: A. P. May, president; Robert Hays Smith, vice-president; H. C. Kerr, cashier; I. L. Bryner, A. Kreyenhagen.

The Forgotten Millions

London, March 7.—The British treasury faces a big deficit and Chancellor Lloyd George says, in view of the coming budget, that he is looking for "new henroosts to rob," wherewith to meet the deficit.

Meanwhile there lies untapped a gold mine in the shape of unclaimed balances in the English banks. The aggregate is unknown, but banking experts estimate that, including cash, securities, jewelry, gold and silver plate, the unclaimed treasure amounts to at least 300 million dollars. The vast wealth has accumulated as a result of the deaths, disappearance or forgetfulness of depositors.

Several old banks like Coutts have been accumulating derelict 200 years. One has a dormant fund of 10 million dollars. Many fine bank buildings have been erected out of these unclaimed deposits. The bankers keep the amounts thus lying idle a profound secret and intend to fight any interference with them.

Merchants and Planters Bank of Warren

The Merchants and Planters Bank of Warren, Ark., in its latest statement shows total resources of $251,491. The deposits are $176,609. This enterprising bank is located in a district which ships more yellow pine lumber than any other point in the world. Warren also has three large saw mills, which have sufficient timber paid for to run them for twenty years. Carl Hollis is cashier of the Merchants and Planters Bank, and is well known in financial circles.

Southern Savings Bank

In its first statement of February 27th the Southern Savings Bank of Wadesboro, N. C., says: The net earnings of the bank is more than 15 per cent on the capital stock. We recommend a dividend of 6 per cent, and the setting aside of a surplus of two thousand dollars. The balance of profits to be held undivided.

In the start it was thought best to furnish the

H. C. KERR
Coalinga, Cal.
Cashier Bank of Coalinga bank with the best modern equipment, therefore you will notice that a comparatively large amount, considering the small amount of capital stock, has been invested in fixtures. But with these fixtures we are able to do better work than if we used the ordinary outfit that a small bank starts business with. We have invested in a number of articles that are permanent fixtures and fittings that do not usually go into a bank's outfit, but which has proven of greatest advantage, and aided to make, perhaps, the best financial showings of any bank, with the same amount of capital, within the period we have been in business.

We have put out more than one thousand little savings banks at a cost of less than one dollar and eighty cents each, whereas a number of other banks in the state have paid three dollars each. In this there has been a saving of more than one thousand two hundred dollars. In several ways we have planned to do good work at a smaller cost than is usually done by banking institutions.

We feel confident that the fine showing the Southern Savings Bank has made at the start will be kept up.

If all those interested will help us, as have some of the stockholders, we will be able to do even better than we have during the past year. We had to learn; the twelve months has been a good schooling.

Going before the banking world as newcomers, as strangers to all banks, we had to make acquaintance and friends. This takes time; old banks go slow with new neighbors. But the Southern Savings Bank has made some good friends among the best Southern bankers, especially in North Carolina and Virginia. And to these bankers we pledge that we will not forget those who have stood by us at the start.

Our bank is going to be a growing bank. We are not going to be what some persons would term a competitive bank, but rather an educational bank, a bank that would rather educate the people who have not put a dollar in a bank to be bankers instead of trying to induce those who have money in banks to change to our bank.

We have interested the young and the old. The Southern Savings Bank has more children depositors, more lady depositors, and more farmer depositors than any bank that has done business in North Carolina during the first year of its existence. Our depositors are not rich people; they are mostly working farmers, their wives, and children. These depositors will stay with us because we propose to make it to their interest to stay. We propose to treat them so they will want to be our customers for all time to come. It is our purpose to visit with them and have them visit us. This is not only to the interest of the Southern Savings Bank but is to the interest of every business man and citizen of Wadesboro. And these men of Wadesboro begin to realize this. Within the past few days some of the best merchants in the town have come to us and said, "You have not solicited our business, but we feel we ought to give you a little share of it, at least, so as to show that we appreciate what you have already accomplished for Wadesboro in the work you are doing for the farmers and their children." We haven't gone to the business men because we did not care to be placed in the position of soliciting the business that the other banks have had for years. But we want to say to these friends who have come to us, "We do appreciate your kindness and your words of encouragement, and we pledge you that we will do all we can to merit your good will. We will strive to so work with and for the farmers that they will feel it is to their interest to come to Wadesboro."

To a number of those who wanted to borrow money we had to say "no," because our capital was limited. After a while we will have more money to loan, and can be able to extend favors to many whom we would like to help at this time.

Some of our friends have told us we were too exacting as to the amount of security we required on loans we make. The money we have belongs to others, and under no circumstances can we loan it unless the security is the very best. If it was our money we would act differently, but it is the money of women, children, and hard-working farmers, as well as the business men of Wadesboro; therefore we must see to it that no one gets a dollar unless we have security that cannot fail. We hope all persons will agree that we are doing right in being very particular. Respectfully submitted, W. M. Morton, cashier.

Here is a Strong Statement

The Winton Six is the best purchase on the market.

We make that statement absolutely without qualification. We fully realize the obligation upon us, as a reputable house, to limit our statements to provable truth. We realize that, since we have had a longer experience in manufacturing gasoline cars than has any other American company, the public will not excuse on our part any bombastic statement that might be excusable if made by an inexperienced house.

Therefore, when we say the Winton Six is absolutely the best purchase on the market, we expect you to make no allowances whatever. We stand prepared to prove what we say.

We want you to know about the self-starting, sweet-running, six-cylinder because it has the peculiar distinction of being the only six the world over to which a mammoth plant, capable of producing a half dozen types simultaneously, is exclusively devoted.

WINTON SIX

We abandoned four-cylinder manufacture nearly two years ago. We could not conscientiously sell you a four (except as a second), because the Winton Six is so much better than the best four.

We are confident that if other makers could equal the excellence of the Winton Six they, too, would abandon fours and make sixes exclusively.

Since sixes are superior to fours (as we can easily prove to your satisfaction), and since the Winton Six is the only six whose maker has absolute and undivided faith in it, we suggest to you the advisability of finding out the whys and wherefores of this car before you become seriously engaged in the purchase of a new automobile.

Milwaukee Bank Clearings

The bank clearings in Milwaukee for the month of February show an increase of $3,589,000 as compared with the total clearings in February a year ago, and a decline of $1,175,000 as compared with those of January, 1909. The total clearings last month were $48,175,000, against $44,585,000 for February, 1908, and $49,350,000 in January of this year. The balances, last month, were $5,878,000. The clearings last week, with one holiday, were $9,794,000 and the balances, $721,000.

Wisconsin Trust Companies

The trust companies and the banks of the state have come together and in the future the trust companies will discontinue certain banking phases of their business which the bankers say infringe on the banking business. The principal concession made by the trust companies is a discontinuance of check accounts and in the future they will accept deposits payable only at a definite designated date. The decision was announced at a hearing of bankers and trust company representatives before the committee on banks and insurance.

Senator Page's bill providing for an additional judge for the Milwaukee judicial circuit will be recommended for concurrence in the assembly.

The new judge will be elected in April and will take office in May.

Wisconsin Bank Bills

Bankers of Milwaukee came to Madison in force one day last week to attend the joint hearing of assembly and senate committees on banks and banking. James K. Ilsley, president of the Marshall & Ilsley Bank of Milwaukee, of which J. H. Puelicher is cashier, was among the visitors.

Bills upon which the joint hearing was held included measures to the number of about a dozen relating to many phases of bank and trust company business. One by Senator Husting provides heavy penalties for circulating false statements regarding the standing of any bank. Others related to loans to bank officials, while some of the bills increase the powers of the state bank department.

Express Company Not to Retire

"The United States Express Company not only will not retire from the Milwaukee field, but it is now completing arrangements by which it will give this city exactly the same daily service to and from the east, west and southwest, that it has always given," said T. E. McDonnell, general superintendent of that company, who arrived in the city last week on important business.

Two special express cars are now being built for this company, to be operated on the Chicago & Milwaukee Electric road. Additional cars will follow as rapidly as required.

The official announcement of the appointment of C. R. Teas as superintendent of the Wells-Fargo Company Express in Milwaukee has been made from the general offices in New York. The official appointment of C. C. Bacon as general agent in Milwaukee has also been made.

Supt. Teas announced the appointment of H. L. Bigelow of St. Louis, and John Westlake, at present traveling agent for the company, as route agents with headquarters at Milwaukee.

Insurance Suits in Hands of Attorney-General

In the matter of the request of Former Secretary of State Walter L. Houser for permission to bring suit in the name of the state against former insurance commissioners for the collection of fees retained by them, State Treasurer Dahl in a letter made public, says: "The matter is now in the hands of the attorney-general."

The City National of Oshkosh

The City National of Oshkosh reports capital of $200,000; surplus $45,000 and deposits of $600,000. George Bauman is president, J. E. Morgan, vice-president and A. T. Hennig, cashier.

The State Bank of Rice Lake

The State Bank of Rice Lake will erect a bank building in the near future.

Supreme Court of Minnesota Decision

The Supreme Court of Minnesota held, in the case of Shaw et al. vs. Staigh, that shares of stock in a corporation issued and sold as full paid stock but for a sum less than the parvalue were not void, but that the agreement between the holder and the corporation that it should be considered and treated as paid in full was voidable as to the creditors of the corporation. The court further held that the holder of such stock though he paid therefor less than the par value, might maintain an action to protect such rights as accrued to him as a stockholder.

The Tri-State Convention

The following letter has been received from the New Orleans Clearing House Association: Referring to your publication of February 27, 1909, on page 15 mentioning State Convention dates: The Louisiana Bankers Association have agreed to meet May 13th and 14th instead of May 14 and 15, 1909.

The associations in Alabama and Mississippi will meet at Columbus, Miss., and Mobile, Ala., on same dates; namely, May 11 and 12, 1909.

Changes have been made in these dates by these two associations, to enable these associations to accept an invitation that has been rendered them to be entertained in New Orleans during the session of the Louisiana Bankers Association.

A similar invitation is on the way to the Texas Bankers Association, which meets at Houston, Texas, on May 11th and 12th.

In and Around Pittsburgh

By
LATIMER T. LAWTON

Ezra M. Sayers, Waynesburg, oldest resident, and the best known lawyer and capitalist in Greene County, died at his home in Waynesburg last week, aged 97 years.

Mr. Sayers was for years president of the closed Farmers and Drovers Bank, retiring seven years ago. His interest in the welfare of that institution was so well known that when it failed two years ago the fact was kept from him, and he died ignorant that the bank had been wrecked and its former cashier, J. B. F. Rinehart, sent to the penitentiary.

Group Five, P. B. A., Meeting

The annual meeting of Group Five, of the Pennsylvania Bankers Association, was held last week at the Harrisburg Club. J. T. Brenneman, treasurer of the Lancaster Trust Company, was elected president, and Al. K. Thomas, cashier of the East End Bank, secretary-treasurer. The executive committee will be composed of Donald McCormick, of the Dauphin Deposit Company, this city; J. P. Nissley, cashier of the Hummelstown National; Robert L. Myers, president of the Cumberland Valley Bank, Lemoyne; H. P. Moyer, treasurer of the Farmers Trust Company, Lebanon, and W. H. Gelbach, cashier of the Citizens National, Waynesboro.

The "Business Monthly"

The March issue of the Business Monthly, published by the First National of Pittsburgh, gives a picture showing the present condition of the new bank building. Construction has proceeded rapidly through the winter months. The business outlook is treated from a variety of viewpoints, the optimistic predominating.

Pittsburgh Bond Market

With the exception of Safe Deposit and Trust the bank stocks which appeared in the market last week were weaker. It is explained that the public has not yet taken up this class of securities, and the buying has been for investment. As long as that continues little departure from former prices is expected.

The Grove City National

The Grove City National, which recently took over the Grove City Savings and Trust Company, is preparing for the erection of a new bank building on the most prominent corner in the town. Messrs. Charles & Bailey, architects of Oil City, Pa., have been employed to prepare plans and specifications, and it is the intention to erect one of the finest and best equipped banking rooms in Mercer County.

Gets Extreme Mercy of the Court

H. W. Gittings, former manager of the Eastern Securities Company, of the Farmers Bank Building, was convicted of a charge of embezzling $6,500. He was fined $25 and costs and sentenced to serve 60 days in jail. The jury recommended the extreme mercy of the court.

"The Banker"

The March number of The Banker (The Pennsylvania Bankers Association paper) appeared this week, and as usual contains much that is of interest to all who are connected with the financial community. The issue has an excellent picture of James M. Young, cashier of the Second National, and the new chairman of Group Eight, Pennsylvania Bankers Association.

Robinson Brothers' Monthly Circular

Robinson Brothers' monthly circular says: "There are two unknown factors in the present situation which must finally determine whether 1909 will duplicate 1897 in the trend of business and speculation. These are (1) the volume of business that will follow the cut in iron and steel prices, and (2) the crops. The increase in tonnage should be proportionately as large in 1909 as in 1897, for the reason that while it is true the country's needs have not been so long accumulating as in the former period, the use of iron and steel has been multiplying much more rapidly and the per capita requirements are greater to-day than ever before. As to the crops, it is too early as yet to form any reliable judgment, although the latest information concerning winter wheat is more favorable than might have been expected, considering the drawbacks at the time of planting.

First National of Lansford

Baird W. Snyder, Jr., has been elected a director of the First National of Lansford, to take the place of G. W. Davies, of Centralia.

Elected a Director

George M. McCandless, of W. G. McCandless & Sons, has been elected a director of the Commonwealth Trust Company.

First National of Westchester

E. G. Cloud, of East Marlborough, has been chosen a director of the First National of Westchester, in place of the late B. G. Walton.

Citizens Dime Savings Bank

The Citizens Dime Savings Bank with a capital of $10,000 is being organized at Lebanon.

Bank Officials under Oath

The inquisition of prominent Pittsburghers by District Attorney Blakeley, which was started last week in an endeavor to secure further information on which to base additional prosecutions for alleged councilmanic bribery, is being continued. T. Hart Given, president of the Farmers National; J. W. Fleming, cashier of the same bank, and E. M. Jennings, president of the Columbia National, have been summoned to the district attorney's office, and under oath questioned one at a time.

A score of other bankers and business men will be called.

Bank Clerk in Jail

A mixup of foreign bank drafts, which cost $34 in cable tolls to untangle, led to the arrest of Branko Hafner, a clerk in the bank of P. V. Obieunas & Co., South Twelfth and Carson streets, and he was committed to jail in default of $1,000 bail by Alderman John A. Martin.

The Bank of Kentland (Ind.)

The Bank of Kentland, a private institution, owned by George D. Rider, has been absorbed by the Discount and Deposit State Bank. Mr. Rider disposed of his bank in order to give his attention to the Kentland electric light and artificial ice plants, of which he is manager and director. He is also interested in the Rider-Lewis automobile factory, at Muncie.

The state of Washington received $14,107 interest from the banks in which state funds were deposited during 1908. This represents 2 per cent per annum on the average daily balances.

ARTHUR REYNOLDS, President
JOHN H. BLAIR, Vice-President A. J. ZWART, Cashier

Des Moines, March 11.—Up at Stratford, Iowa, there has been established what is probably the only high school bank in Iowa. Professor G. W. Rensburg is the founder of the institution which is designed to teach children to save and to make them familiar with banking methods. Professor Rensburg has issued this statement which gives his plan in detail: "Realizing the importance of the principle, 'early in life begin to save,' we have established the Stratford High School Bank where all school children may deposit their pennies. Nels Sandell has been elected president and Miss Florence Rodine, cashier. At the close of the school year we will go with all the pupils who have 50 cents or more and see to its deposit in the State Bank of Stratford.

"To the people: We suggest that you encourage the children of the school to save. By this we do not mean for you to give them money, but have you not some work that you can hire them to do?

"To the children: Start an account and watch it grow. You will be agreeably surprised at the results. You can start an account with one penny. At the close of the year I will add to the deposit of every depositor in the High School Bank."

Financial Affairs in Good Shape

March has opened in Iowa with financial affairs in first-class condition. In an interview, Charles Martin, of the People's Savings, said: "March has come to be accepted as annual settlement day in Iowa by farmers. The crop year is supposed to begin March 1st, and for that reason all transfers of farm land sold during the year are effective on that date. Each recurring year there is added to the farm lands of Iowa an appreciable value which is reflected by the sales. Sales as shown by the records of the county recorder in Polk County have thus far broken every record so far as valuations go. I may state that premising judgment upon the amount of business that has thus far gone through the People's Savings Bank and its correspondents since March 1st, this year gives promise of breaking the record in the value of farm land transfers throughout the state. One of our country banks did a business in this line for the first four days of the month that represents a total of $800,000."

Brand New Bank Guaranty Bill

A brand new bank guaranty bill has appeared in the Iowa legislature. Representative Anderson, of Hamilton County, introduced it. It provides for the organization of the "Iowa Bank Deposits Guarantee Association." The capital stock must be at least $250,000. The governor, secretary of state, treasurer of state, and auditor of state are ex officio directors. In addition there are five other directors to be chosen annually. The bill provides that each bank belonging to the association must hold at least 1 per cent of the capital stock and must pay an annual premium of at least one-fourth of 1 per cent on average daily deposits. Members of the association may not pay more than 3 per cent on deposits. The bill provides strict penalties for any bank claiming to belong to the association and advertising itself in that light when it is not a member. In the meantime the committees on banks and banking are considering other bank deposit bills and have not thus far reported upon any of them.

Legislative News

During the week, the house of representatives has passed the Moore bill, compelling all surety, fidelity, and guaranty companies to deposit $25,000 as a guaranty fund before doing business in Iowa. A lively fight was anticipated on the measure, but it failed to materialize and the bill passed almost without opposition.

The senate passed the Secley bill providing that state and savings banks shall follow the same method in dissolution.

The bill providing for placing of public funds at interest has been amended and reported for passage. It provides now that interest shall be paid on 90 per cent of the average daily balance, the bill requiring banks to pay 2 per cent for the use of the county funds. The 90 per cent feature was a compromise over the suggestion of Representative Moore who wanted the bill amended so that interest should be paid on the minimum deposit during the month.

Surety Bond Companies

Surety bond companies have been seeking to induce some members of the legislature to introduce a bill to permit these companies to meet together and fix rates. Vice-President Towner, of the American Surety Company of New York, has been in Des Moines superintending the work of local agents along this line. The Greater Des Moines committee has a bill which would give cities under the commission form of government a right to own stock in and control street car companies, gas, water and electric companies. The city council of Des Moines has been trying to effect a settlement of a franchise dispute with the street car company on the basis of the Chicago plan, and it is claimed that legislation along the line proposed by the booster committee will be necessary to permit the traction problem to be thus settled.

Oldest Living Resident in Iowa

Representative John A. Cousins is said to be the oldest living resident in Iowa and is being extensively featured by the newspapers of the state. Mr. Cousins is president of two banks, one at Plainfield and the other at New Hartford. Mr. Cousins was born April 15, 1837, near Dubuque. He has thus spent his entire 71 years in the state of Iowa, and it may be noted in passing, he carries his years about as well as any man of his age alive.

Oats Attracting Attention

Iowa farmers have always contended that corn is Iowa's favorite crop and that corn cultivation should be the favorite study for the Iowa farmer. But this year oats are attracting some little attention. Special oats trains are being run over various Iowa railroads, and farmers all along the line are being given lectures upon the proper cultivation and seeding of oats. Eight towns were visited this week, and immense crowds turned out all along the line. However, the need of good roads was never more apparent for many farmers were almost unable to attend the lectures because of the condition of the highways.

Des Moines Bank Clearings

Des Moines banks are coming into their own, and each week is showing a remarkable increase in business over the corresponding week of last year. The bank clearings for the week ending March 6th were $6,485,030.23, as against $5,062,360.48 for the corresponding week in 1908. This is a gain of $1,420,669.

Banking Notes

Iowa bankers are interested in the recent conviction in Corydon, Indiana, of John A. Lawrence alias John A. Brown on the charge of defrauding bankers by forging checks. Lawrence worked in Waterloo and other Iowa cities and was shot while trying to escape from the officers in Waterloo when he was about to be arrested for Indiana forgeries.

New London is to have a fourth bank, according to reports. Farmers in that vicinity are back of the institution, and at a meeting held recently $22,000 of stock was subscribed which it is thought insures the furthering of the plans.

The Iowa National of Des Moines has had on display five ears of corn that cost the owner, A. Plummer, of Altoona, just $500. Mr. Plummer took first sweepstakes prize on the ears at a corn show and sold them for $82 and an additional $25 which the Iowa National had added to the prize to give the entertainment zest. After he had sold them, Mr. Plummer decided he wanted the ears back, and it cost him just $500 to regain possession of them.

Articles of incorporation have been filed with the state auditor for the Bettendorf Savings at Bettendorf. The capital stock is $25,000. The president is P. W. Reek; vice-president, Frank C. Liebengartner; cashier, John Brownlee; assistant cashier, Ed Dougherty.

Dr. C. H. Smith, stockholder in the First National at Mason City, died last week. Out of respect to his memory, every bank in the city was closed for an hour during the funeral.

Work is progressing rapidly on the new building for the Farmers Loan and Trust Building at Sioux City. Some of the tenants have already commenced to move in. The structure is one of the finest buildings in Sioux City and a credit to the institution which is building it.

Keokuk County issued bonds for $110,000 for the erection of a new court house. They were sold to George M. Bechtel, of Davenport. The bonds sold at par, the purchaser paying all expenses of issuance and attorney fees.

It seems assured that the farmers in the vicinity of Alta are to organize a third bank. It will be known as the Farmers State, and the capital stock will be $25,000. Sixty shares have been subscribed. The other banks in Alta are James F. Toy's Bank and the Alta State.

Bonds to the amount of $200,000 were voted upon at the school election in Des Moines Monday. The bonds are issued for the purpose of securing three new school buildings for the city.

The First State Savings at Ionia has filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state. The capital stock is $20,000. A. H. Shaffer is president; W. G. Shaffer, vice-president; Otto Koerth, cashier; H. H. Shaffer and A. H. Shaffer, directors.

The Comptroller of the Currency has authorized the organization of the First National at Conrad. The capital stock is $25,000. The officers are T. L. Evans, president; M. E. Martin, vice-president; E. Grant Hurlburt, cashier; directors, A. B. Reynolds and M. B. V. Evans.

J. S. Johnston, president of the bank at St. Charles, was a visitor to the Des Moines banks one day last week.

Findley Anderson, cashier of the Citizens at Colfax and Miss Ethel Whittiker, teacher in the Colfax schools, were married March 4th. They will make their home at Colfax.

James P. Porter, a Reinbeck banker, chaperoned twenty Iowans on a trip in his private cars to Bakersfield, Cal., where Mr. Porter is greatly interested in irrigated lands.

The Citizens National of Des Moines has disposed of property on Walnut Street, near Fourth Street, in Des Moines, to L. Oransky. The price was $25,000 or about $1,000 per front foot.

E. J. Curtin

Boston National Banks

Deposits of the Boston national banks have shown a considerable falling off during the past four weeks, the decrease the past week alone amounting to nearly $6,000,000. Total deposits of the 19 clearing house banks now amount to $253,066,000 as compared with $267,649,000 on January 22d, the highest point on record, a direct decrease of $1,500,000 or about 5 per cent. Exactly a year ago this week deposits of the Boston banks were at the lowest point of the panic period, the aggregate at that time being about $202,469,000.

Owing to the recent recalling of government deposits, total public deposits in Boston have been decreased to $772,000. A year ago, the total government deposits in Boston banks were nearly $6,500,000. Of the $772,000 still held, all but $93,000 is held by the First, Shawmut and Merchants, the three regular government depositaries. The remainder is distributed in small amounts among eight temporary depositaries.

Since the currency law went into effect, June 15th, last, temporary depositary banks have been obliged to pay an interest charge of 1 per cent on public deposits. Regular depositary banks which are primarily used for the convenience of government disbursing officers pay no interest on active government accounts.

Sound Business Sense

A little chap in Philadelphia, whose father is a prominent merchant, and as such never loses an opportunity to descant upon the virtues of advertising, one day asked his mother: "May Lucy and I play at keeping store in the front room?"

"Yes," assented the mother, "but you must be very, very quiet."

"All right," said the youngster, "we'll pretend we don't advertise."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Notable New Books

Among the notable new books, just from the press, in fact, may be mentioned "Aline from the Woods," by Nevil G. Henshaw, published by the Outing Publishing Co., New York.

This tale of life in Louisiana is most interesting. The heroine is delightful. Through it all there is a blending of romance with the poetry of the Louisiana forests, which is felt in all its eloquence, while picturesque types of Creole characters and vivid glimpses of plantation life add rich variety to its coloring. In structure it is all that could be wished.

It is in two parts. The first sets forth the strange origin of its heroine, whose dead Arcadian mother had had a life of vicissitude. The prying postmaster at Landry, the obscure spot near where her widowed father had inexplicably come to live, has fruitlessly concentrated his curiosity upon the meager family, and, so the story opens. The second tells how Aline goes to reside in the Grand Woods, to be brought up in its isolation. A ring, however, marks her identity—happily for her eventual career; and before leaving she meets a youthful cavalier who, true to knightly tradition, rescues her from the affronts of a handsome Spanish-featured boy. The one is Carey Gordon, the other Numa Le Blanc, characters of whom we, in the second part of the story, are to see more; for in after years, Carey, a planter, and the still handsome Numa, a cut-throat, they are rivals for the hand of a forest-bred girl known simply as Aline—"Aline of the Grand Woods"; a situation which now in its various complications is reaching adjustment.

The same discriminating publishers have brought out a novel of the simple life entitled "By the Shores of Arcady." Isabel Graham Eaton is the author who has the secret of mingling the love, the art, and the joy of living, in her beautiful characters. The true graces of the simple life are best known to the artist, and "By the Shores of Arcady" is a pleasant indorsement of the fact. It is the tale of "a painter woman," as the author prefers to express it, and the longing for the simple life is the first one considered in her story. Tired of all the strain and din and conventionality of city life and society, this painter woman flees to the quiet haunts of simple folk in Maine, and there seeks rest and refreshment, and subjects for her brush. She finds in the end much more than this, for romance of the purest type encounters her in the character and history of other mortals, who, like herself, have sought solitude and concealment in the Maine woods.

Dana Estes & Co., Boston, has issued a splendid new novel—"Hilary Thornton," by Hubert Wales. Mr. Wales has advanced by strides, and not always without controversy, as to his ideals. In this new novel the originality of the theme is not less apparent than the splendid courage and consistency with which the author carries it to an inevitable termination. It has never been a reproach to Mr. Wales that his novels lack the element of human passion, of human strength, and human weakness. In "Hilary Thornton," super-added to a story of piercing emotion, are conceptions of public life and private duty, which, though they touch upon matters of opinion, do not tend to lessen the power and interest and vitality of the story, which is better expressed, better thought out, and more mature than Mr. Wales' previous books, and which can be conscientiously and, indeed, warmly recommended.

One of the "great books," as so few are known, is the "54-40 or Fight," by Emerson Hough, published by the Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis. The title sounds a bit queer to those who may not remember that it was the American slogan in the famous Oregon boundary dispute, during the Tyler and Polk administrations. Calhoun and the Baroness von Ritz are the chief characters in the story. Great nations are playing for a great strike—Texas and Oregon. Not so greatly regarded then, perhaps, but now surely important enough to warrant and realize a romancer's wildest dreams.

Calhoun's secretary, who is the narrator, makes early acquaintance with the reputed secret agent and spy of the British minister, the dazzling baroness, who is England's real envoy.

More interesting even than Calhoun is the remarkable and captivating baroness. From the moment of her entrance she has us at her feet—literally, in a sense, for in the toe of her dainty white satin slipper lies concealed an ambassador's note, the finding of which may change the fate of Texas and disturb the peace of Europe.

Seldom in fiction does a character pique the reader's curiosity like the Baroness Helen von Ritz. About her is the aroma of fascination and personality, of love and power, of ceremony and candles, but above all, of mystery. Fascination attaches to her origin, to her purposes, to her wit, to the domination which she wields over great men and small, to the sumptuous setting in which she places the jewel of her beauty.

But she lost out, owing to the valor and intelligence of the faithful priest, secretary to Calhoun. This is a novel and a history, both excellent, rather than an historical novel.

V. E. Nichols

V. E. Nichols, cashier of the First National Bank of Englewood, this city, returned last week from a business trip to New York City. Mr. Nichols was in a position to meet several of the big New York financiers, all of whom were most cordial to him.

Mr. Nichols says there was a great deal of valuable knowledge he secured in regard to Eastern securities, which can only be gotten at first hand. He speaks in most complimentary terms of the wonders of the metropolis. Still he admits he was glad to get back to Chicago and says that he saw nothing in the East that surpasses the new bank building in either commodiousness of arrangement or in beauty.

Madison County Banks

Madison county, Illinois, is very comfortable financially.

The number of banks has trebled in eight years. The deposits likewise have multiplied by three during that period.

In January, 1901, there were eight banks in the county, national and state, and two private banks. The total deposits of the national and state banks at the preceding calls aggregated $2,934,656.40.

The statements published recently show twenty banks, with national and state charters, and there are four private banks in the county, which are not required to make reports. The deposits of the national and state banks, as shown by the statements, aggregate $8,674,083.51.

The four private banks in the county have deposits estimated at $330,000, so that the grand total of deposits will exceed nine million dollars.

Nathan T. Folwell has been elected a director of the Philadelphia Casualty Company, in place of Robert B. Armstrong, resigned.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., March 11.—James C. Cunningham, secretary and treasurer of the Union Trust Company, announces that the corporation will increase its capital to $500,000 on March 15th, when the savings department will be opened in the basement of the Marble bank building, the upper floors of which are now occupied by the Old National. The savings bank will have a capital of $500,000, making it the largest of its kind in the Northwest. A provision of the state law makes stockholders in the banks and trust companies responsible for sums equal to the amount of stock held by them, and thus the new department will virtually have a guaranty fund of $1,000,000. Many prominent financial and business men in the Spokane country are directors and stockholders in the company. The bank will encourage savings in that deposits of $1 or more will be accepted, but it will not do a commercial business. D. W. Twohy, president of the Old National, is head of the company.

Capital Increases

Capital increases amounting to $2,400,000 are announced by banks in Spokane since the beginning of the year. This shows in a way the remarkable commercial expansion of what is known as the Inland Empire of the Pacific Northwest. Capital increases were made by these institutions: Old National, $500,000; Traders' Trust, $500,000; Union Trust, $320,000; Fidelity National, $300,000; Exchange National, $250,000; Spokane and Eastern Trust, $200,000; Washington Trust, $150,000; Traders' National, $130,000; Scandinavian-American, $50,000. This addition to banking funds and the fact that Spokane has been made a reserve city, is making this a strong financial center, and as a result scores of country banks, which formerly kept their accounts in coast banks, have transferred their business to Spokane. It may also be mentioned that Spokane is the only city in the Northwest having two $1,000,000 banks. These institutions are ready to finance any legitimate undertaking and they are assisting materially in the development of the country with an area much larger than the cultivated lands in the New England states.

Will Become Candidate for Mayor

Charles M. Fassett, head of the C. M. Fassett Company, and cousin to J. Sloat Fassett, congressional representative of New York, has announced to a committee of bankers and business men, headed by Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National, that he will become a candidate as mayor of Spokane. The committee called on Mr. Fassett on his return from a trip to New York, a week ago, urging him to make the race as successor to C. Herbert Moore, elected on a municipal reform ticket in 1907. His only pledge is an honest, economical and fearless administration. Mayor Moore was a member of the committee which invited Mr. Fassett to become a candidate, others being W. D. Vincent, cashier of the Old National Bank; Thomas H. Brewer, vice-president of the Exchange National Bank; James C. Cunningham, secretary and treasurer of the Union Trust Company; W. S. McCrea of McCrea & Merryweather; Robert E. Strahorn, president of the North Coast Railway Company; Robert B. Paterson, Spokane Dry Goods Company; T. F. Cartier Van Dissel, president of the Phoenix Lumber Company; Thomas Hooker, business manager of the chronicle; David Brown, president of the Hazelwood Company; J. C. Barline, president of the Washington Mill Company and head of the Y. M. C. A.; F. E. Goodall, president of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce; Gordon C. Corbaley, formerly president of the 150,000 Club; C. L. King and D. M. Thompson. Mr. Fassett was born in December, 1858, at Elmira, N. Y., whence he went to Nevada, serving one term in the legislature and two terms as chief clerk of the assembly. He lived at Reno 10 years and came to Spokane 20 years ago. He is chairman of the promotion committee of the Chamber of Commerce and head of the city library commission.

Prominent Visitors Expected

H. L. Moody, a member of the executive committee of the Seventeenth National Irrigation Congress, which will meet in Spokane the week of August 9th, who has just returned from a trip of 15,000 miles in the eastern, southern, southwestern and Pacific coast states in the interest of that organization, has submitted a report to the local board of control, headed by R. Insinger, manager of the Hypotheek Bank of Spokane, that prominent bankers and railroad presidents and investors from various parts of the east are coming to the congress. Among these are Frank A. Vanderbilt, president of the City National Bank of New York; N. W. Harris, of Chicago; W. C. Brown, president of the New York Central lines; James J. Hill, chairman of the board of directors of the Great Northern Railway Company; Howard Elliott, president of the Northern Pacific Railway Company; Louis W. Building operations in Spokane in February amounted to $519,210 as against $492,470 the same time last year. The estimated expenditure for the first two months this year is $792,370 as against $603,077 in 1908.

"The Journal of a Neglected Wife"

The latest book from the press of B. W. Dodge & Company, of New York, is "The Journal of a Neglected Wife," by Mabel Herbert Urner. The selling price is $1.10 net. Readers of magazines are familiar with Mrs. Urner's previous work, but this is her first book. The author says that this story of a wife's lonesome tragedy was drawn out of the hearts of other women, from the lives of those who have suffered and found relief in confession. The following interesting problems are suggested by this remarkable book:

What are the emotions of the wife who watches her husband's love slipping out of her life?

What soul-tragedy lies behind the composure of the wife who sets her husband free at his request?

Does bravery or cowardice move the neglected, unloved wife to set her husband free?

Will that freedom, obtained at such terrific price, make for the good or ill of society?

Is it possible for a man to love two women equally, and not sacrifice the one love to the other?

The Origin of Bank Checks

A Frenchman quoted in a Paris letter of the London Globe tells of the origin of the present day bank check. It is well known, he says, that the fog is at times so dense in London that everything is blotted out. That is the opportunity for the marauder, and he is not slow in turning it to his profit. At the beginning of the last century the attacks made upon bank messengers and others became so numerous that tradesmen and manufacturers began to think seriously of devising some means of protecting themselves. They, therefore, invented the check, which enables a man to go about with little ready money and renders useless the indiscreet exploration of a pocketbook.

Banks in Our Island Territories

A report submitted by the Comptroller of the Currency indicates that the banking institutions in the insular possessions of the United States are, generally speaking, in a satisfactory condition. Ten reporting banks in the Philippines had at the date of the Comptroller's statement resources amounting to $21,816,753, an increase of $2,256,341 in a year. Deposits, public and private, held by these institutions amounted to $9,711,688 and outstanding circulation is $784,443. The paid-up capital of the banks was $2,161,255, and their surplus and profits amounted to $1,364,255. During the year under review these banks experienced an increase of $1,308,878 in loans and discounts and an increase of $45,247 in surplus and profits.

The experiment with postal savings banks in the Philippines shows some interesting results. At the close of the last fiscal year the 245 institutions of that character in the islands had resources amounting to $530,000. The accounts numbered 5,389. About fifty per cent of the deposits belonged to Americans and forty-four per cent to Filipinos, the remainder being divided among other Asiatics and Europeans. The postal banks are seemingly appreciated somewhat more highly by Americans in the islands than by the natives, whom they were specially designed to benefit.

The ten banking institutions of Porto Rico, one of which is a national bank, had an aggregate capital of $2,125,514 and total resources of $10,417,624. Their deposits amounting to $5,940,587. The resources of these banks have increased more than 100 per cent since 1902, and their condition affords impressive testimony to the upbuilding influence of American influence in Porto Rican affairs.

The Comptroller's statement deals with seven territorial and private banks and four national banks in Hawaii. These institutions reported a total capital of $3,652,500, total resources of $9,663,397 and total deposits of $4,705,559.

It will be noted that banking conditions in our insular territory are such as to invite still closer commercial relations between those territories and the United States. Banking interests in all these islands are conducted intelligently and honestly, and considering the somewhat meagre assistance they have received in the way of fostering legislation by Congress, their showing is highly creditable.

A. E. Rice Dead

Augustus E. Rice, president of the Croghan Bank & Savings Company of Fremont, O., died Monday afternoon after a several weeks' illness with pleurisy which extended all over his system, combined with the trouble brought on by a weak heart. Mr. Rice was 62 years old and for the greater portion of his life had been a resident of Fremont, prominently identified with the business interests and the growth of the city and its welfare. He was one of the most prominent bankers in the country and at the time of his death was president of the Ohio Bankers Association. Mr. Rice came to Fremont March 22, 1865, and entered the First National where he served for many years. In 1882 Mr. Rice was made cashier of the Fremont Savings Bank and continued to serve in that capacity until July, 1888, when he organized the Croghan Bank & Savings Co., and continued to serve as president of the bank until his death.

Tariff Revision

Washington, March 18.—Business will wait upon the tariff as in years gone by, but the congress, the president and the dominant party, all are under pledge to revise it, and to revise it downward. Chief reductions will come upon the raw materials such as lumber, hides, coal, paper pulp, then upon steel, iron and other articles now entirely too high. There will be obstructionists at work and a lively contest is expected. What the general business man and the banker hope for is a speedy settlement of the question and an end of consequent disruption of business.

Two of Those at the Helm

JAMES S. KUHN

J. P. M. RICHARDS

Mr. Kuhn has attracted attention, even in Pittsburgh, where bright men are in plenty. Mr. Kuhn made his record as president of the Pittsburgh Bank for Savings, and last fall was elected president of the big First National. He built up the savings bank from two to fifteen millions, and is expected to repeat. He was first a messenger, then went into a bank at McKeesport, and probably, young as he is, has held nearly every position in a bank. Pittsburgh is glad to see him at the head of one of her most important clearing house banks.

Mr. Richards is a busy man this year, taking a leading part in public matters, acting as president of the Spokane clearing house, and of the growing and aggressive Spokane and Eastern Trust Co. For years he has been a leader in his chosen field, and his firm belief in the Northwest has made him both rich and powerful.

Chicago Bond Bills Opposed

Springfield, Ill., March 15.—The bond bills for which city officials of Chicago are fighting, unless a marked change develops in the sentiment of the assembly, are likely to fall by the way. The bills, the passage of which would allow Chicago to increase its bonded indebtedness by $17,000,000, are being opposed from two directions. In the first place a number of the conservative members from the Chicago districts are lining up against the bills on the ground that a referendum safeguard ought to be thrown around any act giving the city authorities power to issue bonds for such a large amount of money. In the second place the bills are tangled up with the Senatorial situation.

West Virginia Convention Dates

The executive committee of the West Virginia Bankers Association, at a meeting at Parkersburg recently, decided to hold the next annual convention of the association at Wheeling, June 16th and 17th. W. B. Irvine of Wheeling is president of the association and J. S. Hill of Charleston is secretary.

The building is 35x125 feet in area, and its equipment represents all the most modern ideas in banking houses.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THE National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis occupies the sight of the historic birthplace of the great commonwealth, etc."; a line of advertising much in use by the big trans-Mississippi bank. It wouldn't be a bad thing for "Jack" Lewis to ask B. F. E. to ask Tom Randolph to ask the editor of the costliest house organ in America if he wouldn't consent to have the huge pile "occupy the site" instead of the "sight," etc.?

SO William Barrett Ridgely is after a job as foreign consul? We learn that a large, favoring petition was forwarded by wireless from Wm. Barrett's late Kansas City associates asking that he be given a place and concluding "the foreigner it is the better it will suit us."

THE tri-state convention seems to be the thing this year. They are to have one at Seattle in June and Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana will join flags at New Orleans on May 13th and 14th. There will be a special car down over the Illinois Central and reservations soon will be in order.

TEXAS, like some other states, has a bill in her legislature to compel banks to notify the assessors and revenue agents of the amounts which depositors carry with them. Secretary J. W. Hoopes, has his fighting clothes on and hopes to defeat the bill as was done once before. Next Texas will be wanting an "Inquisition."

It is nice to know, from important sources, that one's efforts are appreciated. Alexander Wall of Milwaukee, much esteemed in Chapter circles, says that "the educational work in the Institute as a whole is going on very nicely and I wish to thank THE CHICAGO BANKER for its excellent support."

THE manager of the Banker & Investor Magazine, of New York and Philadelphia writes: "The editors ask me to say that they consider THE CHICAGO BANKER one of the biggest, best and most accurate publications in the entire field of financial journalism."

EDITOR C. A. HAZEN, part proprietor of the powerful (St. Elmo will please note) New York Financier, "largest banking paper in the world," writes: "I may add that your page of paragraphs in THE CHICAGO BANKER is one of the brightest things in banking journalism, and you may rest assured that it is read with interest and appreciation in this office, and I presume with an equal interest, in every banking house your paper reaches in New York City and elsewhere."

WE like these for they come out of the clear blue, from men high up, and whose opinions we value and which have weight in financial and banking circles.

SECRETARY GRAETTINGER, of the Wisconsin Bankers, has his hands full in looking out for bad legislation at Madison. Some of the bills which are good are hard to pass and some which are bad are hard to beat. Wisconsin should put its secretary in the permanent paid class and give him a chance. If Graettinger won't take it we could name an exile now doing penance for leaving the state. It isn't far to Minneapolis, when the roads are good.

THE Trust Company Section of the A. B. A. will shortly send out to members a "Compilation of the Laws Relating to Trust Companies of the United States" in book form. Additional copies may be had at 11 Pine Street, New York, at $3.50 each. The prospectus says: "Specific Trust Company acts are set forth in full. Provisions of general banking laws which are specifically, or by implication, made applicable to trust companies, are also included in substance. The amendments made at the various legislative sessions during the year 1908 are included, and it is believed that the book contains the laws now in force in all the different states and territories of the United States."

GOVERNOR DENEEN appealed to the historians of the state and the country to decide the actual anniversary date of the discovery of America. Many opinions were expressed but the one likely to govern the date of the new legal holiday, if we are to have one, came from Charles William Burrows, of Cleveland, the distinguished publisher of the Avery History of the United States.

MR. BURROWS has spent thousands of dollars correcting dates for his great sixteen volume work and this is what he says of the landing of Columbus: "The difference for all dates in 1400 was nine days; the difference for all dates in 1500 was ten days; then, inasmuch as 1600 was a bissextile (leap) year, the advent of that century did not change the number ten, which remained correct up to 1700, when the correction necessary was eleven days. The British calendar was not corrected until 1752. At that time the Julian calendar dates were eleven days behind those of the Gregorian calendar. To go back, therefore, to the date of Columbus' discovery, it is known that it was upon a Friday and in the Old Style the date was correctly given as October 12th and nine days only should be added to this, making it October 21st, and it would be a somewhat unfortunate thing from the standpoint of historical accuracy for any different date from this to be selected by an act of legislature for your state."

WHEN next you go into the National City Bank, New York, look at its pick up and carrier system for flitting checks, pass books, bundles of stocks from cage to cage and from floor to floor. Time is annihilated and loss or delay impossible. It is known as the Lamson Service, put in by a big Boston firm. They are working upon a new cashing device, also, expected to be a wonder and a world beater.

BANKING by mail does not mean that a bank must go outside of its own district. The First National of Englewood has a plan, working well too, to give home banking to those who leave for the down town, Chicago district before banking hours arrive home too late to find the bank open in the evening. Its fine and Mr. Nichols will give up easy if you ask him politely.

THEY are fighting guaranty in Texas with the slogan that there will come a time when both state and national banks can go in together and "until then" Texas does not want to discriminate. Pretty smooth doctrine.

YOUR old friend, Charles Pasche of St. Joseph, Mo., is pretty clever, as will be shown by his little annual letter to his friends and stockholders. He concluded with "We bespeak, moreover, for the coming year, even a greater degree of assistance on the part of all depositors who feel that our treatment of their affairs merits a word of appreciation, when the opportunity presents itself to speak to a friend or acquaintance concerning the opening of an account, subject to check."

South Carolina Proceedings

The proceedings of the eighth annual convention of the South Carolina Bankers Association, held at Columbia, April 23th and 24th, is out in book form. This is one of the best books of proceedings which has reached this office recently. It is printed on the best of paper; the covers being green and gold. This volume contains many portraits; the most interesting ones being a picture of a group of delegates and visitors, and a group picture of the first six presidents of the association. Besides the usual matter which goes to make up proceedings, it also contains a tabulated statement of the state meetings which is very handy.

After deducting all expenses of management and making provision for contingencies the net profit available amounts to 6,035,528 francs, as against 6,010,505 francs in 1907. A dividend of 8 per cent on the 62,800,000 francs capital outstanding was declared, being at the same rate as for 1907.

Bank Guaranty Bill

The lower house of the Nebraska legislature Tuesday passed the bank deposit guaranty bill framed by a joint committee of the two houses. The vote was 72 to 23, all the Democrats and five Republicans supporting it. The measure is one of the issues which W. J. Bryan declared to be paramount in the Nebraska campaign last fall.

Improved Regulations for Bank Examinations

Washington, March 17.—Comptroller of the Currency Lawrence O. Murray has taken important action looking to co-operation between the clearing house bank examiners and the examiners of the national system. Heretofore the national bank examiners have been a sort of close corporation, never co-operating with or rendering aid to any of the other systems of examiners in the country and never having much association with the representatives of the clearing houses.

In answer to a letter of inquiry lately received Mr. Murray has written that he is very desirous of having the national examiners work in with the clearing house people in every possible way. In his judgment this instruction will amount to an exchange of information and an occasional consultation between the national examiners and the clearing house representatives. This, in the opinion of the Comptroller, will lead to an interchange of effort and experience that will be likely to further the development of regular relations between the Comptroller's office and the clearing house banks of the cities.

In answer to another bank examiner, Mr. Murray has also written directing the closest possible co-operation between the national examiners and those employed by the several states who are at work going over the accounts of trust companies and state institutions. This will have the direct result of leading to simultaneous examination of the state and national banks. Mr. Murray has expressly authorized the national examiners to whom he has written to delay their examination of national banks wherever it may be necessary to do so in order to get the aid of the state officers. Particularly is this advised in the cases now quite numerous where trust companies and national banks or state banks are located in the same building or close at hand and are controlled through some system of joint or common ownership. In such cases there has been a tendency in the past to window dressing and the shifting of assets back and forth among the institutions in order to make a good showing. This will be corrected if the present plan for the mutual aid of the state and national examiners works out as desired.

Plans for a change in the mode of appointing national bank examiners have been completed by the Comptroller of the Currency. According to these plans the rule of politics which has in the past prevailed will be largely curtailed. How national bank examiners have been appointed heretofore was classically represented a year or two ago when President Roosevelt decided between the candidates of two rival senators by "flipping a coin," not, it was thought, a very perfect test of the comparative merits of two accountants and auditors. Mr. Murray's new scheme is to throw certain requirements around the appointments. In the first place, he contemplates that the applications for examinerships shall come largely from the officers of well managed banks. Where men apply who are officers of badly managed institutions or who are indorsed by the officers of such institutions they will not be given consideration.

Further, there will be no immediate appointment of men even with good recommendations simply upon the offhand judgment of the Comptroller when he has never seen or known the men. Mr. Murray has written a letter to the four national bank examiners at large in which he states that henceforward whenever an application for a bank examinership is received it will be referred to a committee of three consisting of a national bank examiner at large, the chairman of the official bank examiners' association of the district from which the application comes and the examiner who is at work in the district from which the application comes. The appointment will be made upon the recommendations made by these committees and the men chosen will be those seeming to have the highest qualifications from among those offering themselves. This will entirely cut out the political method of choosing the examiners.

Mr. Murray has made about six appointments of examiners since he has been in office and the selections have in all instances been made on these principles except in one case where a man was chosen on account of special qualifications from outside the profession. This, however, is the first time that a definite plan for carrying the merit system into effect has been developed.

Greater Publicity Urged on British Bankers

London, March 10.—The committee appointed last September by the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom to consider "the restrictive laws relating to currency and banking in the United Kingdom" has now published its report. It points to the greater fluctuations in bank rates here than elsewhere, urges that they are injurious to trade, admits that no measures can do more than minimize them, and adds that, in proportion as the stock of gold available is increased, the necessity for these fluctuations will be decreased. It lays stress on the relatively small stock of gold held here, and on the fact that Bank of England, "in contrast with all other European banks of issue," did not strengthen its stock of gold during last year. It proceeds to suggest that the Bank of England should multiply branches and extend its business; also that it should, from time to time, diminish its fiduciary note issue, a suggestion which is complicated by the fact that the government shares in the profits of the fiduciary issue, so that it would involve a rearrangement of the relations between the Bank and its principal customer.

In order to secure the maintenance of more adequate cash reserves, the committee proposes to trust largely to the effect of public opinion, and to secure its effectiveness by greater publicity in banking, advocating monthly statements by all the banks, giving fuller details, and showing the average of the daily balances. Opinions will differ concerning the desirability of the details to be furnished, but it will generally be agreed that monthly statements should be made universal, and not confined to a select few among the banks, which are thus placed at a disadvantage, and that the average amount of the deposits and of the cash in hand and at the bank should be shown.

Suggests that monthly statements be made universal—Fluctuations in the bank rate injurious to trade—Bank should multiply its branches. :: ::

Other suggestions include a cash reserve to be held by the trustee and post office savings banks, an issue by the bank of £1 notes, and the separate statement in the bank return of the bankers' balances, temporary advances, and bills discounted. The separation of the bankers' balances from the rest of the other deposits is attractive at first sight, but, if pressed, might have unexpected results; for the bank would probably be less inclined to lend as freely as it does now at the end of the half-years, if the result of its lending were published in the form of bankers' balances swollen to a figure larger than that of its reserve. Finally the committee suggests that, after the gold reserves have been duly increased, the bank should be empowered, on the recommendation of a committee representing the state, the bank, and the banks, to increase its fiduciary issue in times of emergency; and that a committee should be appointed to consider the re-arrangement of the relations between the bank and the government, for which an opportunity will arise in March, 1911.

The committee has worked hard, and produced some interesting and practical suggestions, and others concerning which it is hardly likely to secure the overwhelming agreement required in banking matters. Probably the proposal that will secure most support is the one in favor of greater and more genuine publicity, applied to all bankers alike.

Eleventh Birthday

At the eleventh annual meeting of the stockholders of the Citizens Bank, of Waynesboro, Ga., held Thursday, the directors reported an earning of thirty-five per cent as a result of the year's business just closed. The handsome cash dividend of 10 per cent was declared as payable on March 15th, and following the wise and conservative policy adopted by the directors of charging off all doubtful assets and a goodly portion from year to year on the spacious office building owned by the bank, a part of the earnings were thus disposed of. It is interesting to note that the earned surplus fund of two hundred per cent, which has been set aside in the eleven years of the bank's existence, after the payment of 88 per cent in dividends, is such as to raise the market value of the stock to a greater figure than is commanded by the stock of any bank in the larger cities of Atlanta, Augusta, Savannah or Macon, some of which banks have been in existence fifty years.

The clearings or volume of business handled by the bank for the year just closed was upwards of twelve millions of dollars. It is interesting to note that the profits of the bank was less than 1-15th of one per cent on the amount so handled, which if handled by express or post office money orders would have cost the depositors $21,000. This saving to bank depositors coupled with the fact that the bank circulates a discount line of $200,000 should impress the thoughtful public, that banks are real benefactors.

The old board of directors were elected for the ensuing year, as were the following officers: R. C. Neely, president, F. M. Cates, vice-president, R. N. Berrien, Jr., cashier.

Bankers Assessed Too High

A committee from the Missouri State Bankers Association appeared before the state board of equalization last week and asked for a more equitable assessment. Bank stock has been valued by the board for years past at fifty-five cents on the dollar, which is much higher than most other classes of property. The committee did not ask for any specific rate, and in fact it was intimated that the bankers would be willing to pay at the rate of 100 cents on the dollar if other property is assessed at the same rate. The committee consisted of the following:

J. R. Dominick of Kansas City, president; W. F. Keyser of Sedalia, secretary; J. P. Hinton of Hannibal, vice-president, and A. O. Wilson of St. Louis, treasurer of the bankers' organization, and its taxation committee, consisting of Thornton Cook of Kansas City, chairman; Breckenridge Jones of St. Louis, M. T. Davis of Aurora, W. C. Harris of Fulton, R. S. Harvey of Eldon, and H. Hunicke of St. Louis.

The Gila Valley Bank and Trust Co.

W. C. Faulkner has received the contract for the erection of a new bank building for the Gila Valley Bank and Trust Company of Safford, Ariz., and started work on the foundations.

Kentucky Court of Appeals' Decision

The Kentucky Court of Appeals held, in the case of Day's Committee vs. Exchange Bank of Kentucky, that in an action to recover of the seller the loss occasioned by the purchase of bank stock it was competent to prove the knowledge of the bank's condition which the agent had at the time he made the sale, and the close relationship between the principal and agent, and that the circumstances attending the sale tended to show knowledge on the part of the principal at the time the stock was sold.

The Houston National

The bond of the Houston (Tex.) National for $1,267,105.24 was filed Tuesday with the county commissioners, who read, approved and ordered the instrument filed. This bond is given by the bank as surety for the safe keeping of the county's funds during the year 1909, the Houston National having been duly chosen as the county depository at a previous session of the commissioners' court.

M. J. Moreland

Morton J. Moreland, auditor of the First National of Terre Haute, Ind., has been appointed bank examiner for Indiana to succeed William E. Springer, resigned. The appointment was made on the recommendation of Senator Beveridge. Formerly Moreland was active in the republican party, serving as president of a political club. He is regarded as an expert under the national bank laws.

Pittsburgh Graft

The graft clean up in Pittsburgh bids fair to be as thorough as was that in San Francisco. Even George T. Oliver, the day before he was elected a United States senator, was on the grand jury mat. Another person whose appearance before the jury caused some comment was James W. Friend of the Farmers' Deposit National Bank of Pittsburgh, who is better known as "Cassie Chadwick's angel," because she is alleged to have "gotten him" for $800,000. Mr. Friend, too, was subjected to a long grueling, as were some watchmen from his bank. The story most freely handed about is that an even dozen of prominent bankers are to be served with warrants because the district attorney appears to have information that they met in New York and raised a pool of $142,000 with which to go after the city deposits of Pittsburgh through the councilmen.

Chicago would welcome such a state's attorney. She has a "Prospectus" official—one of the kind who delights in telling what he is going to do but from whose belt no dangling scalp hangs.

Group Six, A. B. A., Meeting

Texarkana, Ark., March 12.—Group Six, Arkansas Bankers Association, comprising all the southwest portion of the state, met in annual session at Texarkana, Ark., Friday. The address of welcome was delivered by Allen Winham, vice-president of the Merchants and Planters' Bank, and the response by Charles B. Foster, cashier of the Hempstead County Bank at Hope.

A resolution indorsing the proposed Turner banking law in Arkansas, and another vigorously protesting against the establishment of postal savings banks were unanimously adopted. The executive committee elected for the ensuing year consists of C. B. Foster of Hope; P. M. Gardner, Dequeen; W. H. Arnold, Texarkana; J. M. Johnson, Ashdown, and F. P. Beasley, Stamps. C. O. Staiti of Texarkana was named as chairman and Thomas C. McRae, Jr., of Prescott as secretary.

Franklin Johnson of the Mercantile Trust Company, St. Louis; Geo. H. Rogers, cashier of the Bank of Commerce, Little Rock; A. H. Chalk of the First National and R. H. Davis of the Commercial National Shreveport, La., were visitors.

New Bank for Medina

A new state bank is to be organized at Medina, N. Y., by May 1st with a capital stock of $50,000. Watson F. Barry is mentioned for the presidency.

Colorado Guaranty Bill

The Colorado bank guaranty bill passed the house Wednesday by a vote of 49 to 8. The bill now goes to the senate.

New Bank for Quincy

The new institution which will be opened at Quincy, Ill., will be organized under the state laws and will have a capital stock of $100,000 or more. The promoters are W. J. Singleton and William Rupp, Jr., both of Nauvoo. Mr. Singleton is cashier of the State Bank of Nauvoo, of which Max Reinbold was president. The bank has assets of nearly $1,000,000 and is one of the strongest in western Illinois.

Mr. Rupp is likewise a practical banker, having been in the banking business at Nauvoo. Later he was connected with banks at Mt. Pulaski and Benton Harbor. Up to July last he was cashier of the Chicago Savings Bank & Trust Company. The new bank will be independent and will doubtless get its share of the business. A suitable location is being sought and several places are being considered.

The Chicago Money Market

Chicago banks are buying less paper, being loaned up more closely than earlier in the year, but on the whole the money situation shows no change of consequence. A good deal of paper has been placed in New York. There are firmer maturities than usual at this period because only a small amount of six months' paper was taken last fall until November. Note brokers say the interior demand is better outside of Illinois.

New high records in bank clearings testify to Chicago's industrial and mercantile development.

Harris Trust Meeting

The board of directors of Harris Trust and Savings Bank of this city at its monthly meeting Thursday transferred $250,000 from the undivided profits to the surplus account, making the surplus account $750,000.

The directors also declared a quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent, payable April 1, 1909, to stockholders of record. Previous quarterly dividends have been at the rate of 2 per cent.

Metropolitan Trust Dividend

Directors of the Metropolitan Trust and Savings Bank of this city declared a quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent, payable to stockholders on March 31st. The stock books of the bank will be closed March 29th to 31st, inclusive.

The South Texas National

On Monday morning the South Texas National of Houston, Tex., will open in temporary quarters on the opposite side of Main Street from the old building, in offices formerly occupied by the Planters and Mechanics National. Business will be transacted there until the new building, plans for which have been prepared, has been completed.

The Comptroller of the Currency has approved the application to convert the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Woodland into the First National of Woodland, Cal., with a capital of $200,000.

Nevada Bank Commission

A sensation was created in the Nevada Assembly Wednesday by the presentation of a resolution providing for a joint committee from house and senate to investigate the state bank commission. The resolution asks that the committee, besides looking into the declarations of solvency made by the commission and the matter of trading accounts, investigate the personal accounts of the commissioners. It was referred to the committee on ways and means.

Ohio Banking News

The New First National of Columbus has been awarded the $11,000 county road improvement bonds on the bid of accrued interest and a premium of $242 at a meeting of the County Commissioners. The bonds are in denominations of $500 each, bear 5 per cent interest and the last bond matures on April 1, 1914.

New Clearing House Rules

Notices were issued Tuesday of a special meeting of the Columbus Clearing House Association which was held Thursday afternoon in the rooms of the association in the Hayden-Clinton National building for the purpose of taking up the adoption of the new rules which were drafted some time ago by a committee consisting of F. R. Huntington of the Huntington National, Oscar Schenck of the Market Exchange Bank, and L. F. Kiesewetter of the Ohio National.

The new rules have as their principal changes from those now in force the election of a manager who shall devote his entire time to the clearing house, who shall have ability to examine at least six times a year all member and non-member banks in regard to their reserve; the prohibition of any officer, director or employee of a member or non-member going on the bond of any city, state, township or county officer; the maintenance of 35 per cent reserve at all times by members and 20 per cent reserve by non-members and several other changes in minor particulars.

One rule which many of the bankers favor and which will be incorporated in the rules will prohibit any member or non-member from making contributions for any cause or object unless the object for which the contribution is solicited shall have first been approved by the clearing house.

An Odd Check

An odd check was cashed at the Fourth National of Cincinnati last week. It was made out, in perfect form on a piece of pine wood, one inch thick, 12 inches long and four inches wide. The amount called for is 83 cents. The check represents the settlement of a quarrel between two prominent residents of Walnut Hills. One of them recently had a window in his house broken, and accused the son of the other of having done it. The feud grew strong, until friends interfered, with the result that the cost of the broken window was paid, and the payer made out his check on a piece of wood. It came to the Fourth National by messenger from the First National.

To Hold Convention Outside of State

The referendum vote in the Ohio Bankers Association shows that the majority of the bankers favor holding the state convention outside the state, as last year, when it was held at Alexandria Bay. Opponents didn't think it was patriotic to go outside the state for the annual meeting. This sentiment is overcome, however, by the advantage of better acquaintance among members following a long excursion.

M. M. Robertson in New York

M. M. Robertson, of the Queen City Bank of Cincinnati has gone to New York, on business.

and Mr. Sparks, the cashier, will probably act in the same capacity for the new bank.

Group Two Meeting

The annual meeting of Group Two of the Ohio Bankers Association will be held at Celina April 29th. Lucius Teter, president of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Co., will talk on "Postal Savings Banks." Chairman Jones, Secretary Backus and C. D. Crites have been appointed as a special committee to arrange a program for the meeting.

First National of Athens

Hon. David H. Moore, president of the First National of Athens, who is also internal revenue collector for his district, was in Columbus during the week, and succeeded in picking up some good loans while here. He says money is still plentiful in the valley.

When last heard of Peak was in Trinidad, Mo. He is a native of Warsaw, Ky.

Banker Makes Appeal

C. C. Caller, president of the defunct Southern Bank and Trust Company, of Fort Smith, Ark., which was closed by the officers three years ago, who was indicted and convicted on the charge of embezzlement, has been sentenced by Judge Rogers in Federal Court to serve two and one-half years in the Penitentiary and pay a fine of $750. ## Indianapolis and Indiana Banking News

By CHARLES REMINGTON

The Corydon National, of Corydon, has leased the Kleber corner, the most prominent in Corydon, for a term of ninety-nine years and will erect a fine bank building thereon. It is the intention to provide the Corydon National with one of the finest homes in Indiana. The bank was established in 1880, and makes collections a specialty. It has a capital of $125,000, and a surplus of $65,000. The officers are: G. W. Applegate, president; W. E. Cook, vice-president; W. B. Slemmons, cashier; G. W. Applegate, Jr., assistant cashier.

The Indiana Trust Company

The Indiana Trust Company of Indianapolis says: "With conditions not quite right for investment, a perplexing question with many people is what to do with money on hand, and for which some form of permanent investment is desired. During the period pending a definite decision the sensible and business-like thing to do is to deposit it with this strong company, either in a savings account or a time certificate of deposit, where it will be available when needed and earn you three per cent interest."

The Wayne National

A creditable showing is made by the Wayne National, of Cambridge City, in its statement of February 5th. Loans and discounts are $193,600; deposits, $241,731; cash and due from banks, $71,019. The capital stock is $50,000; surplus and profits, $3,002, and total resources, $344,734.

Getting Final Dividend

C. S. Andrews, as receiver for the defunct Vigo County National, of Terre Haute, is paying the final dividend of the bank, this dividend being 14.752 per cent. Mr. Andrews expects soon to wind up the affairs of the bank.

Declares a Dividend of 2½ Per Cent

The Union Traction, of Indiana, has declared a dividend of 2½ per cent on its preferred stock, payable April 1st.

General Assembly Adjourned

The general appropriation bill for 1910 and 1911 passed Tuesday morning about 1:45 o'clock, and was signed by the governor. It carries total appropriations amounting to $8,180,378.54.

The general assembly of 1909 has adjourned sine die, and with a general appropriation bill passed. As a matter of fact, the appropriation bill was not passed on time. The clock in the house and the senate were stopped, and when adjournment was taken it was 2:15 o'clock.

In spite of the spirit of frivolity which usually attends the closing hours of a legislative session, the senate took up and passed the Strickland house bill, which provided that the records of police courts and justice of the peace courts shall be kept as complete as circuit court records.

Indiana Legal Reserve Law

The Indiana legal reserve compulsory deposit life insurance law was passed ten years ago to encourage the organization of companies in the state and safeguard their operations. The bill became a law in February, 1899, a number of assessment companies promptly changing to the old line basis. In the ten years the assets of the companies operating under the law have grown to $15,781,673, with a premium income during 1908 of $5,443,515, $165,000,000 of insurance in force and $14,051,691 on deposit with the auditor of state February 25, 1909.

The Citizens Bank of Warsaw

The Citizens Bank of Warsaw has been organized with the following officers: J. W. Hover as president; L. E. Coleman, vice-president, and Warren Darst, cashier.

New Bank for Larwill

Arrangements have been completed for the establishment of a new private bank at Larwill, capitalized at $10,000. J. A. Young and Clinton Wilcox are interested.

The Patoka National

The Patoka National of Patoka will open for business as soon as its issue of bank notes arrives.

R. F. Martin & Co. of Philadelphia

R. F. Martin & Co., who have asked holders of Interstate Railways 4's to communicate with them, desire that such bondholders as have not done so shall not deposit either under the American Railways offer or with the Smith reorganization party until a definite reorganization plan is presented.

Two More Banks for Port Lavaca

Two new banks are to be organized at Port Lavaca, Tex., one being promoted by A. Levi & Co. and F. B. Lander of Victoria, Tex., and the other by J. I. Cochran of Meridian, Tex.

A Record of the Growth of the Manufacturers National of Racine

The first banking business in Racine (Wis.) was started about 1845. The Bank of Racine, chartered by the State of Wisconsin, February 1, 1853, was successor to McCrea, Bell & Ullmann. The business of the Bank of Racine and of the Bank of B. B. Northrop & Co., established in 1859, was merged in The Manufacturers National. Thus the Manufacturers National, continuing the first banking business started in Racine, is the oldest bank in the city.

Back in 1871, on the sixteenth day of March, The Manufacturers National was chartered by the Comptroller of the Currency and numbered 1802, and on the twentieth day of March it opened for business in the building which was originally the Baker House, later the Huggins House and now known as the Merchants Hotel, and on November 20, 1872, it leased its present office of Vaughan and Williams at an annual rental of $800.00 and in 1876 the building was purchased of Vaughan and Williams for $13,000.00. It was remodeled and rebuilt in the winter of 1906-7 and is now one of the most modern and convenient banking offices in the northwest.

The building and its furnishings represent an investment of $72,623.68, which is carried on the books of the bank at thirty thousand dollars, or less than one-half the actual cost of the property.

The money and safety deposit vaults of this bank were rebuilt and remodeled in the winter of 1906-7. They are marvels of solidity and strength, and no vaults can offer better protection or greater convenience. They are fireproof and will withstand attacks by mobs or burglars. The safety deposit vault contains 1,044 boxes which are rented to patrons for the safekeeping of deeds, mortgages, life and fire insurance policies, and other valuable papers, at $3.00 a year and upwards.

In its thirty-eight years of existence the bank has had only four presidents, four vice-presidents, two cashiers and two assistant cashiers.

In the thirty-eight years of its life, this bank has safely passed through four disastrous panics—one in 1873, one in 1884, one in 1893 and one in 1907.

It is not necessary to attempt a scientific explanation of the causes of the last panic. The same conditions that existed for a few weeks in the fall of 1907, when money payments were restricted, will probably never arise again in the history of this country. The new currency bill enacted by Congress last summer, making all allowance for the many just criticisms that have been passed upon it, provides a way in which a bank by pledging its bonds, and, under certain conditions, its commercial paper, may increase its circulation on short notice, and thereby obtain money to meet every reasonable demand that can be made upon it. Deplorable and far-reaching as conditions were during this panic, they in no way involved the soundness of any well managed bank or its ability to pay its depositors dollar for dollar.

Another point of interest, and one that will show careful and conservative management of the bank from the beginning, relates to its losses. The very nature of the business involves losses. The individual lends money to a friend who fails to pay it back, and a loss is sustained. A bank lends money to individuals and business houses in the belief that they are worthy of credit and that they will pay it back with interest, but failures are inevitable, and one who is in the business of lending money must expect to sustain a certain percentage of loss. For every one hundred dollars this bank has loaned during all the years it has been in business, it has lost nine cents—one-eleventh of one per cent—and we do not believe there is a banker in the country who would not be willing to pay several times this amount in premiums for insurance against losses.

The original capital of the bank was $100,000.00; this was increased $50,000.00 in 1873, and again increased in 1875 $100,000.00, making $250,000.00, at which figure it has since remained. Out of its earnings the first nine months of its existence, on December 31, 1871, it created a surplus fund of $5,000.00, and during the period of nearly thirty-eight years, with an unbroken dividend record, this surplus has grown out of the earnings to $200,000.00.

Philadelphia Banking News

By J. IRVING COOPER

By a vote of 111 to 96 the members of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange have decided that the board of governors be authorized to negotiate with any party or parties having propositions to make looking to the removal of the Exchange to the vicinity of Broad and Chestnut streets. It is understood that any proposition or propositions finally determined upon by the governing committee as satisfactory will be submitted to the Exchange for approval or rejection.

The vote, therefore, does not commit the Exchange to removal, but represented simply an expression of opinion as to whether the proposition should be formally taken up.

Members in favor of a Broad and Chestnut streets' site were jubilant over the vote, however, and asserted that, with a definite site in view, a much larger vote would be polled in favor of an uptown location. Downtown interests, on the other hand, took an exactly opposite view of the vote. They contended that many members voted aye to the proposal so as to permit of proposals being made by interests or institutions in the lower section of the city to provide a new home for the Exchange.

Many suggestions were made as to suitable downtown locations. Among the sites suggested were Fifth and Library streets, the Lafayette Building and the old Custom House, and it was reported that a prominent bank would make the Exchange a handsome offer provided it would stay east of Eighth Street.

As to the uptown suggestions for a new site, the only definite proposal yet before the Exchange is that of the Real Estate Trust Building. It is assumed, however, that the Girard Trust Company will make a proposal, now that the Exchange has voted to receive such offers.

No Gold Bars in Philadelphia
In relation to rumors current in New York last week that gold bars might again be secured from Philadelphia for export to London, United States Mint authorities say that there is at present in this city no stock of gold bars. The last lot of gold bars recently, amounting to $1,500,000 in value, was melted down into ingots for the Mint's own use.

First Mortgage Guarantee and Trust Company
Interests identified with the First Mortgage Guarantee & Trust Company of Philadelphia say that the company is making satisfactory progress and will begin business April 15th. Nearly $1,000,000 of the company's capital has now been subscribed for. Hon. Leslie Shaw, the company's new president, is actively working in the interest of the company.

Joseph Wayne, Jr., Back at Desk
Joseph Wayne, Jr., cashier of the Girard National of this city, who spent the last four weeks in Florida and the West Indies, has returned.

The First National
At a special meeting of the stockholders of the First National of Philadelphia, the membership of the board of directors was increased from seven to eleven, and the following were elected additional directors: Theodore Armstrong, Howard S. Graham, Sydney E. Hutchinson, Edward D. Toland.

Bioren & Co.
Bioren & Co., the Philadelphia managers of the syndicate offering $4,000,000 Maryland Electric Railways Company first mortgage 5 per cent gold bonds, state that all of these bonds have been sold at 95 and accrued interest.

To be Made Assistant Comptroller
Bankers learn that Carroll M. Bunting, assistant to the first vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and one of the most capable of the young men in the company's service, is to be made assistant comptroller, next in authority to M. Riebenack.

The American Bank
Stockholders of the American Bank of Philadelphia last week authorized an increase in the capital stock from $50,000 to $100,000. Half of the new stock will be allotted to shareholders at $60 and the other half at $70 per share, par being $50 and the latest sale having been made at $78 a share.

The Philadelphia Banks
Philadelphia banks last week lost considerably in deposits, and by holding up their lines of loans and discounts to great extent, somewhat reduced their surplus funds available for loaning.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

The Scandinavian American National is a new Minneapolis institution, the second of similar name in the Twin Cities. Its capital is $250,000. It will begin business May 1st. It will take the banking building formerly the home of the absorbed Swedish American National, and now occupied by the Swedish American Savings Bank. More than one-half of the stock was subscribed in a short time. N. O. Werner, president of the Swedish American Savings Bank, and head of the Swedish American National, which is in liquidation, is to be president of the new bank. The Swedish American Savings will continue as before. The organization of the new bank crystalizes the movement for a Scandinavian institution in Minneapolis of large capital. It will get a class of business which has been dividing up between other institutions, including the Union State, which is largely Scandinavian, and for which other banks have been working since the Swedish American National went out of business. Plans had been advanced for the formation of a new bank for the enlargement of capital of existing banks to include the business which had been cut loose from its bearings. The formation of the bank settles the occupancy of the bank building which several other institutions have had in mind along with thoughts of doubling capital, etc. C. L. Grandin, of the People's Bank and Andreas Ueland, lawyer, are slated for the vice-presidency, Charles E. Cotton of the People's as cashier, and Kunte Ekman of the Swedish American Savings as assistant. Mr. Cotton was cashier of the People's Bank and Mr. Grandin has been president since the late death of H. G. Merritt. Mr. Ekman had been assistant cashier of the Swedish American National. The People's was one of the smaller banks, and faced removal from its situation of several years because of the purchase of the property by the city for park purposes.

New Bank for St. Paul

Prospects are bright for the organization of a new bank at Hamline, St. Paul, by May 1st. It has not had a bank for about a year. The capital will be $25,000 to $30,000. The organization is backed by men interested in the Merriam Park State Bank of which C. W. Moore is president. The stock has been subscribed and the organizers are looking for a building. Among the incorporators will be Mr. Moore, F. B. Lynch, A. J. Nason and Senator J. M. Hackney.

The Security Trust Company

The Security Trust Company of St. Paul is considering a move. Three plans are under consideration. The company's lease in the New York Life building expires in November. Present quarters are inadequate. One of the suggested plans is for a new building, and the other two for remodeling of rooms. The capital stock is $250,000 and the surplus and profits $124,597.12, a book value of 149. John R. Mitchell, president of the Capital National, is a director in the company. Frank Y. Locke is president. It is expected that the Second National, which is now in crowded quarters, will take the Security Trust rooms when it vacates in the fall. The Second National's business is growing. Since November, 1906, the earnings on $400,000 have been 57¾ per cent. Its stock has a book value of 183. The bank's resources are $4,201,372. George C. Power is president and Charles Buckley is cashier.

The Interstate Protective Association

The Interstate Protective Association, formed of the secretaries of the bankers associations of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota and Iowa, have had another meeting in the office of Secretary Charles Frost of the Minnesota Bankers Association to discuss yegg ways and means. The bank check forger was included in the secret deliberations. Where the yeggman is not outside the limits of the association or not in durance vile he is being kept under supervision by the association, so that the assault on the country bank has become less known in the Northwest. Some of the former safe breakers are seriously thinking of getting into legitimate business. With the advanced ideas of the prison wardens as voiced in the preachment of Warden Wolf of Minnesota against determined sentences and the penta-state association ready to lift the retired yeggman out of the mire the attention of the association will have to be turned to keeping prospective criminals out of the business.

The National German American Bank

The deposits of the National German American have reached $11,000,000, a gain of $518,000 since February 5th. The capital of the bank is $1,000,000 and the surplus $673,000, the resources $13,000. J. W. Lusk, the president, is at Summerville, S. C. He will return in two weeks.

Minneapolis Chapter News

The Minneapolis chapter of the American Institute of Banking has decided to get into active work. It will combat the loan shark. It has appointed a committee to confer with the labor organizations on the subject. The committee: T. F. Jones, H. C. Libby, J. G. Maclean, F. A. Gile, E. C. Phinney, H. E. Cobb, L. E. Wakefield.

Personal Mention

J. S. Pomeroy, cashier of the Security National, has returned from Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee and other points much refreshed and with the statement on his lips that he never had a better time. Mr. Pomeroy did not go on a business trip, but he could not refrain from calling on the bankers and getting in touch with the financial cogs in the cities he visited.

W. H. Durst, secretary of the Minnesota Loan & Trust Company, has gone abroad. He will be in Europe three months. He was accompanied by W. R. Whittemore, cashier of the National Bank of Commerce of Boston. Spain, Italy, France, Switzerland and England are in the itinerary.

In the Superior Court this month, Judge Henry C. Gesford ordered declared and paid to the depositors of the defunct Bank of Calistoga a 10 per cent dividend. Receiver Harry L. Johnston is now engaged in distributing among the 342 depositors the sum of $8,127. Under the first dividend (a 15 per cent one), paid during the latter part of December, $15,155 was divided up. According to Receiver Johnston's report the liabilities of the wrecked concern were on February 25th, $85,404, of which $81,270 is due to depositors. Since his appointment and up to the date named the receiver had collected in actual cash almost $29,300, of which $9,577 is still on hand. The report calls attention to the $7,500 in cash and $6,000 worth of realty recently turned over to the receiver by Attorney Edw. L. Webber, counsel for President Harry H. Brown.

Editorial Comment

Banking Legislation Since the Panic

Illinois strengthened its law by amendments in 1907 which were approved by popular vote November 3, 1908, but the law still lacks many provisions which are found in the laws of other important banking states.—Pierre Jay, Banking Commissioner for Massachusetts.

The above comment was given authorship and publicity by Pierre Jay, one of the best informed and most trusted banking commissioners in our country. Officially, it calls attention to the backwardness of this great state in safeguarding her banking interests and providing for future development. The Illinois amendments of 1907 were important so far as they went, but they stopped just short of interfering with the "private business" of the private snap banks so numerous in this great commonwealth. No protection was thrown around the banking title, which in some states is a most valuable asset. Provision was not extended to all classes of banking nor are state nor government inspectors ever seen within the doors of nearly half of the banking institutions of the state of Illinois. The shortcomings belong to the class known as "probably fatal." Other weak spots in the banking laws of Illinois will readily be noticed or recalled as attention is directed to the strength of the banking laws of other advanced states and to the banking amendments which have been passed in other states or have some prospect of being passed. A great wave of banking legislation swept over the country as a result of the financial panic of 1907. New York, Massachusetts, Missouri, Oklahoma, Colorado, and Indiana, distinguished themselves by taking advanced ground upon the whole subject of "Better protection and more adequate information for the depositing public."

Indiana placed private banking under state supervision. Minnesota put them entirely out of business and a number of states either passed or will pass acts bearing guaranty of deposits. Probably no other state put upon record such a complete state banking act as was adopted in Oklahoma. This act carried with it the much abused policy of guaranteeing deposits but the act itself embraced so many advanced ideas that it fairly may be classed as the most complete single banking act ever passed by a state legislature.

There was scarcely time in 1907 to do all of the things that the panic of that fall pointed out as practically necessary, to prevent repetitions. 1908 was an off-year with most of the state legislatures but this winter there is great activity. In some of the Western states there have been offered for adoption as many as fifty banking bills and amendments. The Congress at Washington struggled feebly with the question during the past two sessions and finally dumped it upon the "National Monetary Commission." In pretty nearly all of the essentials the state legislatures have shown greater ability and greater activity than has been shown at Washington. Of the thirty-nine state legislatures which have been in session this year, fully  $\frac{2}{3}$  have given part of their time to banking legislation.

Complete re-drafts of the banking laws are under promise in New Mexico, Idaho, North Dakota, South Dakota, Colorado and Wisconsin. In Maryland a commission has been entrusted with drawing an entirely new law. A wide strip of territory running from North Dakota to Texas has been passing bills on the general subject of guaranteeing of deposits. Where new bills have not been passed, usually important amendments have been adopted. All of this great activity covering pretty nearly the whole country, promises a time when state banking laws will be brought up to a much higher standard of efficiency, than they have ever known in the past.

Loose Leaf Ledgers Dangerous in Banks

Marcus C. Bergh, the expert commissioner of banking for Wisconsin, and of whom the state is proud, has much of importance to say in his annual report for 1908. He charges that most bank failures can be attributed to one of two cases, either they come about through lack of interest or ability of the directors or the accounting methods are bad. With his idea on the lack of effort on the part of directors most bankers are familiar and are fully in agreement. At great length Mr. Bergh emphasizes the great danger to banking in the alleged loose leaf, easy going style of bookkeeping which it engenders. Here is what Mr. Bergh says:

"From this lack of interest on the part of directors, dangerous practices creep in; one of which is especially noticeable in small banks. The cashier is frequently the bookkeeper and desires to lessen his work and argues that shorter methods will accomplish this end, and here comes the ever plausible blank-book house agent with always something new to help him out in the way of loose leaf books and other contrivances. While I believe in all real improvements and labor-saving devices that do not destroy the completeness of the records, it is folly to argue that any system that destroys the connecting links so as to make it difficult or impossible to trace every transaction from its original entry to its final disposition, is keeping proper books in a bank. A complete system of books cannot be kept without work, and it should always be borne in mind that books are not kept for the convenience of the bookkeeper alone, but should be so kept, that any one conversant with accounting can take the books of any bank and look up transactions any number of years back, without difficulty. The cash book, sometimes called the journal, and the registers of certificates of deposit, drafts, and of loans and discounts, forming a part of the journal, being the books of original entry, are the most important books in a bank and should be permanently bound books, and balanced daily with the greatest care. In some banks, these most important books have been displaced for some sort of a system of loose leaf or slips of paper easily misplaced or lost. Because of these dangerous and loose methods, and the growing tendency in this direction, it occurs to me that the legislature could render to the people of this state a great service, by calling in a number of competent bank accountants and have them formulate a complete and comprehensive system of bank bookkeeping, and then pass a law requiring all banks to keep their accounts according to the prescribed form, thereby making bank accounting uniform throughout the state."

Mr. Bergh has not failed to again denounce excessive loans to bank officers and directors. He admits that Sec. 29 of the Wisconsin law has not put an end to such practices. New legislation is recommended.

Private bankers are getting another jolt in Wisconsin, in a new bill offered by Senator Owens which creates three new sections; defining the soliciting, receiving or accepting of money as a regular business, to be doing a banking business, whether such deposit is made subject to check or is evidenced by a certificate of deposit, a pass book, a note, a receipt, or other writing, and it shall be unlawful for any person, co-partnership, association or corporation, to do a banking business without having been regularly organized and chartered as a national bank, a state bank, or a mutual savings bank. Any person, firm or corporation doing business, as defined in this act, may incorporate as a state bank on or before September 1, 1909. It also provides for a penalty for the violation of this act.

Other Wisconsin bills aim to give state banks with "invested" capital only 60 days to get it back into liquid form or to be dissolved. There is a bill also to make a check "an assignment of funds." And there is another to "exempt" $1,000 in deposits where the man does not own a homestead which would have that benefit.

Probably the bill which will excite the most general interest is one which makes provision

Whenever the amount of the depositor's insurance fund shall amount to 2 per cent of the total amount of the deposits in all state banks, the commissioner of banking is empowered to remit further assessments. This fund shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, and be under the control and subject to the draft of the commissioner of banking, when countersigned by the state treasurer, and shall not be withdrawn except to discharge and pay claims of certain depositors against an insolvent bank. Any depositor receiving more than 3 per cent interest is excluded from the provision of this act, and shall only be entitled to his pro rata share of the cash assets of the bank.

Like other states, Wisconsin has two or three guaranty bills and one to prohibit branch banking. James K. The committee on uniform bill of lading has J. H. Puelicher, Fred'k Kasten and A. H. Lindsay, all of Milwaukee.

Michigan Banking News

By W. T. FOSTER

The State Savings Bank of Benton Harbor, was one year old March 9th. This bank opened its doors for business March 9, 1908, in the midst of the greatest financial panic that this country has ever seen—a panic so severe that banks in the leading cities were compelled to pay their depositors in clearing house certificates.

In spite of the depression the State Savings Bank has made a record in the first year never equaled by any other bank that ever started in Benton Harbor. In good times a new bank in a city the size of Benton Harbor that secures deposits of $100,000 at the end of its first year is counted a great success. Had the State Savings Bank gained a deposit of $75,000 the first year the officers would have been satisfied. The State Savings Bank has gained a business of over $150,000 on its first birthday and is 50 per cent more than a great success.

The officers and directors of the bank send its birthday greetings to the public who have so generously supported the institution, and in turn promise to give the most painstaking care to accommodate its customers and those who favor them with their business.

William E. Marsh is cashier of the State Savings Bank. The directors are: John E. Barnes, J. S. Caldwell, George R. Dater, L. L. Filstrup, Humphrey S. Gray, J. N. Klock, W. A. Preston, Dudley E. Waters, John J. Kinney, Wm. E. Sheffield, Peter Tonnelier, Wm. E. Marsh.

The Detroit Real Estate Board

At the monthly meeting of the Detroit Real Estate Board at the Hotel Cadillac, the committee on taxation was instructed to prepare a bill for a specific-tax on mortgages, to be presented to the state legislature. The board also voted to add six committees to the standing list, the new ones to have supervision over the expenditure of city money for public improvement. Plans are also being formulated for the entertainment of the delegates to the national real estate convention in June.

S. H. Row Dead

Samuel H. Row, of Lansing, first insurance commissioner of Michigan, and prominent in state insurance circles for many years, died Wednesday morning, aged 69 years. His death was due to paralysis, from which he had suffered for several weeks.

In 1872 he was appointed as the first commissioner of insurance by Governor Baldwin, and held the office under the administrations of Bagley, Crosswell and Jerome. Some time after he was secretary of state under Daniel Striker. He was a veteran of the civil war, having served four years as lieutenant of Co. B, Twentieth Michigan Infantry.

The National Bank of Commerce

The National Bank of Commerce of Detroit, Richard P. Joy president, has declared its initial dividend. This first distribution is at the rate of 1 per cent which, however, equals 6 per cent if paid quarterly, inasmuch as the city, state and county taxes are paid by the bank for the stockholders. The National Bank of Commerce is not yet two years old, but in that short space of time has had a remarkable growth. The bank's report to the comptroller of the national currency, February 5th last, shows resources of nearly $5,000,000. The capital stock is $750,000 and the surplus and undivided profits $150,000 and $59,654 respectively. The bank has individual deposits, subject to check, of $2,212,864.46; demand certificates of deposit, $472,188.51 and government deposits, $68,750. The exact resources are $4,975,000.46. The bank is now earning in excess of 10 per cent on its capital.

The Kalamazoo Savings Bank

The capital of the Kalamazoo Savings Bank has been increased from $50,000 to $100,000.

Judge Wiest's Ruling

Scoring security companies for looking for loopholes in order to escape their liabilities, Judge Wiest, of the Ingham county circuit court Friday overruled a demurrer filed by the Fidelity & Guarantee Co. in the suit brought by the state to recover on the bond of ex-state treasurer Frank P. Glazier.

Judge Wiest's ruling covers the cases of the Bankers' Surety Co., Title Guarantee Surety Co., Federal Union Surety Co. and the Metropolitan Surety Co., of New York, all of which filed demurrers to the state's complaint on the ground that the declaration was insufficient, and that the deposits of state money in the defunct Chelsea Savings Bank were illegal because Glazier was a stockholder.

Judge Wiest says in his opinion: "The illegal acts of the treasurer cannot be used as a plank, one on which the surety companies may swim out and leave the bank; if the plank will not carry both it is no better than none, for both must sink or swim together. The surety companies are not permitted to sign bonds for the performance of a contract and then when the fall occurs look about for some far-fetched reasons for claiming the benefits of the wellworn theory that surety companies are favorites of the law."

The total amount involved is $150,000, which was the amount of Glazier's bonds.

Philadelphia Chapter Presents Another Strong Program

By E. Leslie Allison

At the March meeting of the Quaker City Chapter two addresses of unusual interest and benefit were delivered.

Hon. Dimmer Beeber, President of the Commonwealth Title & Trust Company, by a masterly treatment of the subject of "Hamilton, The Financier," held the closest attention of his audience and threw new light on several phases of that remarkable man's career of whom so much has been said and written.

Starting with a brief summary of Hamilton's life in the West Indies previous to his arrival in the United States, Judge Beeber traced most carefully his wonderful progress and achievements up to and following the time of his appointment by President Washington as Secretary of the Treasury. In view of the never ceasing study and discussion of two of the most important national topics before the American people, namely, public credit and the proper adjustment of our currency deficiencies, the speaker urged the young bankers present to avail themselves of the great opportunity to secure a thorough understanding and grasp of the fundamental principles of these two questions by a careful study of Hamilton's two foremost public documents: his first papers on the proper adjustment of the public credit and his arguments in favor of the establishment of a national bank, as well as the explanation of its powers and functions, etc.

Never was Philadelphia Chapter more fortunate than in having a subject of the above nature treated in so instructive and fascinating a manner by one possessing a combination of judicial and financial experience, and the tremendous ovation given Judge Beeber was strong proof of the appreciation with which his excellent address was received.

In the light in which Hamilton was viewed by his countrymen and by the statesmen of other countries, the second speaker of the evening, Dr. W. T. Hull, of Swarthmore College, had a subject which seemed to follow in a most natural sequence to its predecessor, viz., "The Two Peace Conferences at the Hague," which had so much to do with many of the policies and pathways opened up by Hamilton and his contemporaries.

Dr. Hull was one of the American delegates to those remarkable conventions, and his presentations of the inside history of their activities and results opened the eyes of the boys in many ways. Although generally considered as fruitless by the outside world, Dr. Hull presented many facts which proved beyond a doubt that wonderful progress was made in attaining many of the objects for which the two conferences were held. One of the most striking proofs was the simple fact alone that of the 59 leading and independent nations of the world but 21 were represented at the first conference in 1899 with but less than one hundred delegates present; while at the second one in 1907, 44 countries were represented with nearly three hundred delegates in attendance. Again, while very little headway was made towards the consummation of the prime objects in calling the conference, viz., limiting the armament of the nations, great strides were made in limiting the rights and activities of belligerent nations and protecting the rights, lives and property of neutral nations. Four actual cases were cited to prove that war was averted in four occasions by the arbitration of questions between nations, which heretofore almost inevitably led to actual warfare with its awful consequences.

Of especial interest was the speaker's careful enumeration of some of the remarkable achievements of our leading delegates, White in 1899, and Choate in 1907, and of the influence exerted by them in the deliberations of those august bodies, as well as the effects resulting from the activities of Secretary Root since the last conference. No greater testimony is needed as to the manner in which Dr. Hull's able presentation of this difficult subject was received, than to say, that although the hour was late when he finished, he held even the run-to-catch-the-train suburbanites until he was through, and received one of the heartiest ovations ever accorded a speaker before our chapter.

In spite of the general apathy which is sure to appear with the approach of spring in every chapter, the attendance was well over fifty per cent of the chapter membership and as enthusiastic as a ready and primed political convention.

Plans are on foot to hold our annual banquet at the Hotel Walton on March 27th, and from present indications it promises to surpass its predecessors.

The Teller Tells

By H. C. HURST.

Two boys were bragging of their respective fathers. Said Jimmie, "My pa's a policeman." Johnnie, not to be outdone, replied in a superior tone, "Huh! That's nothin'. My pa's a teller in a bank." "What does he do?" asked Jimmie. "O he tells people where to take the elevator," was the reply.

The man behind the wicket of the large city bank, more especially if it is a savings institution, must be a directory, cyclopaedia, almanac and dream-book rolled into one. He must have at his tongue's end the location of every other bank, every business block and hotel in the city, and must be Johnny-on-the-spot with directions to the nearest express office, branch postoffice, and drug store. He must be able to tell, "right off the bat," what car to take to go anywhere, what the weather will be next week, and who will be the next president. Nor must he let the fund of his information run below the required legal reserve, lest he be without a ready answer when some man steps up and asks: "Has my wife been here yet this morning? I was to meet her here. She is a large lady, wears glasses, has one gold tooth and a double chin."

Just as amusing are the various methods of approaching the window adopted by the different depositors. One lady, who seems to have an extra "S" in her vocabulary, always says, "This morning I want to make a deposit." Another depositor, also of the feminine persuasion, invariably announces: "Please, mister, I would like to insert some money into the bank." Needless to say, her desire is gratified without the use of a jimmy.

Then there is the big, fat man with a smile and a joke; the thin, sour man; the small boy, with his first deposit, too timid to speak; the little girl, gay and talkative; the big girl, just as gay, perhaps, but more quiet; all are grist in the teller's mill.

Comes also the rude man, who pushes in ahead of some one else; the polite man who always shakes hands with you; the clumsy man who knocks over the cuspidor in approaching, blushes, apologizes, and, just to show that his heart is in the right place, spills your ink all over the counter.

Of course, fellow-laborers, you all know the woman who gets to your window at about the eleventh hour, and while the line behind her grows and grows, and growls and growls, tells you how "her husband's brother's wife back in Kansas up and died, and he was going to marry that upstart of a Smith girl, only the children all objected so that it broke up, and then what did he do but—" You never hear what he did, for in a polite but firm voice you say, "Excuse me, madam, but I must wait on the people behind you. Kindly step to one side."

The savings bank literally does business with "all kinds" of foreigners. The little Jap comes in smiling, tips his hat, and grins from ear to ear while you are waiting on him. And he always says goodbye when he goes.

The beady eyes of the Chinese customer never miss a motion that you make while he is at the window, and if you think that "John" does not "savvy" you are very much mistaken.

The big, stolid Russians and the fiery men of Italy generally bring an interpreter with them. Greeks, too, often come, for they are good savers. But their names are fearfully and wonderfully made, and longer than the space between two pay-days. One in particular we had to request to always come early in the morning so that we could get his name written on the deposit tag before the bank closed in the afternoon.

In these latter days the idea of separate windows for paying and receiving has about been relegated to the junk pile, along with the Boston ledger for individual accounts and other shop-worn, dog-eared methods. Therefore the old question of who shall make out the checks and deposit slips is a weightier matter than ever, and the teller who does not instruct his customers in the way they should go is in danger of contracting writer's cramp.

Beware of the man who throws down a twenty and innocently asks for "two tens and a five." He is trying to get you. He is a wolf in sheep's clothing, but don't you be the lamb.

If a man comes to your window and asks where he can find the cashier, don't tell him, at least not until you have some idea of what his business is, for the cashier has troubles of his own. Ninety-nine times out of a hundred what the man before you meant to ask was, "Where can I get this check cashed?"

And, finally, what are the teller's duties?

In a nut-shell: He must please everyone and offend no one. He must never take in any bad money, and must never pay out any of his good money without receiving an exact equivalent in return therefor.

And he must never forget.

New York Chapter News

During the year the members of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Banking have an opportunity to attend series of lectures on subjects of importance to them, and finally the members are given an examination. The examinations this year have shown a low percentage of failures.

The Institute is an organization of 10,000 men from all the banks in the United States, who are perfecting their knowledge of banking both by conducting courses of instruction themselves, and by alliance with available schools of finance, law, and economics. It is a section of the American Bankers Association.

"It took Bismarck eighteen years to train an army which could conquer France," said George E. Allen, educational director of the institute, recently, "and we are trying to train our young men to take care of the finances of the nation. We are not Bismarcks, but we have been in existence for the past ten years, we have ten thousand members, and we are making progress. The average of our men is much higher than that of the students in the great universities. We have fifty-three chapters and a correspondence chapter. We want only men with a serious purpose in view, and I firmly believe that fully 15 per cent of our chapters consists of the cream of the young men of America, of a higher order of character and intellect than any other body of men on earth."

The institute is affiliated with New York University, Northwestern University in Chicago, and with individual instructors and institutions in Cincinnati, Washington, Baltimore, Springfield, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee, St. Louis, New Orleans, and other cities. A few years ago it used to be the fashion for business men to sneer at the theoretical teaching of business and finance in the universities but only a few weeks ago E. H. Harri-man admitted, in a speech at Yale, the superiority of the university man with backbone and persistence over the man without a university education. But the awe in which the college graduate was formerly held is now vanishing.

"A few years more," says Milton L. Wicks, chairman of the educational committee of the New York chapter, "will have settled the question as to whether a college education is to be preferred to an early start in business without such training."

The chapters of the American Institute of Banking are systematic combinations of educational work and fraternal inspiration, especially adapted to cities of considerable size and financial activity. The correspondence chapter includes in its membership country bank men, officers, and employees. The Monthly Bulletin of the institute is the official medium of chapter intercommunication.

"How many of the directors," asks L. N. Roe, in this bulletin, "have read the national bank act? How many know the duties of directors and what the courts have decided as to the responsibility and liability of directors? These are two of the twenty-nine questions which national bank examiners are directed by the comptroller to ask the directors of national banks," and goes on to point out that those who have earned certificates from the American Institute of Banking would find these questions easy to answer.

Education in preparation for the institute certificate of proficiency in practical banking, commercial law, and political economy, is provided by the alliances mentioned above between chapters and suitable schools of finance and law. Examinations for these certificates are known as final examinations.

"Make the certificate of the institute a requirement to be met by the men seeking offices in the gift of the American Institute of Banking," urges Milton L. Wicks, in the Bulletin, "and our officers will sign more of these certificates in the future than they have signed in the past."

The institute is prepared to supply courses in English grammar and rhetoric to those who are deficient in these subjects. The hours of instruction are either at night or in the late afternoon, and the clerks in the New York banks have frequently been known to attend a lecture for an hour and then return to their bank to continue their work. It must also be remembered that these eager students are carrying the additional onus of their studies by sheer will power, when they have already done a day's work, and are really in need of recreation and rest.

The last annual convention of the institute was held in June at Providence, and the convention for 1909 will be held at Seattle.

More of the Season's New Books

Last week we had "The Spell," this week we have "The Straw," and thus goes the fashion in titles. "The Straw" is a brilliant fox-hunting story of charming English country life. Miss Rina Ramsay is the author and The Macmillan Co., the publishers. The book bubbles over with the spirit and dash of the hunting field; in great measure the plot itself turns upon the outcome of a steeplechase.

Against this background of exciting, outdoor sport Miss Ramsay has placed characters as full of life as the thoroughbreds they ride. Only a few stand out prominently from the rest of the field, but these few are drawn with skill and vigor.

The excitement, the spice of danger, and the keen air of the hunting fields, which make fox-hunting so dear to the English, have been fairly caught by Miss Ramsay and translated into print in a story of passionate love and quiet self-sacrifice set in a manly outdoor sporting atmosphere.

"The Miracles of Antichrist" is the Selma Lagerloff masterpiece "done into English" by Pauline Bancroft Flach. Little, Brown & Co. of Boston are the publishers.

The text in Russian is by that gifted and poetic writer, Selma Lagerloff who offers a work of rare interest in "The Miracles of Antichrist," which deals with the life and superstitions of the unfortunate Sicilians whose native place has so recently been turned to desolation by the destroying hand of nature. The descriptions given of the once beautiful island are indeed worthy of a poet's pen, and the insight into the life and genius of the strange, unhappy people remarkable, even in a poet. Of their poverty and wrongs many stories are circulated to-day, but the elements in their character that intensified the power and pathos, as well as picturesqueness of the drama only word pictures such as this true author and artist draws could in any sense set forth. Fierce and impulsive, superstitious and ignorant, all the passions for either good or evil wrought as by fire in their troubled lives. Devotion and vindictiveness struggled for supremacy in their turbulent ways, and the tragic end that swept them from the face of the earth seemed almost the only one quite fitting the stormy elements in their life and character. To present such scenes and contrasts as their story covers required all the power of genius that the author brings to it and the picture of the natural beauty of the region now lying in darkness adds to the force of the shifting colors of the drama with striking effect. The great Messina earthquake has found a fitting biographer in the literary sense.

New York Convention Dates

The committee of arrangements of the New York State Bankers Association was entertained at dinner recently by ex-President Chas. Elliott Warren at the Union League Club in New York City. Plans for holding the next annual convention were talked over, and it was finally decided to hold the convention at the Fort William Henry Hotel at Lake George July 15th and 16th. The hotel is large and commodious and can easily accommodate 500 guests.

Invitations to address the convention have been sent to Governor Hughes, Senator Beveridge and Lieutenant-Governor White. The principal address will probably be made by F. A. Vanderlip, and a committee has been appointed to wait upon Mr. Vanderlip for the purpose of gaining his consent to address the bankers of his adopted state. Governor Hughes has, through his secretary, practically agreed to be there.

Arrangements for a special train to the convention are under way, and every detail looking to the comfort and pleasure of the delegates and guests will be attended to.

Those at the dinner the other evening were: President E. S. Tefft, Secretary Eldredge, Treasurer Runkle, Chairman of Entertainment committee Hiram Smith, Hon. Luther Mott, Chas. Haskins and Chas. Elliott Warren.

San Francisco Chapter Lecture

The first of a series of lectures on banking, to be delivered by Prof. A. C. Whitaker of Stanford University before the San Francisco Chapter, American Institute of Banking, took place Tuesday evening in the institute's quarters in the First National Bank building.

Citizens Bank to Build

At a meeting of the directors of the Citizens Bank of Pine Bluff, Ark., it was decided that a six-story office building should be constructed on the bank's present site. The bank will occupy the entire third floor and the balance of the building will be occupied as offices.

Kansas Convention News

W. W. Bowman, secretary of the state association says: The twenty-second annual convention of the Kansas Bankers Association will be held in the city of Wichita, Wednesday and Thursday, May 26th and 27th. It will be enough to promise that this convention will in all its appointments equal the high standard of former conventions of the association. This brief preliminary announcement is but to call attention to the convention, the time and the place, and to make an early suggestion to every banker in Kansas to mark the above dates "taken." The Hotel Cary will be convention headquarters.

The Citizens National of El Reno

The Citizens National of El Reno, Okla., is a United States depository, and in its latest statement shows total resources of $767,760, with deposits of $673,347. It has a capital, surplus and profits of $85,000. C. L. Engle is cashier of the Citizens National.

Southern Conditions

Eugene Snowden, southern traveling representative of the National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis, who recently returned from a trip through the South, says: "Business in the South during the autumn was not up to preceding prosperous years. However, it was far from being poor. The financial condition of the merchants is sound and that of the planters is fairly good; but as a rule they are not nearly in as good a position or condition as they were a year ago. The cost of producing the present cotton crop has been considerably above normal, whereas the price is not only below expectations, but is not profitable, in some cases even entailing a loss. Looking forward, it may be safe to predict that this will have a strong tendency to curtail acreage for the coming year. The people, no doubt, will diversify their crops, raise more corn, and pay more attention to stock-raising in the future. By so doing, the prosperity of the agricultural portion of the South would be augmented. Considering the rich resources of the South, its increase in population and the large amount of capital invested there in recent years, the prospects for general prosperity in that favored section are exceedingly bright."

St. Louis Surety Companies

Surety companies operating in St. Louis have been experiencing a remarkable series of losses recently, due to breaches of trust on the part of those bonded, which have attracted wide public attention. In a number of instances the surety companies have been reimbursed by the relatives or friends of the persons bonded, but in several instances the losses have fallen upon the companies. Where the losses were made good by relatives the companies have refrained from prosecuting the defaulters and embezzlers.

Up to the past few months St. Louis had not suffered greatly from the wave of embezzlements and defalcations, which statisticians have noted as sweeping over the country as a result of the financial stringency, and as a further result of the decline of speculative stocks and their failure to make expected recoveries. Recently, however, St. Louis has had its full share.

The St. Joseph Clearing House Association

The St. Joseph, Mo., Clearing House Association has unanimously decided to inaugurate a system of bank examinations under its direction such as obtains in Chicago. There is this difference, however, that the St. Joseph association will employ a firm of chartered accountants, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., to do the examining. It is probable that an examiner from the firm will be placed in charge of the work and remain there continuously.

The plan of clearing house examinations, which originated in Chicago, is expected to work great good in the towns where it is established. The local examining bureau has, so far as can be learned, shown an unusual degree of independence and has served not only to correct abuses but to gradually educate the management of the different banks to see the merits of a high standard of banking practice and also to restrain other kinds of practices where the education idea has failed. A clean bill of health from an impartial and competent examiner is a gratifying report to be able to make by the president of a bank to the board of directors.

That the smaller cities should take up the clearing house examination plan is regarded by the banking fraternity as an important movement in the interest of good banking.

The First State Bank of Brazoria

The First State Bank of Brazoria, Tex., was launched last week, with a fully paid up capital of $10,000. The directors are J. S. Rice, president of the Union Bank and Trust Company of Houston; D. J. Ogburn, stockman and planter; John G. Smith, Dr. Marcus A. Weems, Dr. C. C. Hampill, Will M. Brooks, manager of the state farm, and J. V. Hinkle.

The active officers will be John G. Smith, president, and D. G. Ogburn, cashier. The directorate is composed of representative men, and, with the exception of Mr. Rice, they are all residents of this county.

Kansas City Bank Clearings

Kansas City still retains sixth rank among the cities of the United States in bank clearings. The Kansas City clearings for the last week were $49,345,000.

Texas State Banks

The Texas state department of banking has given out a statement showing the financial condition of 328 state banks and 47 state bank and trust companies at the close of business on February 5th. The statement shows these institutions in a flattering condition, there being a total reserve of a little over 51 per cent of the demand deposits. Individual deposits in these banks and trust companies reached $8,000,000. There has been an increase of over $4,000,000 in individual deposits from November 27, 1908, to February 5, 1909.

G. T. Cutts Appointed Bank Examiner at Large

Mr. Murray, Comptroller of the Currency, has appointed George T. Cutts of Missouri national bank examiner at large. George T. Cutts was a bank examiner under William B. Ridgely, ex-Comptroller, and was appointed receiver of the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, when it was closed in November, 1907. When the bank was reorganized and reopened, Mr. Cutts became its vice-president. He retired from the vice-presidency last December.

The Central National of St. Louis

M. R. Sturtevant has been elected vice-president and J. A. Berninghaus cashier of the Central National of St. Louis. Mr. Sturtevant became cashier of the Central National shortly after its organization in 1906. Prior to that he had served as a national bank examiner in Oklahoma and Texas for six years, and he is credited with knowing personally more Oklahoma bankers than any banker in St. Louis. His promotion to the vice-presidency by the board of directors was in recognition of his worth to the institution.

Mr. Berninghaus began his banking career with the Mechanics' National sixteen years ago. When H. P. Hilliard, now head of the Central National, became cashier of the Mechanics-American, Berninghaus was general utility clerk. Mr. Hilliard had him promoted to an assistant cashiership. It was expected when Mr. Hilliard resigned from the Mechanics-American last week to go to the Central that Berninghaus would follow him, and his appointment as cashier does not come as a surprise.

City National of Granbury

J. H. Doyle has been elected to the presidency of the City National of Granbury, Tex., to succeed L. B. Sikes, who tendered his resignation to accept the presidency of the Fort Worth State Bank.

First National of Independence

On account of recent changes in holdings of stock in the First National at Independence, Mo., Bernard Zick, Sr., and Joseph Zick, father and brother, respectively, of Bernard Zick, jr., president of the bank, have resigned as members of the directory. John C. Knorpp of Kansas City and G. A. Pinnell of Independence have been elected as their successors. There will be no change in the active officers of the bank.

New Bank for Buell

E. H. Ham, chairman of the republican county committee, has been selected as cashier of the new bank at Buell, Mo. The new institution will start with a capital stock of $10,000.

To Erect a New Building

The First State Bank and Trust Co. of Snyder, Tex., is to erect a new bank building.

St. Louis Bank Clearings

St. Louis bank clearings for the past week were $65,746,265.

Mortgage Bill Vetoed

The Kansas mortgage registration fee bill, providing for a registration fee of fifty cents on each $100 of the face value of the mortgage and exempting the mortgage from further taxation, has been vetoed by Governor Stubbs. The governor has been working three days on this bill, getting the best evidence he could find for and against the bill.

Oklahoma Guaranty Law Amendment

Governor Haskell of Oklahoma has approved the Roddie bill, amending the bank guaranty law by limiting the amount of the assessment that may be made on banks in any one year to 2 per cent and the guaranty fund to 5 per cent of the deposits in state banks.

New York Banking and News Letter

By J. R. MORGAN

The Fourth National of New York City, which owns and occupies the northeast corner of Pine and Nassau streets, has acquired from the Germania Life Insurance Company the adjoining building at the southeast corner of Cedar and Nassau streets. It gives the bank control of the entire block front on the east side of Nassau street from Pine to Cedar streets. The sale was closed Saturday through William H. Wheelock, vice-president of the Douglas Robinson-Charles S. Brown Company.

The Germania Company has been holding its property at $1,500,000, and while those interested declined to discuss the subject it is understood that the actual price paid was in the neighborhood of that figure. Measuring 73.1 feet on Nassau street and 73.2 feet on Cedar street, the Germania Life plot has an area of about 4,900 square feet, so that on the basis of $1,500,000 the price is about $307 a square foot. Taking into account the size of the plot, this is believed to be the highest figure yet paid in the financial district. It has been surpassed only by the price paid for the 1,200 square feet at the southeast corner of Broadway and Wall street, and by that paid over thirty years ago for the small parcel at the southwest corner of Broad and Wall streets.

On the site the bank intends to erect a modern office building with adequate quarters for its own use on the ground floor.

Until the Equitable gets ready to put up its sixty-two story structure, the new Fourth National Building will have practically unobstructed light from all directions, and even after that it will still enjoy this advantage on three sides of its new building.

Bankers' Credits Increase

The great ease in money in New York City, with the difficulty of finding employment for capital, even at very low rates of interest, have caused the accumulation of bankers' credits on the other side and this itself has been an important factor in advancing and maintaining the rates for exchange. In this connection what may be termed a change of heart on the part of our money lenders has figured conspicuously in the accumulation of these credits. For instance, in August of last year, when the surplus reserves of the clearing house banks were above \$65,000,000 and call money was ruling at 1 per cent, domestic lenders were patiently waiting for better rates than  $3\frac{3}{4}$  or 4 per cent for six months. Here was a difference of practically 3 per cent and the expected increase in general business that would have made better rates never came. Now call money is ruling at or close to 2 per cent and lending institutions are offering six months' money in abundance at 3 per cent, and are lending ten months' money at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent and that too, with bank reserves below \$13,000,000, and with quite an extensive gold efflux in progress. Thus they are trying to retrieve the error of the past and place their capital on time at a much narrower margin over call loans than in August last.

To Hold Special Meetings March 31st

The Bowling Green Trust Co. is to be merged soon with the Equitable Trust Co., the new company to continue business under the latter name. The plan of the merger has been approved by the officers of both institutions and sanctioned by Clark Williams, state superintendent of banks. The agreement is to be submitted to the stockholders at special meetings on March 31st.

The Bowling Green's capital stock was reduced in 1906 from $2,500,000 to $1,000,000 by the sale of $1,500,000 worth of New York City bonds held by the company, and the proceeds were distributed as a 60 per cent cash dividend to stockholders. The Bowling Green stock, upon consummation of the consolidation, will be liquidated at $410.29 a share.

The Metropolitan Trust Dividend

The Metropolitan Trust Co., New York City, has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 6 per cent, payable March 31st. Books closed March 19th and reopen April 1st.

New York Legislative News

There is little in the banking bills introduced in the state legislature from the banking committees of the senate and assembly to disturb the equanimity of New York's trust companies. These are four in number and adopt suggestions made by the superintendent of banks, Clark Williams, in his report for the amendment of the bank act of last year. One merely restores to mortgage, loan and investment corporations a right they had previous to last year's law, allowing them to sell their bond obligations at less than par.

Another is of more importance financially, remedying as it does the possible mischief of compelling the throwing of securities upon the market compulsorily at an adverse season to the sacrifice of properties owned by the companies for their stockholders. Under the banking act any trust company which on April 30th, 1908, held stock in another financial corporation in excess of 10 per cent of the amount of the issued and outstanding stock of such corporation was obliged to sell the excess on or before April 13th of the present year. By the new bill the period of grace for the fulfillment of this obligation is extended two years—the limit date being now fixed at April 13, 1911. The genesis of this bill is probably due to the last few months being unpropitious for realizing properties held by the one or two institutions with reference to which the particular clause of the banking act was originally framed.

Five other banking bills have been introduced on the initiative of the New York State Bankers Association by having been drafted by that body's committee. The most interesting of these is the proposal making it a felony punishable by $1,000 fine or imprisonment for five years or less, to give a person a check on a bank knowing that there were not sufficient funds or credit to meet it.

The Bronx Safe Deposit Company

The board of directors of the Bronx Safe Deposit Company, Tremont and Park avenues, have declared a dividend of 1½ per cent, payable on April 15th, to stockholders of record on April 10th.

The German National

The gross profits of the German National in 1908 were $2,445,000, against $2,219,000 in 1907. The regular dividend of 6 per cent has been declared on the $20,000,000 capital stock.

The New York Chamber of Commerce

Beginning next month the New York Chamber of Commerce will publish a monthly printed bulletin of sixteen or twenty pages.

The American Surety Company

Securities Corporation Company

The Guaranty Trust Company

J. Alexander Hemphill, Jr., has been selected for the important position of president of the Guaranty Trust Company, according to current report. No formal announcement to this effect, it is said, will be made until Mr. Harriman returns to New York; this financier with A. D. Julliard and Frederick Eaton were appointed a committee to select a successor to Mr. Castles, who left the Guaranty to become president of the Union Trust Company. Since Mr. Castles left, Mr. Hemphill, who has filled the position of senior vice-president, has had control of the institution and his record has commended itself to the directors. Unless something entirely unforeseen occurs, Mr. Hemphill's promotion will be officially announced in the near future.

The Guaranty Trust Company has prepared a booklet on the subject of amortization, and containing also the laws of the state of New York governing the investment of trust funds and savings banks, which is very instructive.

The First National pays special attention to coal, oil and R. R. accounts. The bank has a capital of $25,000, and surplus and profits of $6,423. The officers are: W. R. McDowell, president; P. K. Salsburg, vice-president; A. E. Orr, cashier; W. P. Kincheloe, assistant cashier.

Schaefer Says Minnesota Law Failed of Its Purpose

Public Examiner Anton Schaefer wants an amendment to the present banking law because it does not prevent private institutions from doing a banking business. It prevents their using the name of banks, unless they are incorporated. The law was intended to make all banks incorporate under one law or the other, state or federal, but Mr. Schaefer says it has failed of its purpose. He has sent a communication to the senate committee on banking urging the change.

Two Hundred Dollars Reward

Rides Like a Flying Machine

"My Winton Six is giving good satisfaction," writes Mr. John W. Bell of Hudson, N. Y., from his winter home at Palm Beach, Fla. "Still that does not half express it—it is superb. There is something wonderful in the way you have built automobiles and the pleasure you have given. Just recall my purchases: Your 1899 phaeton, your 1901 surrey, your 1904 touring car, your 1906 touring car, your 1909 six-cylinder—all of them running in good order, each more wonderful than the other, and always with some new delight added. But now I am afraid the end draws near, for what can you add to the Winton Six? It rides like a flying machine without the latter's danger."

Mr. Bell has had all the types—single-cylinder, double-cylinder, four-cylinder and six-cylinder, and he fears we shall be unable to improve the six. You would think so, too, if you knew the excellence of the self-starting, sweet-running

Land Speculation Responsible for Failure

The State Bank of Baldwin is in the hands of the state banking commissioner. The capital stock and surplus of the depositors have been impaired, it is said, by unfortunate speculations in land in the West and South. The latest report of the bank shows liabilities of $300,000, of which $216,000 is deposits. The capital stock is $50,000. M. B. Bailey, of Hudson, who owns one-fifth of the capital stock, is president. Banking Commissioner Bergh is unable to say whether the depositors will lose or not.

The bank also states that this is the third check that has been presented to them in the same handwriting, each signed under a different name.—M. A. Graettinger, secretary.

A Director for Fifty-two Years

John H. Van Dyke, one of Milwaukee's oldest citizens, who died last week, for fifty-two years was a director of the old Bank of Milwaukee and its successor, the present National Exchange Bank. He was elected a member of the original bank board a year or two after the bank was founded, or in 1856. He made it a point to attend every meeting of the board, when in the city and able to be present. He was at the meeting for the last time three weeks ago.

He became a member of the Chamber of Commerce in 1863, five years after the formation of the Chamber.

Northwestern's Tribute

At a special meeting of the executive committee of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, a draft of the memorial prepared upon the death of J. H. Van Dyke, for forty years a member of the board of trustees, and at one time president of the company, was adopted. The committee was composed of George C. Markham, president of the company, Gen. F. C. Winkler, A. K. Hamilton and H. F. Whitcomb. The memorial follows:

The death of John H. Van Dyke, a trustee of this company from its organization in Milwaukee in 1862 until his resignation in 1904, serving as its president during five years of this period, brings to mind a long and highly useful and honorable career.

Mr. Van Dyke came to Milwaukee as a young lawyer, before Wisconsin was a state, and entered upon the practice of his profession. He soon developed a strong grasp of business affairs which, with his clearness of insight and sound judgment, made him one of the most valued of legal advisers. His industry and fidelity in the service of all interests confided to him could not be excelled. No trust placed in his hands was ever slighted or neglected. He was a broad-minded, public spirited citizen, held in the highest and universal regard. All the nobler charities of the community had his assistance and support. In personal character none stood on a higher plane. He was a kindly, genial, cultured gentleman. His services to this company, which largely fell into the period of its early struggles, were of a high order and his recognized probity and honor contributed effectually to the prestige of its name.

This tribute to the memory of an honored and distinguished citizen, closely connected with this company, is placed on record by the executive committee.

At a recent meeting of the directors of the Citizens National of Irwin, Louis S. Malone was elected director of the institution succeeding the late B. F. Jones. Mr. Malone is treasurer of the Irwin Foundry and Mine Car Co. and is an aggressive business man of the highest ideas. He is public spirited and is a leading citizen and adds strength to this already very strong bank.

Childs & Childs Letter

The weekly letter of Childs & Childs says: "The annual report of the Pittsburgh Coal Company, published this week, was as poor as expected, but the market had more than discounted the effect and the preferred stock advanced after the figures came out. This stock is very scarce in our market, and it would respond quickly to a little buying. The Pittsburgh coal trade has probably seen its worst days for a long time to come and improvement will be reflected in a recovery in coal stocks."

Tillman, who has had eight years' experience in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and who has been a bank examiner for one year doing special examining work in various parts of the country, has been assigned to the examiner's district in Pennsylvania made vacant by the death of Examiner Channing Bingham. Mr. Tillman will begin his work there at once.

Real Estate Brokers' Meeting

At a meeting of real estate brokers of Pittsburgh held in the Berger Building it was decided to appoint a committee of 15 brokers to undertake the formation here of a real estate organization. This was about the most important outcome of the meeting, the latter having been called to hear reports of the committee appointed some time ago to go to Harrisburg to lobby against the enactment of a law requiring realty agents and brokers to give bond for faithful performance of their duties.

Henry W. Armstrong of the Northside acted as spokesman for the Harrisburg committee, and assured the meeting that the bonding bill has been permanently shelved. When the committee previously appointed to report on permanent organization was called on to report it was found that none of its members was present, and it was then decided to increase its number to 15, to be chosen by Josiah Speer, chairman of the two meetings of brokers so far held.

Des Moines, March 18.—The bankers of Group Six held the most successful meeting in the history of the group in Des Moines, March 11th. More than 250 bankers sat down to the banquet in the Savery Hotel as guests of the Des Moines Bankers club. No special program had been prepared but instead discussion of the postal savings bank and of guaranteed bank deposits consumed the evening. John W. Foster of the Citizens National of Guthrie Center was elected chairman for the coming year. A. E. Hindorf of the Jasper County Savings at Newton was elected secretary. The bankers, unanimously, adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, that on principle, we are opposed to the United States engaging in the banking business through the medium of the postal savings bank, and we are particularly opposed to the provisions of the Carter bill now pending in congress as recently amended by its author. We believe its inevitable effect will be to transfer a large volume of deposits from the country to the already congested money centers and we respectfully request our senators and representatives in congress to oppose the enactment of the measure."

J. G. Berryhill Principal Speaker

James G. Berryhill, director of the Iowa National of Des Moines, was the principal speaker of the evening. He opened the discussions by speaking against the postal savings bank to which he declared at the outset that he is unequivocally opposed, a statement that resulted in applause from his hearers. Mr. Berryhill took up first the arguments in favor of the postal savings bank and answered them as he went along. He declared that the argument that the government should provide a safe place for the deposits of its citizens implied a distrust in bankers that is unfair and decidedly not in accordance with real conditions.

Then again, he declared that other countries prove untrue the statement that postal savings banks call forth hidden wealth and quoted a few figures on conditions in foreign countries to prove his contention. Along this same line, he asserted that it is not true that foreigners in America send their savings back to Europe because they fear American banks but rather, he said, because they wish to bring their relatives over here and send them the money upon which to come. He characterized the statement that much money is sent abroad as fallacious and greatly exaggerated. Lastly, Mr. Berryhill referred to the oft repeated argument that the two great political parties endorsed the postal savings bank. He said that the republican platform was written by Attorney-General Wade Ellis who included the postal savings bank suggestion of Postmaster-General Meyer and the convention adopted it by default. Then he said the Democrats put in a bank guaranty plank with postal savings banks as an alternative because they feared the Republicans would seek to make an issue on the question.

Against Postal Savings Banks

Then Mr. Berryhill launched into a decidedly strong argument against the proposed postal banks. He declared that the idea is bureaucratic and not democratic and pointed out the dangers that will arise from placing in the hands of one man, not responsible to the people for his election, the disposition of the millions of dollars of the people's money that will find its way into the postal savings banks.

"The Postmaster-General will dispose of that money where it will do him the most good politically, every postmaster will be his emissary and no stone will be left unturned to place the people's money where it will help along the political ambitions of those who handle it and of the political party in power," Mr. Berryhill said.

The Panic of 1907 an Example

"We had an example of this abuse of power during the panic of 1907. How well we Westerners remember how the Secretary of the Treasury dumped all the money that he could gather together into the coffers of the favored bankers of Wall street. The plain bankers scattered over the prairies of the Middle West will have little influence as to where the postal funds are to be distributed. It is true that the postmasters are to be given the power to determine where these funds are to be deposited but each postmaster will select the banks according to the will of his chief. The national banker must become a member of the chosen band or he gets none of the postal deposits. And given them, he must obey the dictation of the postmaster or he loses them. The banker thus loses his virility as a citizen and becomes a mere cog in this gigantic political machine. The amendment to the Carter bill proposed by Senator Cummins which would permit the deposit of postal funds in state as well as national banks only increases the machine and its power and the system becomes far more dangerous than a central bank with power and authority to do only a straight banking business."

Would Not Always Want Postoffice Deposits

Mr. Berryhill said that bankers would not always want the postoffice deposits because they could not loan them out at a profit since they would be always subject to recall. In times of stress, he said the postmaster would recall the deposits, distribute them among the favored few and the banker not thus favored would be forced to liquidate. He said that England, France and Germany established the postal banks because they needed money for carrying on military activities and in case of a war with the United States, this government would go for its funds to the postal banks. The same condition would occur if the government should seek to buy its railroads or need large amounts for waterway improvement, he said.

In Sympathy with His Views

The applause that greeted Mr. Berryhill showed that the bankers were in sympathy with his views. J. M. Dinwiddie of Cedar Rapids was to have been the next speaker but he was called away to catch a train. S. M. Leach of Adel, former chairman who was presiding, thereupon called upon Lieutenant Governor George W. Clarke. Mr. Clarke said that he thought Mr. Berryhill had taken a view that was rather too extreme. He said that the real thought of the postal savings bank is to encourage thrift and savings. "Don't think that if the postal savings bank is established, we shall all go to the demnition bow wows," said Mr. Clarke. "I don't believe that ex-President Roosevelt, President Taft and the other statesmen who favor the postal savings bank are in a conspiracy to deprive us of our liberties."

Three Chicago Speakers

Chairman Leach called upon Fred A. Crandall of the National City Bank of Chicago, John Fletcher of the Drovers Deposit National of Chicago and C. W. Ross of the Commercial National of Chicago. Each spoke briefly. John Blair of the Des Moines National said that postal savings banks are the opening wedge of a dangerous paternalism. George Grier of Deep River, chairman of the house of representatives committee on banks and banking in the Iowa legislature spoke on guaranteed deposits. He said that it has become somewhat a non-partisan question. But he counselled the bankers that while he does not think the time ripe for guaranteed deposits still if the question arises that Iowa bankers should do something, they must look at it as fair and square citizens and not from a selfish standpoint. Representative E. R. Moore of Cedar Rapids favored the appointment of more bank examiners, a sentiment that the bankers applauded. Mr. Moore said that the postal savings bank clause in the republican national platform was "political buncombe." Parley Sheldon of Ames, a democrat, was the final speaker and he said that while his party declared for guaranteed deposits, he wished to declare against them and said he was glad that such legislation is not probable in Iowa.

Legislative News

Three bills providing for the state guaranty of bank deposits were killed at one sweep by the house of representatives committee on banks and banking last week. The committee voted to recommend for indefinite postponement all three of the bills towards that end that were pending thus making it certain that there will be no legislation along that line at this session. However the democrats on the committee have presented a minority report and say they will make a fight on the floor of the house. The democrats very cleverly made their minority report on the Darrah bill which was the republican bill for deposit guaranty.

The committee recommended for passage a bill which amends the negotiable instrument law by adding this clause "But where the instrument is made payable at a fixed or determinable future time, the order to the bank to pay is limited to the day of maturity only."

The bill providing for the investment by savings banks of their funds in real estate outside of Iowa was reported for passage but was amended by adding the provision that no loan outside the state shall be made for more than forty per cent of the value of such real estate, exclusive of improvements, as fixed by an appraisalment by three disinterested persons. The house of representatives passed the Moore bill which provides that any fiduciary required by law to give bond may include the expense thereof as part of the lawful expense of executing his trust.

Iowa Convention Dates

The dates for the state convention of the Iowa State Bankers Association were decided upon as Thursday and Friday June 10th and 11th at a meeting of the executive committee at Waterloo. The annual convention will be held in Waterloo this year and from this time on, arrangements will go forward towards making the convention the biggest one ever held in the state. When the committee had finished its deliberations, the Waterloo bankers who belong to the state association entertained the committeemen at a banquet at the Ellis hotel.

Trust Companies of Iowa

Trust companies of the state are working industriously to secure a law through the present legislature permitting them to act as administrators or trustees of estates. James F. Toy of Sioux City and E. G. Johnson of Waterloo have both been in the city in the interests of the measure. The trust companies, it is said, do not want savings banks included in the bill. Two years ago the trust companies throttled a bill which would have permitted savings banks to act in that capacity and now the savings bank representatives in the legislature are not especially enthusiastic over the proposed bill.

The High School Bank

The high school bank at Stratford, started by Prof. Remsburg is making excellent progress as the result of the first week indicates. During the week the pupils deposited $100.44.

Stratford is a town of less than 600 population and as each pupil had been instructed to deposit only money actually earned, it may be seen that the children are taking kindly to the plan. Prof. Remsburg is getting letters of inquiry from far and wide.

First National of Winterset

An important change in Winterest banking circles took place when A. B. Schriver, P. J. Cunningham and E. E. Orvis bought a controlling interest in the First National of that city. Mr. Cunningham is president of the Winterset Savings and by the terms of the purchase, a merger will be formed which will give the institution the advantage of being the biggest in the county. The directory board of the proposed new bank will consist of P. J. Cunningham, A. B. Schriver, E. E. Orvis, L. M. Alexander and A. D. Alexander.

Des Moines Bank Clearings

One of the largest gains ever made in Des Moines clearings is reported for the week ending March 13th. The total clearings for the week were $4,062,553.75, a gain over the corresponding week in 1908 of $2,314,785.11.

Banking Notes

The Danbury Savings at Danbury has filed a renewal of its articles of incorporation changing the capital stock from $30,000 to $40,000. S. H. Santee is president, J. H. Crilly, vice-president, Louis Larson, cashier and W. D. Gibson, assistant cashier.

Fred Oxley of Corwith, trustee of the state bank of Corwith and of the defaulting cashier, J. H. Standring, has commenced suit in federal courts for the recovery of farm lands worth $30,000 transferred to the Corwith Bank just before the departure of Standring. The trustee hopes to secure the land for creditors of Standring who was declared bankrupt last June.

Among the out of town group bankers who attended the meeting of Group Six were O. H. Leonard of Cedar Falls, president of Group Seven, Karl Johnson of Osage, president of Group Three, M. J. Myers of the Merchants National at Cedar Rapids, Michael McDonald of the Bayard Savings at Bayard, E. H. Farrow of the Merchants National at Cedar Rapids, M. H. Head of the First National of Jefferson, W. G. Schroeder of the Continental National of Chicago.

Saving Banks' Dividends

It is not astonishing to learn that the deposits in Massachusetts savings banks last year did not show their usual increase over the year preceding. It would be surprising if they did, in view of the depression in industry which prevailed through most of the twelve months. That they did a little better than hold their own is gratifying, and they are pretty certain to do much better this year. Whether the banks can continue to earn enough to pay dividends at present rates is another question. The probability is that they cannot.

In this state and in New York the tendency is toward a reduction in interest rates and savings institutions are naturally affected by the movement. While money is cheap in the open market it isn't easy to lend deposits at a high rate. Money will always fetch what it is worth to the borrower, and no more.—Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen.

Group Two, A. B. A., Meeting

Newport, Ark., March 16.—Group Two of the Arkansas Bankers Association held its first annual convention at the Elks' Home in Newport Tuesday. Judge E. L. Boyce delivered an address of welcome and J. P. Coffin, cashier of the First National of Batesville, responded. Chairman C. C. Henry was one of the speakers of the afternoon, the topics of chief discussion being the postal savings bank and a state banking act.

Group Two embraces thirteen counties as follows: Randolph, Jackson, Independence, White, Woodruff, Sharp, Izzard, Fulton, Baxter, Cleburne, Lawrence, Stone and Marion.

Among the prominent visiting bankers present were Floyd Shock of St. Louis; George W. Rogers, S. L. Kahn and W. McLaughlin of Little Rock.

Minnesota Banks Merged

It is reported that the First National of Bertha, Minn., and the First State Bank merged under the former name. F. B. Coons, of Wadena, is president; Isaac Hazlett, of Minneapolis, and Frank Segrin, of Bertha, vice-presidents; J. C. Miller, cashier, and Edward Thompson, assistant cashier.

The State Bank of Gardner (N. D.) has been organized.

West Takes to Small Coin

The striking of more than a million cent pieces at the San Francisco Mint in 1908 made a new record in the history of the United States Mint and its branches, for never before since the coinage of pieces of this denomination was begun, in 1793, had such coins been struck anywhere but at the parent establishment at Philadelphia.

As a matter of fact, no need for the making of coins of this denomination in the West presented itself until within recent years, as the demand for cent pieces was confined almost exclusively to the Atlantic and middle Western States. In the West and Southwest this minor coin has had no purchasing value, was not recognized and was seldom seen in circulation. Indeed, even at the present time there are many Western localities in which cent pieces are not accepted.

In Colorado, for example, if a person tenders a five cent piece to a postmaster for two cent stamps he receives in exchange, together with his stamps, not a one cent piece but a one cent postage stamp. There are no cent pieces in the money drawer of the postmaster and he doesn't desire any.

In a Denver store a certain commodity is quoted at, say, 17 cents a pound. The purchaser must take either 15 or 20 cents' worth. Nothing less than 5 cents' worth is sold. Apples may be four for 5 cents, but one apple is also 5 cents, just the same.

Now the people of the Centennial State are going to have a chance of becoming acquainted with the little bronze cent, for it is the intention of the government to strike cent pieces at the new Denver Mint in 1909.

California has had as little use for the cent as other parts of the West. For many years no coin of less denomination than 10 cents had a purchasing value there, and in the gold days nothing less than 25 cents would buy anything, miners frequently throwing a handful of small silver pieces out into the street as useless weight to carry, the "two-bits" or quarter being the minimum current coin.

Times have changed and the people along the Pacific Coast have been quicker to adopt the cent than those in the Rocky Mountain district. Now the coin is used in such quantities that it has been found advisable to manufacture cents on the ground and thus save the expense of shipment across the continent from Philadelphia. For the calendar year of 1908 the United States Mint report shows that $11,150 worth of cents were struck at the San Francisco Mint and $323,279.87 worth at Philadelphia.

Following the custom of placing a distinguishing mark upon the coins struck at the different mints the new cent pieces made at the San Francisco and Denver mints will respectively bear the mint letters S and D.

The cent piece is the most profitable coin Uncle Sam turns out at his mints, the profit on its manufacture being estimated at something like 85 cents on the dollar when the coins do not return for redemption. The number of these pieces that do come back for redemption is infinitesimal in comparison with the millions coined every year.

The use of the copper cent has been yearly increasing in all parts of the country. As an interesting example of the small proportion of the cent pieces that are presented for redemption compared to the vast number issued the report of the director of the mint for 1907 showed that the cents of all kinds and dates, including old time copper cents and the nickel cents, that were redeemed amounted to only $27,453.22. Yet in the same year nearly a million dollars' worth were newly coined.

The coining presses of the Philadelphia mint are always making cent pieces. The coinage of gold and silver pieces may stop temporarily, but the manufacture of cents seems to go on forever.

The making of a cent entails almost as much work as the coining of a double eagle, for while a coining press has the capacity of striking ninety double eagles a minute yet the same press can make only one hundred cent pieces.

What Makes a Man?

It isn't the coin that you give away,

When you have plenty, that marks the man;
It's easy enough to smile, I say,

When fortune beams on your favored plan.
When life is rosy, 'twixt weak and strong,

No sign of difference ever shows;

But the brave man looms when the world
seems wrong,

The thing is, how do you bear your woes?

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., March 17.—Bankers in Spokane are highly gratified over the victory for this city in the fight before the interstate commerce commission for equitable rates against the transcontinental railroads and they believe it will result in making this city a more important financial center than ever before, also that the reduction will mean the complete readjustment of rates in western intermediate territory. They add that when the commission a few days ago ordered a reduction of 16 $\frac{2}{3}$  per cent on 27 of the 32 class rates from St. Paul and Chicago to Spokane, specifically indicated in the complaint, and held that the present freight rates were unjust and inherently unreasonable, it opened the way for Spokane to extend its trade to something like 100,000 square miles of territory in eastern Washington, northern Idaho, western Montana and northeastern Oregon, more than doubling the present zone. Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National, speaking for the Spokane Clearing House Association, of which J. P. M. Richards, head of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, is president, said that the decision will have the effect of bringing more money into local banks and that it will be a benefit in every way to the city and country. More than that, he added, it will mean factories and manufacturing plants and more wholesale houses and manufacturers' branches.

Spokane Outlook

Spokane is doing more municipal work, including extensions, betterment and special improvements, than any other city of the 120,000 class on the continent, while its building operations are also keeping pace. The records for new buildings show expenditures aggregating $517,210 in February, a gain of 5 per cent over the same month a year ago, while for the first two months of 1909 the estimated expenditure is $792,370, a gain of 31 per cent over the same period in 1908. John C. Ralston, city engineer, advises that plans calling for the expenditure of $3,200,000, exclusive of boulevards, parks, lighting and plumbing, have passed through his department since 1908, and W. W. Wither- spoon of the board of public works, says that special improvements, which cost $819,957 in 1908, will total more than $1,700,000 in 1909. A bond issue for $500,000 for bridges will be voted on at the city election in May. Aubrey Lee White, vice-president of the Spokane & Inland Empire Electric Railway system, who is president of the city park commission, has been delegated by Mayor C. Herbert Moore to select a committee of 25 to lay out a comprehensive and practicable civic plan. He has asked for a bond issue of $1,000,000 to carry on this work, which includes a civic center, parks and playgrounds. The committee is also at work on plans for general improvements, taking in sewer, water, street and boulevard systems, public buildings, playgrounds, park development and municipal art and public and semi-public buildings. As all the parties in the city are pledged to the movement, he says, it is now solely a question of the greatest good to the largest number for the longest time.

The Trustee Company

Harry A. Flood, president of the Trustee Company of Spokane, announces the purchase of the Eagle building at Riverside Avenue and Stevens Street, for $260,000. The structure is 60 by 142 feet, five stories high with a full basement. The gross income on rentals is $29,000 a year, or about 7 per cent net on the purchase price. It will be known as trustee property No. 3. The company distributed $10,625 on March 10th as rental dividends for the first quarter of 1909. This represents the profits on the Wolverton building, bought for $247,500 two years ago, and the Hyde building bought for $800,000 last fall. The first floor of the Eagle building is occupied by the Bank of Montreal, the four upper floors being used for hotel purposes. The leases will not expire until 1912. The property will be divided into 260 units of a value of $1,000 each, of which amount $30,000 was subscribed before the deal was closed. Mr. Flood announces that capital in Pennsylvania will be interested to the extent of $90,000. He has appointed Milton Huber of Spokane to open an office in Philadelphia.

Spokane Bank Clearings

Bank clearings in Spokane for the first two months in 1909 show remarkable gains over the same months in 1908, being $55,261,236, of which $26,370,378 is for February, as against $40,951,853 the first two months in 1908, and $30,113,764 the same period in 1907. Clearings for the week ended March 4th were the largest in the history of the city for any March, amounting to $7,124,595, as against $5,244,392 in 1908, a gain of 35 per cent, $5,849,593 in 1907 and $4,059,159 in 1906.

The Bankers Baseball League

Bankers Baseball League of Spokane has been organized with five teams, the president being Raymond F. Bigelow of the Old National bank. Arthur B. Lindblad of the Traders' National, is secretary-treasurer. The season will open early in April, three games a week being played. The teams and their managers are: Old National, E. P. Randall; Fidelity, Arthur Longshore; Exchange, Arthur Leighton; Traders', Ed. Morton; Spokane and Eastern, manager not chosen. The Old National won the championship in 1908 also the first leg on the Spokane Clearing House association's cup, which must be won three times to become the club's property.

Banking Notes

Bank deposits in Lincoln county, Wash., one of the large wheat producing districts tributary to Spokane, show a total of $2,411,808. Davenport heads the list with $572,790, while Almira is first $199,751, according to its population. Other towns report as follows: Wilbur, $474,303; Sprague, $355,023; Odessa, $310,000; Harrington, $180,000; Reardan, $176,396; Creston, $71,568; Edwall, $52,476; Govan, $19,000. Farmers say they will be able to do business until the next crop is harvested.

When George Greenwood, exchange teller at the Old National, resigned to become teller of the new savings department of the Union Trust Company, March 15th, 20 clerks were promoted. Mr. Greenwood was near the top, and every man down the line below him is affected by the vacancy. The Old National never employs new help that is experienced, but takes raw material and starts at the bottom. Thus, when a man steps out of the line, all those below him move up.

Prosecuting Attorney Kolb of Benton county and Kelley de Priest, assessor, have started to force the depositors in banks to pay taxes on their money, but they are meeting with obstacles, as the banks refuse to give out the names and amounts. The county officials intend that the county shall get all the money it is entitled to, and banks must pay as individuals do. It is probable that any bank declining to furnish a list of its depositors will find its surplus assessed, and the directors summoned into court to answer criminal charges.

Harry L. Day of the Hercules mine in the Coeur d'Alene district, announces that a pulp and paper mill to cost $2,000,000 will be built on the St. Joe river, 20 miles from Wallace, Idaho. C. A. Day and parties connected with the Marshall Field company of Chicago, are interested. Work will be started within four months and will be completed some time in 1910. A 10,000 horsepower plant, survey for which has already been completed, will be built across the river.

O. H. Greene, president of the Pioneer National of Ritzville, Wash., has bought the Espanola apartment house in Spokane for $100,000 as an investment. The structure contains 26 suites and the rentals amount to $915 a month. Mr. Greene gave as part payment, 1,100 acres of improved farm land near Ritzville, valued at $71 an acre.

First National of Arlington

Work will be started Monday on the building to be erected for the First National of Arlington, N. J., at Midland and Kearny avenues. It will cost about $20,000, and be two stories in height. The ground floor will be used for bank purposes, while on the second floor there will be two flats. Plans were drawn by Architect James F. Scrimshaw, and the contract has been awarded to Salmond Brothers' Company of Arlington. A building permit for the job has been issued. The site of the proposed building was recently purchased by the bank, and a house that had stood on the property for years was moved further back on the plot.

The structure will be thirty-six feet wide and seventy feet long, fronting on Kearny Avenue. The exterior will be of Roman brick and Indiana limestone, with copper cornices. The first floor will be finished in chestnut. A banking room for women will also be fitted out, and this is to be separated from the main public space by a partition. This room will be on the left of the front entrance.

In the rear will be a hall, 20x36 feet, which will be let for public purposes until such time as the bank will find need for this space. In the centre of the main banking room, behind the cashier's desk, will be two vaults.

The building will have a foundation of concrete. The main entrance on Kearny Avenue will be finished in quartered oak with vestibule doors. The entrance to the flats will be on Midland Avenue, as will be the entrance to the public hall.

Since the organization of the bank about two years ago, it has had quarters in a building at Forest Street and Midland Avenue. The site of the new structure is considered to be one of the best in the Arlington section and is midway between the business and residential portion. It is expected that the bank will move into the new quarters August 1st.

New Jersey Banks

Although the aggregate resources of the financial institutions in New Jersey have passed the half-billion dollar mark and have increased by more than thirty-seven million dollars during the past year, the financial and industrial depression of that period is reflected in the small gains made by the savings banks both as regards the number of depositors and the amount of the deposits. This at least is the deduction made by Commissioner David O. Watkins, of the department of banking and insurance, whose annual report covering savings banks, trust companies and state banks was sent to the printer this week.

The report shows that at the close of 1908 there were seventy-seven trust companies in operation. These had an aggregate capital stock of $15,445,700; resources of $191,744,389, and deposits of $142,642,900. There were at the same time twenty-eight savings banks having resources of $102,268,321 and deposits of $93,867,582.

The eighteen state banks had on November 27th a capital stock of $1,593,750; resources of $16,943,753, and deposits of $13,321,903. Combining these figures, it appears that the resources of these three classes of state institutions aggregated $310,927,463, and their deposits $250,032,475.

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that on November 27th last there were 177 national banks in New Jer-

Philadelphia Clearing House Anniversary

Just fifty-one years ago Monday the Philadelphia Clearing House Association was established. That was on March 22, 1858. At the time of the organization there were 17 banks in the association, with aggregate deposits of $16,000,000. Now there are 31 member banks, and the aggregate deposits amount to nearly $320,000,000. While the population of the city has trebled in the little over a half century, the deposits of the clearing house have been swelled 20 times over.

The semi-centennial anniversary of the association was celebrated one year ago at a banquet of the presidents of the member banks but no particular attention was paid Monday to the passing of another milestone.

Favors Central Bank

A central bank is the only cure for the financial ills of the country, according to Prof. W. H. This and other results of the present era of combinations is a menace to business in general, Prof. Scott asserted. He urged that big corporations be compelled to publish more intelligible balance sheets for the benefit of the investor who is not familiar with finance.

Out of the Mechanics-American staff, then, came a president and cashier for the Central, and a vice-president and cashier for the Hill bank. This all speaks well for the strong force which built up the Mechanics-American to the first rank.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

AFTER eight weeks' absence W. G. Edens is back at his desk in the Central Trust. The broken limb promises to be "good as new" shortly.

ALOT of Illinois bankers want to hold the next convention up on Wm. George's farm, or near it, this year, to sleep in tents and eat "in bulk," as they do at camp meeting. Cap. Smith's big woods, the "old swimmin' hole," and the good church ladies to have the lunch counter privilege. Couldn't be beaten much!

HERE'S to philosophical poems, said to have been composed by a banker for missionary uses. He says to put your own construction upon them. Here they are:

THERE is a man who never drinks,
Nor smokes, nor chews, nor swears;
Who never gambles, never flirts,
And shuns all sinful snares.
He's paralyzed.

THERE is a man who never does Anything that is not right;
His wife can tell just where he is,
At morning, noon and night.
He's dead.

EARLE PEASE, cashier of the First National at Grand Rapids, Wis., in a letter to a friend was kind enough to say that his bank subscribed to the "good CHICAGO BANKER and thought highly of it. The page 'Mainly about Banks and Bankers' is especially interesting."

YOUR old friend Hildreth, one of the main spokes in the Nebraska wheel, has two fine banks and this is what he tells his patrons, and it is what they like to know: "The past 18 months have covered a panic and two short crops. The Franklin State Bank and the Macon State Bank have each faithfully met the needs of its patrons. I am deeply sensible of the loyalty of our customers during this long and trying period. The Franklin State Bank and the Macon State Bank have gone through the entire 18 months without borrowing a dollar, without selling a dollar of paper, and without shipping in a dollar of currency. We have met this long panic period absolutely on our own resources."

THE executive council for the A. B. A. and those for the sections will meet this year at Briarcliff Manor, meetings at the Lodge, on May 3d, 4th and 5th. Great advances have been made in the last two years in the amount of work done at these meetings. Formerly the council perfunctorily met at a dinner at the Lawyers' club and the secretary did the rest, or put it over to another meeting. Now it means a week's hard constructive work.

THE A. B. A. has become a power for good. Good laws have followed their lead in many states. Protective measures are "old timers," costly, and of little real value. The big western state associations have left the parent far behind in this matter. The reward system is the only one worthy of mention here but there may be others.

NO one now in authority has any thing to sell to the Pinkertons and why their long criminal reports should go again into the annual proceedings book is a puzzler. There are other incongruities but it is the worst. The proceedings book should be as small as may be and the proceedings of the sections should go in. The list of delegates and list of members, including those deceased, should be left to the daily bunkholder, or to a pamphlet.

THE book of proceedings should be a complete new book each year, such as would be valued and kept in every financial library in this country and abroad. Look it over and see the rot it contains, much of it free (?) advertising, each year for the past ten.

THE council will find Col. Farnsworth progressive if they will strike up the music. Let us have one or two more "reform" sessions such as we had at Lakewood and, if necessary, another finance committee. One headquarters, one secretary with assistants, and no dead wood from the past. Farnsworth has done five times the work of any of his predecessors and is willing to do more. Give him the chance.

WE again state that the Clearing House banks of Chicago passed a resolution requesting all banks not to engage rooms in bulk for the A. B. A. convention at the various hotels for their customers. This action is commendable and will leave the hotels open for the bankers of the country to reserve their own accommodations, and they will be taken care of according to the date of their application, as first come will be first served. There are many good hotels in Chicago and some of them close to headquarters hotel. It is also expected that the New La Salle will be finished in time so that there need be no fear as to bankers securing desirable accommodations.

S. S. COOK, assistant cashier of the Northwestern National, at Minneapolis, has gone over to the Minnesota Loan and Trust Company, as cashier. M. B. Coon is the vice-president of both banks, and knew the man would fit the job. Mr. Cook is well known and well liked by the bankers of the Twin Cities, and of the Great Northwest.

THE Minnesota Loan and Trust Company has a capital of $500,000 (fully paid) with surplus of $250,000. E. A. Merrill is president, and real estate mortgages, bonds, and trust business constitute the main activities of the company. They pay 3½ per cent on savings or yearly certificates of deposit.

NEBRASKA, through the efforts of Secretary Hughes and the bankers of the state, has killed the bill in the legislature giving assessors the right to enter banks to inspect the books for purposes of taxation. It takes a lot of hard work to kill even a foolishly vicious bill like this.

NOW, anent what we have said heretofore about the ancient and inefficient protective system of the A. B. A. and the modern systems in vogue in the Western state associations, read the following from Secretary Hughes: "Omaha, March 18, 1909. A couple of weeks ago we announced the capture of the De Weese bank robbers. Since then we have caught and jailed five men for the robbery of the Farmers State Bank of Hadar. On three of these men we have what looks to be a sure case, and when they are tried they will without doubt be sent over the road. The capture of these men was effected by the detectives working for the Nebraska Bankers Association. The protective fund, which consists of the profits on burglary insurance and bond business, pays for this work. Help keep the fund up by giving the association your burglary insurance and bonds."

THE Illinois Manufacturers Association, of which J. Mack Glenn is the "humper," will hold its annual banquet at Peoria to-night, and the subject for discussion will be: "Future for Manufacturing Interests in the State of Illinois." The principal address will be made by Hon. Theodore E. Burton, United States Senator from Ohio, followed by short talks by W. B. Brinton, of Dixon; R. B. Lourie, of Moline; W. H. Taylor, of Peoria, and B. J. Mullaney, of Chicago.

THERE is a nigger in most woodpiles and in all tariff bills. The Payne bill reduces the rates only from countries allowing our exports free entry. Just think of it. The Dingley bill put up the rates 20 per cent on the pretext and provision that we could "trade them down" with friendly countries, but never a trade was made.

THEY have two brand new cashiers in St. Louis, both young, widely acquainted, well liked, and competent. It is scarcely necessary to say that reference is had to J. A. Berninghaus, who went with Mr. Hilliard from the Mechanics American to the Central National, and to J. S. Calfee, the new cashier of the former bank, where he succeeded L. A. Battaile, now a vice-president.

BOTH Mr. Hill and Mr. Hilliard are fine judges of men, and the promptness with which the latter reorganized the Central to suit his ideas, and Mr. Hill rearranged the Mechanics American forces, proves it.

THE three Ohio banking papers have locked horns on whether or not the Ohio bankers shall hold an out-of-the-state convention this year, or bunk three in a bed in one of the hot, smaller cities. The new Cincinnati paper has "staked its whole existence" on preventing a lake trip. Finance, up at Cleveland, and Secretary Rankin's paper, are on the other side. The state association membership has been polled and has voted "two to one" for the "junket," so-called.

CASHIER.

Inter-State Convention at New Orleans

The inter-state bankers convention at New Orleans, May 13th and 14th, will include Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana state bankers associations, all to be the guests for two days of the New Orleans clearing house. The Chicago delegation will probably go in a body in special cars over the Illinois Central railroad.

First State Bank of Sulphur Springs

The First State Bank of Sulphur Springs, Colo., has filed articles of organization with a capital of $50,000. B. F. Ashcroft is president, N. B. Wagoner, first vice-president; James Lindley, second vice-president; F. E. Kenemur, cashier, and E. P. Greenwood, assistant cashier.

Kentucky Bank Assessment

At a meeting of the state board of valuation and assessment, the assessment placed on the banks of Kentucky is the same as that of last year, being 80 per cent of the capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits.

New Bank for Ypsilanti

The Farmers State Bank of Ypsilanti, N. D., has been incorporated with a capital of $10,000. A. G. Anderson, of Fergus Falls, Minn., E. T. Sherping, of Wyndmere, S. D., and E. A. Hoff, of Ypsilanti and others are promoters.

The Lusty Wyoming State Bankers Association

Rock Springs, Wyo., March 24.—The energetic secretary of the six-months'-old Wyoming Bankers Association is this week sending out a letter to bankers telling what has been accomplished by the youngest but one of all the state organizations. It is thought here that he and the association, and especially President A. H. Marble should be congratulated. The letter follows:

The Wyoming Bankers Association has not yet attained an age of six months, but it has already given abundant evidence of being a very energetic and precocious infant. Over two-thirds of the banks of the state are enrolled in its membership, and it is now lustily raising its voice for the other one-third. That there are many excellent and logical reasons for the maintenance of an association cannot be gainsaid, and the specific object of this letter is to call to the attention of Wyoming Bankers, some lines of work both accomplished and proposed on the part of the Wyoming association; work gratifying to the membership, and which it is hoped may appeal to the non-members as meriting their hearty support, both morally and financially.

Seven new measures will appear as laws in the next edition of the statutes of Wyoming especially beneficial to the banking fraternity, the passage of which was directly due to the efforts of the association's legislative committee.

Banking bills passing both branches of the legislature were as follows:

Senate file 77, concerning statements made by firms, individuals or corporations, for the purpose of obtaining credit, and providing a penalty for false statement.

Senate file 80. Uniform bill of lading law. This is the measure approved and recommended for enactment by the standing law committee of the American Bankers Association, and makes provision for a distinct negotiable and non-negotiable bill of lading.

By Secretary H. Van Deusen

Senate file 81, law providing that a bank shall not be liable for forged checks, providing a bank's client does not make claim within three months after the return of canceled vouchers.

Senate file 82, provides a heavy penalty for burglary with the use of explosives.

Senate file 85, provides that officers or employees of banks who are notaries public shall legally take acknowledgments or administer oaths for the corporation, unless individually interested.

Senate file 88, providing penalty for the giving of checks or drafts on any bank by a person not entitled to give the same. This measure is a needed one, as heretofore, action, if any, must be taken on the obtaining of money under false pretenses.

House bill 26, admits surety companies, with capital and surplus of one million. The old law required a capital of one million, thus shutting out from the state all but three or four companies, and it is reasonable that a company capitalized at $500,000.00—with a surplus of $500,000.00—is equally strong.

The passage of these bills surely speaks well for the initiatory work of our legislative committee, and much credit is due Senator J. L. Baird of Western County and State Examiner Henderson for their valuable assistance.

In addition to the work noted, the efforts of the committee have proven equally valuable in preventing the enactment of several proposed measures detrimental to the banking interests of the state.

In fact during the entire session of the legislature, the committee has been untiring in its advocacy of favorable, and its opposition to objectionable bills which have been introduced pertaining to banks and banking.

Another field which the association is desirous of developing is its protective department, one that can readily, with the support and cooperation of its members, be made both efficient and practical. This department is in the hands of a committee, fully competent, and each member of the association is urged to report promptly to the secretary any fraud, whatever the nature, perpetrated or attempted upon his institution, giving an account of same and description if possible, of the offender.

Lookout cards will then be immediately issued by the secretary to all the members, in order to put them on guard, and prevent any further fraud. The association wishes to undertake the apprehension and prosecution of such offenders but it requires funds to do so, and the treasury has no revenue at present, aside from the dues. However, we are pleased to report that arrangements are in progress, with a leading fidelity company, whereby all burglary insurance in the state written through the association will bring into the treasury a liberal commission, this to be placed in a protective fund, and a campaign for the burglary insurance of every member will shortly be instituted. The rates will be the same as you are now paying, and a fund available for the detection and arrest of criminals will be the additional net gain to you.

Nebraska has a fund amounting to $6,000.00 derived from this source without a cent of cost to the members of their association. Why should not the Wyoming Association have a proportionate amount?

Incidentally, plans are also developing for a splendid program for our next convention. Our first was a distinct success, we want this to be a greater one. We would emulate the aggressive newspaper and advise that "Now is the time to subscribe." Respectfully, A. K. Marble, president; H. Van Deusen, secretary.

International Coinage to be Considered

The establishment of an international coinage will be one subject considered by the monetary convention to be held in Holland this year. Several attempts have been made in the past to provide a coin or series of coins receivable in all the principal countries at a definite value, and some of the European nations have formed unions throughout where certain coins pass at a specified value. Thus in France, Italy and Spain the franc, lira and peseta pass freely at an equal value.

But all endeavors to bring the United States into such an arrangement in the past have failed. Three of the plans to issue international coins in this country proceeded to the stage where experimental coins were made at the mint.

The earliest of these coins made its appearance in 1868. It was the outcome of an international monetary convention held at Paris in 1867, at which 20 different nations were represented. It was proposed to take the French 5 franc piece as a basis and to strike gold coins of the denomination of 25 francs for international use.

To bring the dollar gold piece to the value of 25 francs it would have been necessary to reduce its value 17½ cents. The British sovereign would have had to suffer a reduction in value of 4 cents. A reduction in the standard of the British gold coins was distasteful to the representative of Great Britain and it was suggested as a compromise that the United States gold dollar be taken as a basis, which would increase the standard rather than lower it. This suggestion did not meet the favor of the convention.

The French mint in 1867 struck a gold coin fulfilling the requirements of the plan considered by the convention. It was about the size of a $5 gold piece and on the obverse bore the laureated head of Napoleon III. Under the bust was the name of the engraver, "Barre." On the reverse was a circle enclosing the inscription "5 Dollars 25 Francs," while around the border was inscribed "Or. Essai Monetaire."

Three duplicates of this coin in gold were given to Samuel B. Ruggles, the United States delegate to the convention, by Senator Dumas, president of the French commission on coins and medals, for presentation to the president, secretary of state and secretary of the treasury of the United States, and a fourth specimen was given to Mr. Ruggles. One of these coins turned up at the Stickney sale of last year and brought $35.

The United States mint made a companion piece of this coin in the following year. It showed on the obverse a head of Liberty, with the hair tied back with a ribbon. On the coronet was the word "Liberty" and below was the date, "1868." On the reverse was a wreath composed of oak and laurel leaves which enclosed the inscription, "5 Dollars 25 Francs." This coin so far as known never was struck in gold, but specimens are in existence in copper and in aluminum, with both plain and reeded edges.

The plan received no encouragement from congress, and nothing more was done in the way of an international coin until 1874. Dana Bickford of New York, who had just returned from a continental tour, where he had experienced the usual annoyances on account of the numerous money values, outlined the plan of an international coin to the director of the mint, Dr. Linderman. That official instructed the engravers to prepare dies for a coin that would contain the features suggested by Mr. Bickford.

The new coin was of the denomination of $10 and was intended to pass for an equal value in five different European countries. On the obverse was a head of Liberty wearing a diadem ornamented with five stars. On the diadem was the word "Liberty." Across the neck was an olive branch, to which was attached a ribbon. Below was the date, "1874."

The reverse was divided into seven irregular sections. In the center was inscribed "16.72 Grams 900 Fine. Ubique." In the second section was inscribed "Dollars 10." The third contained "Sterling £2. 1 1."; fourth, "Marken 41.99;" fifth, "Kronen 37.31;" sixth, "Gulden 20.72;" and seventh, "Francs 51.81."

This coin was struck in bronze and aluminum, but met with no better success in congress than its predecessor. By no means discouraged, Mr. Bickford proposed two other international coins of the denomination of half dollar and ten dollars in 1876.

The reverse design on the silver piece contained seven circles, the first of which enclosed the inscription "12.50 Grams Ubique;" the second, "Sterling 2-12;" third, "Marken 2.25;" fourth, "Kronen 1.89;" fifth, "Florin 1.01;" sixth, "Peseta 2.44;" seventh, "Francs 2.70." The obverse design was that of the half dollar of regular issue of the year 1876.

The obverse of the dollar piece had the same obverse as that of 1874, but bore the date "1876" below the head of Liberty and the denomination "Ten Dollars." On the reverse in the first of the seven sections was inscribed "16.72 Grams 900 Fine Ten Dol." The second section contained the inscription in Russian, "Rubels 12.58;" third, "Sterling 2.11;" fourth, "Marken 41.99;" fifth, "Kronen 37.31;" sixth, "Gulden 20.70," (instead of "20.73," as on the 1874 piece), and seventh, "Francs 51.81."

So far as known dies representing the above designs were not made.

The last United States international gold coin was made in 1870 at the mint. At this time the coinage committee of congress had under consideration a metal called goloid, the patent of Dr. W. W. Hubbell, who proposed to use it for coins in denominations ranging from a dime to twenty dollars, with the weights and measures based on the continental metric system.

Dr. Hubbell worked out the problem in a metrical coin of 400 even cents value, which would contain six grams of pure gold, three decigrams of pure silver and seven decigrams of pure copper, having a total weight of seven grams. This piece was close to the value of the Austrian eight florin piece, the French 20 francs, Italian 20 lira, Spanish 20 pesetas and Dutch eight florins. Specimens were struck in gold, silver and copper. A specimen of similar character was struck in 1880 in gold. Some of these four dollar gold pieces now rank among the very rarest of the United States experimental coins, and as much as $360 has been paid for a specimen. The matter never got beyond this experimental stage.

The Chicago Bond Market

An officer of a large LaSalle Street Bank, one of the largest investment institutions in the West, says: "The bond market has fallen behind somewhat, the past few weeks, and may continue dull indefinitely; but good days are ahead. We have sold nearly $8,000,000 worth of bonds this year, and have added to our supply a few millions of what we believe will be attractive issues later in the year."

"Within eighteen months $60,000,000 of new Chicago utility issues have been placed on the market, and nearly all have been absorbed. Prices have advanced, and new issues as attractive are not forthcoming, but they will be."

"It may be taken for granted that all parts of the West will have big local undertakings, and that western investors will give them preference. The West is going to take care of the West to a greater extent than ever before. One effect will be a tendency to equalize money rates throughout the country."

"The East must continue to take care of the railroads, the bonds of which maintain their price level in consequence of the demand from fiduciary institutions. Our investors out here have become accustomed to a much better yield from local issues, even municipals, with security equally good; at least in their opinion. Western investment demand will not drift back to the standard rails, in my opinion, for several years."

The people of Des Moines voted favorably on the issuance of $200,000 in bonds for new school houses at the annual election. Women voted along with the men and the proposition carried with little or no opposition.

Weekly bank clearings this year have averaged $260,982,819, as compared with 216,013,454 a year ago and $238,247,892 two years ago. Daily average bank clearings last week were $43,572,768, as compared with $51,954,276 the previous week, which holds the record; $43,599,972 the second week of February, and $39,404,393 a year ago.

Unruly Safe Ties Up Bank's Money

Because the currency safe was closed before the time clock was properly set, the Alexander County National of Cairo, Ill., has its surplus of $100,000 so securely locked up that it has baffled the efforts of experts for a week.

The currency and gold is kept in a small safe within the vault. It did not open last Friday morning. An expert safe opener was called and could do nothing. As a last resort, the manufacturers sent an expert here from Cleveland, Ohio, and he is drilling a hole through the steel.

In the meantime the bank has been depending upon the other banks of the city for currency.

Ohio Bank Examination

Within a short time the state department of banks and banking will be in a position to begin the regular examination of the state banks and trust companies of Ohio. During the last year, while some examinations have been made, these have necessarily been limited, as the department has had but two examiners, and these could do little with the 400 state banks of Ohio. With the appropriations now made, the department can place other examiners in the field and carry out the intent of the law, which is that semiannual examinations be made of all the state banks and trust companies of the state. The department is now ready to begin this work, having completed the arranging of the books and blanks for this work, and it is expected that affairs will move smoothly from the start. The banks also are assisting all they can in the work, and their willingness to help is shown in the much more rapid manner in which they are sending in the statements under the calls of the state superintendent.

To Test the Thomas Bank Law

The attorney-general's department will file a demurrer in the Franklin County common pleas court, to the petition of the American Trust and Savings Bank Company, of Zanesville, asking that State Superintendent B. B.

Seymour be enjoined from putting into effect an order requiring the company to increase its capital stock. This suit will raise the question of the constitutionality of the Thomas state banking act regulating all state and private banks.

The order requires all trust companies to increase their capital stock to $100,000 by April 1, 1910, when the law goes into full effect, and was issued upon advice of the attorney-general in compliance with a request from the superintendent for an elucidation of its provisions.

The defendant company is capitalized at $35,000 and recites in its petition that it was organized under the old law and that the new statute cannot constitutionally interfere with its operation.

Depositors Aroused

Aroused by the unfulfilled promises of the directors of the assigned Citizens' State Bank, of Napoleon, the depositors have filed with the probate court a petition that President S. W. Hiller and Cashier J. D. Groll be brought into court and examined under oath as to the handling and disposition of the bank's property. An expert accountant was also asked for to examine the books and affairs of the bank for the purpose of obtaining such information as may inure to the benefit of the depositors. A mass meeting of the 2,500 depositors has been called to meet Saturday to consider several matters.

The Citizens National of Springfield

The Citizens National of Springfield will increase its capital from $100,000 to $200,000.

Forged Checks Passed

Officials of the First National of Lockland and a Cincinnati bank are anxious to locate a man who forged several checks and passed them in Cincinnati. One of the checks was signed "George M. Stevenson" and called for $41. Stevenson stated that a number of blank checks were stolen some time ago from his check book.

The worthless checks went through the Cincinnati Clearing House, but when they came back to the Lockland Bank Cashier Lou Moore at once pronounced them worthless. There are said to have been three of them.

A Safe Depositary After All

Fearful of banks, Fred Marks, a Strongsville, Ohio, farmer, converted all his money into gold coin and hid the metal under the floor of his pig pen.

While he and his wife were in Cleveland, robbers searched his house, ripping mattresses and upholstery in an effort to locate the hidden wealth. Incidentally, the thieves fired the barn and pig pen. Neighbors fought the flames and saved the house.

Upon his return home Marks surprised his friends by digging in the ruins of the pig pen and drawing forth a huge lump of gold, said to be worth several thousand dollars. The gold coins had been melted by the intense heat.

The Citizens Bank and Trust Company

The Citizens Bank and Trust Company, of Tampa, Fla., began business October, 1895—cash capital, $100,000.00. Since then it has increased its capital stock $100,000.00—out of the earnings—making the capital $200,000.00 including this stock dividend, it has paid its stockholders $190,000.00; it has earned a surplus of $200,000.00 and undivided profits $57,132.13.

It was the first bank in Tampa to establish a savings department, thereby encouraging the people to save their money and, since its organization, has paid its savings depositors $110,000.00.

Indianapolis and Indiana Banking News

By CHARLES REMINGTON

In Putnam circuit court last Saturday Judge Rawley rendered his decision in the case of F. A. Arnold et al., stockholders in the Central National Bank vs. E. McG. Walls, county treasurer, brought to enjoin the collection of certain taxes erroneously assessed. The court found for the bank and the stockholders holding that there was no jurisdiction acquired over the stockholders to assess stock to them in excess of the amount which had been assessed by the township assessor. The case was one appealed to the local board of review to the state board by J. C. Akers, and the state board added an increased assessment against the stockholders. The decision was in favor of the plaintiff and against Walls.

Supreme Court of Indiana Decision

The Supreme Court of Indiana held, in the case of State vs. Adams Express Company, that an action to recover by civil suit a penalty for failure to deliver express packages coming from within the state to a city of more than 2,500 inhabitants could not be maintained under a criminal statute of 1901 imposing a fine for its violation, and that another statute passed in the same year prescribing a penalty for any discrimination by express companies against "consignors, including other express companies as consignors," did not apply to a failure to deliver packages to consignees.

Funny Experiences of the British Government with Postal Savings Banks

When we consider that one person out of every six in the United Kingdom is a depositor in the Postoffice Savings Bank, it is not difficult to realize that there are great possibilities of humor, which is often the more amusing as it is unconscious. In fact, a most entertaining volume could be composed merely of the humorous answers to official questions put to depositors.

To the question, for example, whether the would-be depositor's address is permanent, such answers as these have been received—"Here is no continuing city," "Heaven is our home," "Yes, D. V." and "This is not our rest."

One such question, asking for particulars of an account, evoked the following amusing, if irrelevant, reply, "He is a tall man, deeply marked with smallpox, has one eye, wears a billycock hat and keeps a booth at Lincoln Fair."

Equally entertaining are some of the entries on the withdrawal forms. Thus one depositor, scorning figures, but evidently wishing to draw his last penny, wrote: "Sir, I want to close the bank"—an ambition which, happily, was not realized. Another, equally ambiguous, wishes "to make a clearance," while a third, who is not a born financier, writes on his form, "The book fairly puzzles me." For downright magnanimity, however, it would be difficult to beat the schoolboy who, when withdrawing his shilling, wrote, "Never mind the interest; it can go towards paying off the national debt."

That the postal authorities may lose no time in sanctioning the required withdrawal, some very urgent reasons are given, as "Don't delay, my boy must have a new suit for next Sunday," "Hurry up, please, the bailiffs are in the house," "I want it quick, to buy a birthday present for my young man" and "If you aren't quick it'll have to go towards my funeral."

One depositor, after apologizing for closing her account, proceeded to ask the postoffice to procure work for herself and her husband, who had been out of work for several months. "If we could get some car'taker's place," she concludes, "we wood thank you, as we are nearly starvin', I can do anything myself—needle, niting, or cooking. I have a cosen in your postoffice."

There is a charming frankness in the entries sometimes made under the head of "occupation." Thus, one man describes himself as

"married—worse luck!" Another as "still reveling in single blessedness," while a third sums herself up as "waiting for woman's suffrage." "A widow—have buried three of them," confesses a lady who clearly enjoys her emancipation; while another widow euphemistically puts herself down as "living privately."

When a mother, who recently claimed the money deposited by her dead son, was asked if the boy's father was still alive, she responded briefly, but to the point, "Father living, but insignificant." Another lady, in a similar position, when told that the money could only be paid to the depositor's father, who was missing, relieved her mind, thus: "I am sorry for giving you so much vain trouble regarding this. Your decision is law, I presume, and I can only say in the words of Bumble, 'If that's wot the Law says, the Law's a hass an' a hidiot!'"

The claims made by creditors of deceased depositors are often very ingeniously framed. Thus, "Loss of time and money in consulting a solicitor, £1 10s." appeared as one of the items of a recent claim, which was actually allowed by the solicitor to the postoffice. More original still was a claim made by the son of a dead depositor, who, as investigation proved, came into the world before his father's marriage. When he was informed of this awkward fact he responded with a demand for £2 5s, for "shock to system on learning of my illegitimacy." This was "moral and intellectual damage" with a vengeance.

Philadelphia Banking News

By J. IRVING COOPER

C. S. W. Packard, president of the Pennsylvania Company for Insurances on Lives and Granting Annuities, has been elected a director of the Fourth Street National of Philadelphia.

The Ridge Avenue Bank

The annual meeting of stockholders of the Ridge Avenue Bank of Philadelphia will be held April 6th.

The Realty Trust Company

A meeting of the Realty Trust Co. stockholders of Philadelphia will be held on May 20th to vote on a proposed reduction of the capital from $4,500,000 to not less than $4,000,000.

Philadelphia Bond Business

Bond houses expect a material improvement in the investment market after April 1st. One reason for this optimism is that the interest and dividend disbursements on that date will probably result in a sharp reinvestment demand. The bond market in Philadelphia is quiet, with prices a fraction below the quotations ruling a month ago. The old-fashioned tax-free bonds are practically out of this market entirely, except at prohibitive prices.

Fidelity Trust Stock

Two bids were made on the Philadelphia Stock Exchange for Fidelity Trust Company stock. First $800 was offered, and this was followed by a bid of $820.

While the last public sale of the stock, in November last, was at 736; private transactions were reported on February 18th of this year at $835 and $850 a share.

It is probable one of these prices will have to be paid before any stock is brought out.

Trust Company and National Bank Stock

Girard Trust stock made a new high record price at the auction sale of stocks and bonds, last week, selling at 892, an advance of 16 points over the last previous sale, and 15½ points over the record quotation made on February 17th. Rittenhouse Trust at 53 was up 3. Girard Bank at 275 was up 2¾, and Thirteenth & Fifteenth Streets Passenger at 278 was up 8. Girard Fire & Marine Insurance shares advanced 8¼ to 300. At 548½ Pennsylvania Company for Insurance on lives and granting annuities showed a decline of 1½ from the last previous sale. However, the shares subsequently sold at 550¼. Girard National shares advanced 2¾ to 275, and Huntingdon & Broad Top common fell 2 points to 8. Other shares traded in showed only fractional price changes.

Revised Edition Ready

Edward B. Smith & Co. have issued a 1909 revised edition of their pamphlet on preferred stocks, including a few issues which have become prominent within the last year.

Capital Stock Increased

Authorized capital stock of Henry Disston & Sons, Inc., has been increased to $3,350,000, the additional $350,000 of stock to be allotted to present shareholders.

Re-elected Vice-President

The governing committee of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange re-elected George Stevenson vice-president and H. H. Lee chairman of the gratuity fund.

The Philadelphia Mint

As soon as the United States mint at Philadelphia can turn them out, new one-cent pieces will be issued to take the place of the familiar copper pieces, bearing the Mary Cunningham head that have been in circulation for several generations. Ex-President Roosevelt approved the design for the new coin, which is to be executed according to the design made by Victor B. Brenner of New York.

In place of the Mary Cunningham or "Liberty" head will appear the medallion head of Lincoln, from the bronze medal design executed by Mr. Brenner, and on the reverse side will appear the words "one cent" as at present.

Saved by Governor

Lincoln, Neb., March 19.—Only the intervention of Governor Shallenberger saved Mr. Bryan's bank deposit guaranty bill from being shelved to-day. The senate has been dallying with it, holding it as a club over house members to get senate bills through the lower house.

The house leaders balked to-day, declaring that it was being used to force through corporation measures, and a bitter rumpus followed. Taylor, a democratic house leader, in a speech declared the depository bill had been changed to suit bankers; that the corporations were in control.

After the governor took a hand by sending for all belligerents, the bank bill was passed.

Supreme Court of Vermont

The Supreme Court of Vermont held, in the case of Goodrich vs. Rutland Savings Bank, that a delivery sufficient to pass title to a savings bank account was shown by delivery to one having possession of the book as bailee for the owner, of an order on the bank to pay the account to him accompanying a parol gift of it, followed by a holding of the book by the donee as owner.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

St. Paul bankers are optimistic as to the present situation in the Northwest. Ample money is one indication of the situation. J. R. Mitchell, president of the Capital National, says general business conditions are good. Jobbers report sales as large as ever experienced at this time of the year or larger. Merchants in the country are buying freely. Collections are better than last year.

President E. H. Bailey of the First National, says: "The outlook for business in this producing section is excellent. Merchants and jobbers are having better business than last year. Collections are fairly good for this time of the year. Everything the farmers sold last year brought good prices so they should have plenty of money."

Ben Baer, president of the American National, reports the business outlook good. More money is awaiting development than for years. Collections are good. Most business men are careful in purchases as they are endeavoring to get out of debt. If we have good crops this year this section will be the most prosperous in the United States.

Open for Business

The Minneapolis Stock Exchange has begun business. Its quarters are the Minneapolis Clearing House Association rooms. Bank stocks were the first on call. A bid of $285 for Security National and an asked price of $310 led the list. These are the first official prices recorded in Minneapolis. For First National $225 was bid and $250 was asked. Northwestern National was $240 and $250. Hennepin County Savings found a bidder at $200. Minneapolis Trust was bid at $160 and Minnesota Loan & Trust at $135. The bids were generally higher than the former street prices.

Minnesota Loan and Trust Company

S. S. Cook, assistant cashier of the Northwestern National, has resigned to become cashier of the Minnesota Loan & Trust Company. He will have entire charge of the deposit department. E. A. Merrill, president of the company, says that the increase in the volume of business in both the bond and deposit departments has made changes necessary. C. E. Klassy, formerly in charge of the

Minneapolis
Cashier Minnesota Loan and Trust Company

deposit department, will devote his time to the bond department. Mr. Cook entered the employ of the National Bank of Commerce in 1892, and in 1901 associated himself with the bond and mortgage department of the Minnesota Loan & Trust Company. In the fall of 1906 he returned to the Bank of Commerce and in January was made assistant cashier. At the time of the consolidation with the Northwestern National he was retained in a similar position with that institution. Mr. Cook assumed his duties on March 22d and on the same evening his official associates in the Northwestern National gave a dinner for him at the Minneapolis club.

Visiting in the East

J. E. Ware, cashier of the St. Anthony Falls Bank, has gone to Washington and New York.

New Officers' Quarters

The Northwestern National has opened its new officers' quarters. After months of noise, confusion and dust the bank has finally been extended to occupy the entire ground floor of the building. In general appearance the large addition corresponds to original banking room. Although the directors builded for all time when they erected the new Northwestern National building about five years ago, already they have had to make extended and expensive changes to accommodate the growth in the deposit and other departments.

"Ladies' Night" at Minneapolis Chapter

The Minneapolis bank clerks had an adding machine contest at their meeting on Tuesday night. It was "ladies' night" and this feature added a special zest to the occasion. Miss Ethel Pearson, and Messrs. Ray Walters, Lester Banks, Clarence Chaney and Ernest McChesney of the clerical forces gave the musical program. The clerks are working actively in the movement of leading business men to form a personal property loan agency in Minneapolis to give salaried people in need of money a chance to borrow without running against loan sharks. L. E. Wakefield of the Northwestern National is on the special committee of organization.

A Minneapolis Visitor

A. S. Cox, assistant cashier of the Merchants' National of New York, while in Minneapolis, said: "From observation I must admit that from three to five years will be necessary for this country to return to its prosperous condition just previous to the money panic eighteen months ago. The West appears to be in much better shape than the East. The bankers of Minneapolis, for instance, are wearing the smile that won't come off. In New York financiers are looking pretty sober."

St. Paul Bank Clerks Busy

The St. Paul bank clerks co-operated with the St. Paul Association of accountants and bookkeepers last week in a discussion at the association meeting on the question of exchange of checks. Members of the Minneapolis association, the St. Paul Jobbers' association and the St. Paul Credit Men's association were present. A committee was appointed to confer with the Twin City bankers on the subject of minimizing the cost.

Farmers' and Mechanics' Savings Bank

The Farmers' & Mechanics' Savings Bank will not move from the National Bank of Commerce former quarters to its new building until after the next interest date, April 10th. At the regular monthly meeting on April 7th the trustees will choose a successor to the late Thomas Lowry, who was a charter trustee.

Security National Dividend

The Security National has declared its regular quarterly dividend of 3 per cent payable April 1st.

St. Anthony Falls Bank

The St. Anthony Falls Bank has amended its charter, permitting it to have twelve directors. The bank has been electing twelve directors for two years, but recently discovered it was necessary to make a change in its articles of corporation to legalize the number.

A School of Banking

A school of banking is to be opened next fall connected with the St. Paul Institute of Arts and Sciences. Leading bankers of the city have considered the enterprise in conference with the bank clerks.

Winnesheik County (Ia.) State Bank

This popular institution takes another important step in its prosperous career.

Decorah, Ia., March 24.—The Republican of this city contains the following notice of importance concerning the increase of capital by the Winnesheik County State bank. The Republican says:

"One of the most important financial announcements the Republican has been privileged to make is that the Winnesheik County State Bank, established in 1855 and existing down through the varying changes that time has forced upon it, will increase its capital from $100,000 to $150,000. With the present surplus of $25,000 this increase will give the bank a working capital of $175,000 and as under the law all stockholders in state banks are liable for an additional 100 per cent of the stock, this arrangement will make the stockholders of the Winnesheik County State Bank liable for $325,000, thus making it the largest financial institution between the Twin Cities of Minnesota and Cedar Rapids, and between Milwaukee and Sioux City, barring one banking house in Mason City. To establish more firmly if possible the confidence of the public in this bank, the increase of capital will be invested in United States bonds.

Ever since the incorporation of this bank, its policy has been to take the people into its confidence and by open, frank, and honest dealing merit the faith that has ever been exhibited towards its management. This announcement, at this time, is a step in the same direction and it certainly puts Decorah high up in the list as a banking center."

Recent Prospective Banking Legislation

Pursuing the subject matter which appeared in last week's issue of the CHICAGO BANKER under a similar to the above caption, attention is called to the fact that just what banking commissioner Bergh is trying to have done in Wisconsin, was done in 1907 in Connecticut. That state required its trust companies and state banks to segregate their savings deposits and invest them under the laws governing the investment of deposits of savings banks. The great commonwealth of Massachusetts made a similar requirement but in a way which might be considered as a step in advance. All foreign banking corporations doing business in that state and regularly authorized savings banks were permitted to establish departments to write industrial insurance and annuities. The trust company laws of Maine were revised completely that same year. Oregon adopted a complete banking law and established a banking department. It is thought by many students of banking conditions that the new law of Oregon is one of the best and most complete state banking laws that we have. As was noted in last week's article, the banking law of Illinois was somewhat strengthened by the amendment which was adopted by popular vote at the November election last year. But it still lacks many provisions which are found in laws of other important banking states.

Last year New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Ohio all adopted important banking laws, greatly increasing the facility with which business may be conducted as well as insuring its safety. The new laws of New York State are too well known to need description but were included in twenty separate acts nearly all of which were passed upon the recommendation of Clark Williams, superintendent of banks. The same panic which gave such a stimulus to the New York legislature became operative in Ohio and they passed a complete banking law which had been hovering over their heads for several years. An entire new statute was placed upon the books in Rhode Island as the result of the work of a commission appointed to investigate and redraft a complete banking law. The new statute in Massachusetts revising their savings bank laws also was the work of special commission. The only thing new added in Massachusetts to that which was recommended by the commission was that part of the new law which dealt with the reserves. This feature had its origin, of course, in the lesson of the panic. One very strong feature of the new Massachusetts law is that the bank commissioner has full authority to cause all such institutions under him to discontinue any practices which appear to him to be unsafe or unauthorized by the law.

The savings banks there are authorized also to receive deposits in other places than the bank or in other towns not more than fifteen miles distant. This provision was to enable banks to establish agencies in small neighboring towns which did not support banks. It also enables the bank to have a representative present in large factories to receive deposits and to cash pay checks as has been done so largely in Europe. The purpose of these articles is to furnish in mere outline, information to those who may have in contemplation needed banking reforms in states where the laws have not yet been perfected.

Wisconsin's Banking Laws

Wisconsin's banking commissioner, Marcus C. Bergh, in his 14th annual report renews his admonition to the state legislature to pass an act for the better protection of the savings deposits in that state. His years of experience and investigation into such matters lead him to the conviction that all banks and other institutions receiving that class of deposits ought to keep them separate from commercial deposits. He believes that they should be invested in fixed securities which should in turn belong solely to the savings department. He belongs to those who believe that savings funds should be made trust funds and that banks should be held to a publication showing in detail the class of securities held. These ideas are not new to Mr. Bergh nor are they unknown to the legislature of the state. Previous messages from this great banking commissioner have pointed in the same direction.

Another grave subject of dispute among the banks and trust companies in Wisconsin, despite the many efforts to settle it, remains decidedly unsettled. Probably the real difficulty lies in the failure of the banks and the trust companies to agree upon what laws should be enacted. At present the trust companies are operating tentatively under an interpretation of the law made by the attorney-general of the state which permits trust companies "to operate in direct competition with the banks of the state" in bidding for time and savings deposits. The banks are agreed that this is unfair competition for the reason that the trust companies are not operated under the same restrictions nor are they compelled to keep up to the same requirements as the banks. So long as the trust companies have a legal right to receive time and savings deposits, which are the most profitable, the banks contend that they should come under all the provisions of the banking law.

It is very apparent from reading Mr. Bergh's report that he believes that savings deposits, whether in a trust company or in a savings bank, should be invested and accounted for in precisely the same way and with all possible safeguards. The Wisconsin trust companies are prohibited from "buying or selling bank exchange or doing banking business." The banks contend that what they are doing is so nearly a banking business that they should come entirely under the operation of the law. These questions are the chief ones to be decided by the Wisconsin legislature, and in the main they exist in other states where trust companies have not been brought under the banking law. This only was done in New York State the past year and has worked well in that great commonwealth. We are pleased to make the statement, taking it from the Wisconsin reports, that no depositor in any Wisconsin state bank has suffered a loss by reason of the failure of such bank during the past year. There have been irregularities, and at least two defaulting bank cashiers were given terms of imprisonment, but nearly all of the banks have clear records. Two or three were closed temporarily but were reopened with increased capital provisions. Wisconsin so nearly has a model banking law and a model banking department, with a commissioner who ranks as high as in any country, that it ought to be an easy matter for the liberal-minded men in the banking business of that commonwealth to agree upon banking amendments which will put the state pretty nearly in a class by itself.

The Washington dispatches say that the fight against the express company money order, before the interstate commission has gone by default, practically, and may not be revived. The commission assumes that too great care cannot be exercised in destroying the business of a carrier or in depriving the public of conveniences and facilities to which it has become accustomed. The matter may come up at the Chicago convention. It was up at Denver and much enthusiasm was shown in the discussion. Washington information is that the bankers will drop the case as now before the commission.

The new tariff bill is to have "ten days for discussion and two weeks for amendment," according to the present plans in Washington. The American business man will be glad if this agony is over so soon.

If benzoate of soda, the universal preservative used by the canners, picklers, and dairy-men is made from the urine of cattle, especially those fed on brewery slops, and the "pure food" laws allows its use—well, what's the use of kicking at what may be in the hash?

Legislative News

Both houses have passed a bill which establishes beyond a legal doubt how far a notary public may act in acknowledging papers for a bank or other corporations of which he is a stockholder or employee. There is a proviso which says that it shall not be lawful for a notary to take an acknowledgment of an instrument by or to a bank or other corporations of which he is a stockholder or employee, where he is a party to such instrument, either individually or as a representative of such bank or corporation, or to protest any negotiable instrument, owned or held for collection by such bank or other corporations where such notary is individually a party to such instrument.

The bill which, to quote one of its advocates, "was intended to prevent a certain class of bankers advertising themselves under false pretenses," was the subject of two hours' debate in the house Thursday afternoon. The bill, notwithstanding that it was indorsed by representative private bankers throughout the state, did not suit the little private bankers. There are about 300 of these in the state. Every one of them got his "pull" at work on his members.

Also for reasons not apparent these little private banking firms and individuals, who wouldn't stand for what the representative private bankers were satisfied with, enlisted in their cause Representative Charles Flowers, of Detroit. There are no private bankers in Rep. Flowers' district who objected to any provisions of the bill.

The bill simply amended an old act relating to private banks. It did not prohibit a private bank advertising itself as a bank nor did it require them in their signs or printed matter to say they were private banks. All the bill would prohibit was stated in these words: "No person or persons engaged in the business of banking not incorporated under the laws of this state or under the national banking act shall make use of any office sign at the place where such business is transacted having thereon any artificial or corporate names or other words indicating that such place or office is the place or office of an incorporated bank."

The committee on banking of which Rep. Van Raalte, of Holland, himself a bank president, is a member, had by unanimous vote reported the bill favorably.

Mr. Van Raalte read letters showing that the bill was indorsed by such representative private bankers of the state as William McPherson, Howell; William Heker, Richmond; George O. McNichol, Oscoda; Karl D. Keyes, Olivet; George W. Merriam, Hartford; J. M. Ealy, Caro, and C. E. Hills, New Baltimore, but they did no good. It was plainly stated by Rep. Van Raalte that many private banks in Michigan are doing business under names that lead depositors to believe that they are incorporated banks when they are not.

Rep. Perry, who lives at Tustin, Osceola County, where he conducts a private bank under the name of "The Bank of Tustin," led the opposition against the bill. Members from districts where there are no cities of any account, and where most of the banking business is done by private banks, called the bill a nefarious measure of incorporated banks to crush the private banks. There was barely a quorum when the bill was killed.

SEATTLE—A Convention City

By W. F. Paull

Seattle, as a convention city, will be a surprise to most of the delegates to the convention of the American Institute of Banking, June 21st, 22d, and 23d. Those who were fortunate enough to enjoy the annual meetings at Minneapolis, Detroit and Providence, and had the pleasure of the formal but generous hospitality of those well-matured Eastern cities, will find something startling in the things that are done, the way they are done, and the people who do them, in this progressive city of the Northwest.

The first thing the visiting delegate will see will be a city as beautifully located from a scenic standpoint as any city in the world. All the elements which are necessary to a perfect scene are here; fresh water, salt water, forests and mountains.

Seattle is a place "where the people do things." The city has a wealth of scenery and unlimited natural resources behind it, but far above these in importance is what we call the "Seattle Spirit," that community-of-interest feeling which binds us all together, as stockholders and dividend receivers of this great municipal corporation.

The one feature which, perhaps, was responsible more than any other in bringing the convention to Seattle this year was the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, and this, outside of the convention and the city itself, will be the main attraction. It is not claimed that the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition will rank as one of the largest in history, but it will have two distinctive features setting it apart from all that have gone before. It will exploit the vast territories of Alaska, the Yukon district and the countries bordering on the Pacific, thus devoting itself to future development, rather than commemorating past achievement; and it will be ready on time, complete in every detail.

For the visiting delegate who will have from two days to two weeks to spend here after the convention closes, there are a great many side trips that are full of interest. Snoqualmie Falls, a beautiful cascade in a mountain stream, one hundred feet higher than Niagara Falls, may be reached in four hours by rail. Mount Rainier, the highest mountain in the United States outside of Alaska, is only a few hours' ride by rail and will be the objective point of many an Eastern tourist. A day spent in a trip to Monte Cristo will take the traveler into the very heart of the Cascade Mountains, ascending in the fifty-mile journey from sea level to an altitude of over 4,000 feet.

Other little journeys may be made by boat, to the quaint little English city, Victoria, on the British Columbia side, and to her more progressive neighbor, Vancouver; also to Tacoma, Everett and Olympia, the capital of the State of Washington. Anyone of these trips will impress the traveler with the beauties of this Puget Sound country.

For the more venturesome, arrangements may be made to go up Hood's Canal, an arm of Puget Sound, to the base of the Olympic Mountains, and from there to the top of Mount Constance, seven thousand feet high, where one can get a bird's-eye view of the least known country in the United States—the Olympic peninsula—and a view to the east of a thousand miles of the Cascade Mountains, a scene never to be forgotten.

Hotel accommodations in Seattle are ample and, we believe, on a par with Eastern cities. The finest hotel in the Pacific Northwest, the New Washington, will be the headquarters of the convention.

The visitor will find Seattle a city much like a boy who is growing too fast for his clothes. It is certain that he will be disappointed if he comes expecting to find a wild and woolly Western town, where the cowboy and the miner are supreme, and gunplay the popular sport. On the contrary, he will find all the things that go to make up a great, modern, commercial city and will truly marvel over the possibilities the very atmosphere of the city suggests to him.

New York Chapter Meeting

At the regular meeting of New York Chapter, American Institute of Banking, John J. Pulleyn, Comptroller of the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, discussed "Savings Bank Problems," and E. J. Haines, editor of the "American Banker," talked on "Judicious Bank Advertising."

George E. Allen, educational director of the Institute, described the educational activities of the Institute. A general invitation was extended to those engaged in the business of banking to attend these lectures and avail themselves of this and other opportunities afforded by the Institute for banking education.

Philadelphia Chapter Meeting

John F. B. Atkin, member of the Philadelphia Bar, addressed the Philadelphia Chapter of the American Institute of Banking at its meeting recently in the Roger Williams Building. The subject of his discussion was "Decedents' Estates." George E. Allen, national educational director of the Institute, was the second speaker of the evening.

It will be remembered that Milwaukee was a contestant for this year's A. I. B. convention, a prize which Seattle, with the help of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, won. The bright young men of Milwaukee adopted a large, bright red circle, entitled "A Bright Spot," as a campaign badge and banner. They were distributed by the thousands, and it was a bright idea as well as a bright spot. Now the Seattle chapter is circulating a good natured cartoon to show that there are other "bright(er) spots."

Speed Contests by Various Chapters

The various sales managers of the Burroughs organization have been active of late in promoting speed contests among bank clerks, and some very handsome prizes have been won. Incidentally some good records have been made.

In Salt Lake City, George H. Butler, of the Utah National, won the gold watch fob offered by Mr. Parrish, the local Burroughs representative. Walter Johnson of the Walker Brothers Bank was a close second, and carried off an umbrella for his prowess.

A long distance contest has been held between the Oakland Chapter and the Richmond Chapter, of the A. I. B. The results were reported by telegraph, and Oakland carried the day. An individual contest for championship, between G. H. Bates of Richmond and Wm. A. Stewart of Oakland, was won by Mr. Stewart, who listed correctly and added 150 checks in 2 minutes and 13 seconds. D. E. Perkins, the Burroughs Sales Manager at Oakland, awarded a handsome cup to the winning team.

Chicago Chapter Meeting

Great interest has been shown by the various chapters of the American Institute of Banking in the Institute text-book on practical banking which is to be written by the members of the chapters. Chicago Chapter is especially active and interested, eleven papers or chapters having been written by Chicago Chapter members. These papers were read at the regular meeting of the Chicago Chapter Tuesday evening, by members of the chapter who had not written them. The papers were numbered so that no partiality could be shown. The judges consist of Geo. E. Saunders, honorary member of the Chicago Chapter, Jas. I. Innis, attorney-at-law, and an ex-bank man and Fred A. Crandall, ex-president of the Chicago Chapter, and assistant cashier of the National City Bank. The prizes will be awarded at some future time, the judges not having made their decision as yet. The list of interesting topics on which chapters have been written is as follows: United States Bonds to Secure Circulation, United States Bonds to Secure United States Deposits, United States Bonds on Hand, Premiums on United States Bonds, Bonds and Investments, Checks and Other Items, Cash on Hand, Circulation, Savings Deposits, Certified Checks, Exchange—foreign and domestic, Transits, Collections, Clearing House Certificates, Trust Companies and Savings Banks.

Salt Lake Chapter Meeting

A large attendance of members of the Salt Lake Chapter of the American Institute of Banking gathered at the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., in Salt Lake City, on the occasion of the regular monthly meeting of the institution. The meeting was called to order by J. H. Patrick, of McCornick & Company, bankers, and on "The Commercial Value of Electrical Instruments," by D. McNicol, of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company. Allen Howard rendered a baritone solo which was greatly appreciated.

Mr. Patrick discussed the qualifications of a good receiving teller, and spoke of the different methods of checking off the money received, the bank papers used, and other matters connected with the business.

Mr. McNicol gave a practical demonstration of a number of commercial electrical instruments and showed how they were used to advantage in business.

A BUSINESS PROPOSITION

Increasing dividends and making manufacturing and business organizations more successful has been my business for the past 15 years. I have reorganized many properties and have fully demonstrated that common sense methods, short cuts, close application to business and hard work and study will bring success. I recently reorganized a large manufactory and business that had never earned a dividend in 8 years, but after reorganization and under my management for 1 year it earned 30 per cent. I have just completed an examination and report on a large manufacturing property in Ohio, submitting recommendations for improved methods, and have other offers of the same kind, but desire to remain in or near Chicago; my home is in Chicago and my family reside here and I desire to remain here with them, therefore, I wish to get in touch with some business or manufacturing proposition to reorganize and manage for a reasonable salary and a share of the profits. My references, successful experience, and business methods will stand the searchlight of investigation. What have you to offer?

Indicted for Graft

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 22.—Six indictments, three for conspiracy, one for perjury and two for bribery, were returned this afternoon in the councilmanic graft case, upon which the grand jury has been deliberating. Without waiting for warrants to be served four of the indicted men surrendered and gave bond. One other telephoned that he would appear in the morning and give himself up, while the sixth is now traveling in Europe.

F. A. Griffin, vice-president of the Columbia National, charged with perjury in one of the recent graft trials, is under indictment.

Griffin is accused of having passed out about $25,000 of the bank's funds to pay councilmen to have the bank named as one of the city depositories. It is alleged he wrapped the money in an old newspaper, handing it to one of the employees of the bank as he went to luncheon. It appears the "bundle" of money was delivered. To-day when Griffin heard he had been indicted he asked that a meeting of the board of directors be called and he sent his resignation by messenger. The board accepted the resignation, sending a note in reply saying it was hoped he would be able to acquit himself with credit, so as to be enabled to resume his position.

Bogus Checks in Illinois

A man giving the name of H. S. Crandel, and purporting to be a lumber salesman, has been passing worthless checks in La Harpe, Ill., and in Traer, Iowa. These were drawn upon the Second National at Jackson, Tenn., signed by the West Tenn. Lumber Co. as if for salary and expenses. There is no such lumber company. Last reported that Crandel had bought a ticket for Keokuk, Iowa. He carries full credentials (bogus but real in appearance), is 40 years old, smooth shaven, and weighs 175 lbs. Was dressed in black at La Harpe. Secretary Rinaman has sent out a look out circular to Illinois bankers.

Money is Recovered

Shenandoah, Ia., March 22.—The safe blower found in a straw stack two miles from this place, has confessed to having assisted in robbing the First National at Imogene Saturday and with the officers went to-day to the straw stack and dug up $1,500 of the $5,000 taken. The other suspects have been located at White Cloud, twenty miles north of here. The robber in jail refuses to give his name.

California Banking News

By WILLIAM J. HOLLISTER

The California banking act, which has been signed by the governor and will go into effect on July 1st next, makes many desirable changes in and additions to the banking laws of California, and revolutionizes the methods of state supervision. The present board of bank commissioners is abolished and its place is taken by a superintendent of banks, with a salary adequate to secure the services of a competent man and a sufficient staff of examiners. The expenses of the system are borne by the banks of the state, with the proviso that they must not exceed $75,000 in any one year.

While there is no doubt that a law covering so much detail and so much that is new will be found upon trial to require some amendment, yet for the first time in our history we have a comprehensive and well-arranged banking law which, in the main, is likely to be permanent. The requirements for the conduct of the business of a bank do not materially differ from the practice of well-managed banks at the present time, although it is probable that a few such banks will be compelled to readjust some of their loans to conform to certain principles which inexperienced bankers cannot safely violate. Some of the strong banks will probably in future, for the general good, have to refrain from practices which they have found profitable. Under the new law the superintendent of banks will have very extensive powers, and if he and the examiners whom he appoints do their duty it would seem that it would be almost impossible for a bank to fail.

The Los Angeles Stock Exchange

L. F. Parsons, manager of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange says: "The volume of business is nearly one-half of what it was for the entire year 1908, and the trading has been well distributed in all classes of stocks and bonds listed. Prices also show a handsome increase; in fact, a rough estimate shows that the increase in value of securities handled on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange for the first two months of 1909 amounts to nearly $1,000,000, and the dividend disbursements have been fully up to the high standard set during the last three months of last year. Much of this improvement can be traced to the easy condition of the money market, collateral, time and call loans have been freely made at 6 per cent and for most of the time, money has been easy at that rate. Early in the year the banks cleaned up the bond market, placing all their surplus funds in non-taxable bonds, and this naturally turned much money into investment in the higher priced securities, and interest-paying stocks. There have been so many attractive investments offered in the better class of telephone stocks, the oils and some of the banks, that at present the market is very firm for all these issues, and there is not an oversupply of any one in the market. However, there are still several stocks listed with us, which are selling at prices assuring the investor 8 per cent on his money. As 8 per cent investments are always hard to find, I look for a very much improved market in the immediate future. All the large brokerage houses report a good business, with much Eastern inquiry.

The San Francisco Money Market

The San Francisco banks report ample supplies of funds, without any urgent demand. The chief inquiry is at the savings banks for real estate operations. Most of the money previously deposited in the commercial banks for use in these real estate deals has been withdrawn and that feature of the market is about over. This leaves the commercial banks only the mercantile money on hand—but there is plenty of it. All rates remain unchanged.

Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts Decision

The Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts has rendered an important decision in the case of the Jordan-Marsh Company vs. the National Shawmut Bank et al. This was a case in which the firm sought to recover a considerable amount of money paid by the defendant bank and other banks on forged indorsements. It appeared that an employee of the firm had bills made out in the names of fictitious persons for goods purporting to be sold to the firm, and subsequently collected on checks made payable to their order, forging the indorsements. The firm in its suit alleged that the banks were guilty of constructive negligence. The Superior Court ordered judgment for the banks, but the Supreme Court reversed this judgment and ordered a new trial. The court said: "When a definite order is made in the check the duty of the banker is absolute, as a general rule, to pay only in accordance with the order. If payment is to be made to the order of a person named in the check, and if he orders the payment to be made to another person, it is the duty of the bank to see that the signature of the payee is genuine. This rule of law applies as well to payments made by a banker through the Clearing House as to payments over the counter. If the methods of the Clearing House are a convenience to bankers in the transaction of their business, and a bank on which a check is drawn chooses to pay on the ground of the indorsement of the payee's name by another responsible bank, it does not affect the duty of the paying bank to its depositors."

A meeting of the national bankers of Kansas has been called for next Friday in Topeka to discuss the bank deposit guaranty law and what the national bankers will do under the ruling of the Comptroller of the Currency. The Texas committee on banks and banking was the only house committee in session one morning this week, and it has been working in an aimless sort of way. ### Stock Exchange Law Discussed by Prof. Emery

The Wall Street Investigating Committee heard at its session on Saturday the German Government's attempt to curb stock gambling put in force in 1896 condemned as a failure by Prof. Henry C. Emery, of Yale. Prof. Emery also told the committee that he believed the prohibition of short selling in the stock market would be disastrous, and that the ability of the market to discount adverse conditions of business in advance was a necessary and beneficent part of the machinery of trade.

The Yale professor spent most of his time before the committee in giving a detailed account of the German laws which practically prohibited the short selling of stock in the German security markets and stopped the dealing in grain and flour futures. After being in operation for a number of years the German laws were repealed after an investigation by the Government committee, except in their relation to dealing in futures in wheat and other commodities.

Prof. Emery was in Germany at the time the laws were passed, and has made a study of the situation there. He carried his disagreement with the laws further than the Government committee, and told the Wall Street investigators that he believed the restrictions should also have been removed from trading in wheat and other futures.

New York Commercial Paper

As the year advances the belief is becoming more general that business will not be normally active until the autumn, and probably not until next spring, although some hold to the opinion that as soon as the tariff bill becomes a law the country's industries will immediately respond. Thus far there has been little necessity for offering large amounts of commercial paper.

The New York Bond Market

No improvement can be reported in the demand for bonds, and this partly accounts for the cessation of new flotations. Secondary grades have suffered most, but all classes are affected. Prices, however, have held up remarkably well, owing to the extremely unprofitable rates obtainable on collateral loans. Investment houses expect to receive some orders from those who are about to participate in the quarterly dividend and interest disbursements.

Amending the Wisconsin Banking Law

Milwaukee, March 24.—To-morrow a letter will be mailed to all banks in the state of Wisconsin bearing the signature of M. A. Graettinger of the Merchants and Manufacturers bank of this city bearing upon the amendments to the state banking law under consideration at Madison. The amendments are said to have met the approval of Banking Commissioner Bergh, and bear upon the long standing misunderstanding between the banks and trust companies of the state. The letter reads as follows:

"Gentlemen:—We want to call your attention to bill 114 S, which is now pending in the legislature, and a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

"In all laws relating to any particular business there is a provision defining this business. No such definition was incorporated in our present state banking law when it was adopted, and the above mentioned bill is intended to supply this omission. It should have been on the statute books long ago, and is needed to give proper standing to the law and support to the Commissioner of Banking in the execution of the same. It will in no wise interfere with the rights and privileges accruing to the trust companies under the statutes governing this class of business, and if it is so desired, such a provision can be added to the bill.

"In order to secure the recommendation of the committee to which this matter has been referred, it is very necessary that the bankers of the state use every effort to urge favorable action. We want you to write or speak to the members of this committee, also to give us your personal support by appearing at the hearing on this bill, which will be held on Tuesday evening, March 30, 1909, at eight o'clock, in Senate Room No. 7, State Capitol. We want a strong representation present, and ask you to go to Madison on this occasion if at all possible. If not, do your duty by writing or speaking to all or any one of the committee members. We urge you also to oppose as strenuously as you can, the section in bill 485 S, which will give to the Trust Companies of this state the right to receive deposits payable at a future date. This measure will have its hearing at the same time. Are you in favor of reserving the banking business for the banks? If so, get to work at once."

The bill provides that there shall be added to the statutes three new sections, to read: Section 2024-78l. The soliciting, receiving, or accepting of money or its equivalent on deposit as a regular business, by any person, co-partnership, association or corporation, shall be deemed to be doing a banking business, whether such deposit is made subject to check or is evidenced by a certificate of deposit, a pass book, a note, a receipt, or other writing.

Section 2024-78m. It shall be unlawful for any person, co-partnership, association or corporation to do a banking business, without having been regularly organized and chartered as a national bank, a state bank, or a mutual savings bank. Any person or persons violating any of the provisions of this section, either individually or as an interested party in any co-partnership, association, or corporation shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not less than three hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than sixty days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Section 2024-78n. Any person, co-partnership, association or corporation doing business in this state as defined in this act, may incorporate as a state bank and may convert into a state bank, on or before September 1, 1909, as provided in sections 2024-55 of the statutes.

Section 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and publication.

Quite a contest is expected by those on the inside.

Could Issue Notes

Washington, D. C., March 22.—Non-interest bearing treasury notes to the amount of "one million of dollars," may be issued by the secretary of the treasury, whenever, in his discretion, the business situation requires it, if the bill recently introduced by Rep. Weisse of Wisconsin becomes a law.

The notes, which are to be in denominations of five, ten and twenty dollars and are to be the legal tender for dues, public and private, until the time named by the secretary for their redemption are to be redeemable whenever the secretary of the treasury thinks the necessity for them has ceased. This bill is in line with much of the talk that has been heard for a more elastic currency in times of depression.

engine is in marked contrast with the noisy, 'clashy' motors on all sides. Ten Winton Sixes running together make less noise than the average four.

"We have stopped beating other cars on the level—it's a foregone conclusion we can do it, and the sport has grown tame. As a matter of principle, however, we allow no car to pass us on the up-grade. The steep hills in this vicinity give us ample opportunity to demonstrate the prowess of the Winton Six."

Automobile dealers who are in business to stay are invited to write for our latest "Dealers' Book." It has to do with problems that vex the trade.

Wisconsin Bankers Association News

I am in receipt of a report from Marshfield, Wisconsin, that a certain party, calling himself Wm. Schillmer, or Schilling, has been issuing checks purporting to be signed by Meyer Bros., payable to his order, on the different banks at Madison, Wisconsin. Word has been received from there that neither of these parties have an account at any of the Madison banks. Should you hear anything concerning Schillmer or Schilling, please notify the undersigned.—M. A. Graettinger, secretary.

The Fidelity Trust Company

The Fidelity Trust Company, of Milwaukee, trustee of the bankrupt estate of Adolph Friedman, has appealed to Judge Quarles from the decision of Referee in Bankruptcy E. Q. Nye, cutting the claim of its attorneys, Bloodgood, Kemper & Bloodgood, for fees, from $10,000 to $3,000. The referee's decision is attacked as having been given without giving the attorneys a hearing, and because 99 per cent of the creditors approved of the original fee.

Milwaukee Association of Credit Men

Holding that it is questionable whether a card from a card index system or a leaf from a loose-leaf ledger can contain an original entry in the meaning of the law, Probate Judge John C. Karel advocated special legislation on the point in an address before the Milwaukee Association of Credit Men at the Hotel Pfister recently. The law requires the production of the original entry in probate court to prove a claim against an estate.

National Exchange Bank's Tribute

At a special meeting on Tuesday afternoon of the board of directors of the National Exchange Bank, of Milwaukee, the following tribute to the memory of John H. Van Dyke, for fifty years a director of the bank, was adopted and ordered placed upon the records of the bank:

John H. Van Dyke was for fifty-two years a director of this bank and during all that time, while his associates were continually changing, he was beloved and respected by all of them.

The office he held is usually considered to be one of much honor, but in his case, remembering the manner of man he was, of the highest personal character, of large experience, of sound judgment, of unquestioned integrity and withal of a positiveness in impressing these characteristics upon others, it would seem that his remaining in the position for so long a time was an honor to the bank rather than to the individual. It is in sympathy with this idea that his associates in the directory place upon record this tribute to his memory.

Edward J. Furlong, second vice-president had no opposition as the nominee for first vice-president. For second vice-president two names, those of J. A. Mander of the Milwaukee Elevator company, and J. J. Crandall of E. P. Bacon & Co., were nominated.

The caucus was called to order at 12:30 by vice-president W. M. Bell and upon motion of M. Snyder, S. G. Courteen was elected chairman of the caucus.

Four States may Work Together

There is a possibility that the special legislative committees which will take up big questions and report to a special session next January, will work in conjunction with similar committees from Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois and Michigan.

Industrial insurance in particular is a subject that is being worked out by these four states and the suggestion comes from Minnesota that the four states take up the problem together and thus contribute to the general pool of expert opinion and otherwise. Illinois is said to have made great progress on the question of workingmen's insurance through the economics department of the University of Illinois. This department of the Illinois state institution has made great strides of late and now is considered one of the foremost in the country.

The reports cover the period between the quarterly statement made at the close of business November 27th, and the close of business February 10th. The statement gives the deposits in state banks at this time, both individual and time deposits, as totaling $4,582,495.52 more than the figures in November. Late Tuesday afternoon Hegner says a stranger entered his store and, expressing regret that the banks were closed, asked him for several blank checks. Hegner gave the man three. ## Want Private Banks so Designated

An attempt to have the Pennsylvania legislature pass a law compelling private banks to carry a sign prominently advertising themselves as private institutions will be made by Pittsburgh bankers. There are very many such banks operated in and around Pittsburgh, particularly by foreigners, who do business entirely with their own countrymen, and who often have no financial stability. In consequence when one of these bankers suddenly leaves the city taking the "bank" funds with him, the news of "another Pittsburgh banker absconds" is widely advertised to the world, causing a reflection upon the reputable institutions of the city and creating distrust in the minds of some persons. These private banks, Pittsburgh bankers say often have no Pittsburgh connection. The money is not kept in the city. There are over 100 of these institutions in western Pennsylvania, the proprietors of which operate by a system of their own, responsible to no one, and carry an immense amount of money.

Mortgage Loans on Real Estate

Money available for loans on real estate has at last become quite abundant in Pittsburgh, and borrowers offering first class collateral experience little difficulty in obtaining accommodation. Despite this there is no great activity in mortgage business, owing to the fact that comparatively few really desirable mortgages are being offered. There are plenty of requests for renewal of loans and for new loans on properties which do not quite measure up to the standard set by the investors. Perhaps there has never been a time when investors in this kind of securities have been so independent and arbitrary. Seldom will they consider anything less attractive than a 50 per cent loan on rock bottom valuation of business property or residences occupied by owners. The only concession thus far noticeable on the part of mortgage money lenders is in the interest rate, the increasing funds having resulted in a lowering of rates 1/2 to 1 per cent. Small loans are still being made at 6 per cent, but the large loan rates are 5 per cent to 5 1/2 per cent.

Des Moines, March 25.—The statements of the Iowa savings and state banks and trust companies have been compiled by Chief Clerk Frank Roberts, of the state banking department, and the showing is decidedly satisfactory to the bankers of Iowa. By comparison with previous statements, the banks show remarkable gains, and the increase of over $17,000,000 in deposits since the last statement on November 23d breaks every record, so Mr. Roberts says. The completed report shows 18 new banks in the state since the last report November 23d. Since February 14, 1908, the number of new banks is 38. The average reserve in all banks at the close of business February 20th, inst., was 23.79. The exact increase in deposits since November 23d is $17,946,609.55.

The Anamosa National

The Anamosa National has launched into a campaign for good roads and announces $200 to be given away as prizes in a road-making contest. The first prize of $100 will be paid for the mile of road showing the greatest average improvement from the use of a King drag. Other prizes ranging from $30 to $10 are to be paid. The officers of the bank have issued a public statement which is as follows: "The officers and directors of the Anamosa National and the Schoonover Trust Company believe that the business of this city, as well as the profit-making ability of the farmers living adjacent thereto, can be largely increased by the maintenance of good roads around Anamosa. They further believe that the institutions which they represent, as well as every other business interest in the city, will in time profit by the spirit of progressiveness which is evidenced by the presence of good roads and will also share in the increased trade which will be the result of better facilities for getting to Anamosa." The bank has named a board of awards, and the prizes will be distributed July 4, 1910. This is a new departure in Iowa banking circles, and the experiment will be watched with extraordinary interest by other financial institutions and business interests of Iowa.

J. W. Foster Chairman of Group Six

John W. Foster, of Guthrie Center, elected chairman of Group Six at the recent meeting in Des Moines, declares that Iowa bankers are decidedly opposed to the postal savings bank. "Prior to Senator Carter's recent amendment to the bill, while we were not altogether pleased with the proposition, we were much more favorably impressed with what it was claimed the bill would do than we are now," said Mr. Foster. "The amendment which provides for the disposal of the fund accumulated by the postal bank, has placed the matter in an entirely different light, and bankers all over the country are unanimous in declaring their dissatisfaction with the bill. It is stated that the bill has for its purpose the encouragement of economy and thrift among the small depositors; that it will be instrumental in bringing into circulation money that has been lying dormant for years. It may be true that this will be accomplished, but in accomplishing it it will work ruin to the bankers of the West and Middle West. The money in case of financial stringency will not stay in the locality in which it was produced, but at the call of officials in the East, it will be rushed to the East and dumped on the market there. The small banker can whistle for government support and get it just as he did in the panic of 1907."

Legislative News

A bill providing for a complete revision of the state and savings bank laws of Iowa has been introduced in the Iowa legislature by the banks and banking committee of the house of representatives. The bill is introduced in three sections and was prepared largely in the office of Chief Clerk Frank Roberts of the state banking department. The three different measures are as follows:

Revising laws regulating savings banks, making them apply to state banks permitting bank directors to receive payment for actual services at meetings, etc.

Relating to the operation and regulation of state and savings banks; authorizing auditor of state to require a change of correspondents, and to verify and reconcile the accounts of and pass books of depositors and to provide that all state and savings banks shall hold annual meetings in January.

Authorizing auditor of state to appoint not more than six bank examiners, one of whom shall be placed in charge of the department with salaries of $1,800 each and fixing fees to be paid by state and savings banks.

Although the session is now nearing its close, the committee on banks and banking will do its utmost to boost these three measures through the legislature as they mean much to the state and savings banks of Iowa.

The proposition to put a tax on mortgages in the form of a registration fee caused a debate of a day and half in the lower house of the Iowa legislature which voted the bill down at the end of that time. The bill provided for a registration fee of 50 cents on each $100 represented in the mortgage but was amended to read 10 cents per year per $100. Bankers in the house took an active part in the debate but were divided in the stand taken. When the vote was announced and the defeat of the measure was shown, Representative Ward, its author introduced a bill to tax moneys and credits at a flat rate of 4 mills on the dollar. The bill is along the line of the Pennsylvania plan and is expected to stir up as big a fuss as the bill to tax mortgages—in case the new bill ever emerges from the committee room which seems unlikely at this late day. In the meantime, the house committee on appropriations recommended the Harding bill to create a commission to revise the tax laws of Iowa for indefinite postponement. Nevertheless the friends of the bill succeeded in getting a minority report which has been signed by the majority of the committee, a fact that has caused not a little amusement among members of the lower house.

One bill aimed directly at the Des Moines banks was introduced by representative Ward who comes from Sioux City. It provides that state funds may be deposited in any bank in the state or out of the state either so far as that goes. At present state funds are deposited in Des Moines banks.

Bankers over Iowa are also interested in the Stillman bill to abolish the office of school treasurer and instead put the school money in the hands of the county treasurer to be placed out at interest at 2 per cent on 90 per cent of the daily balances. Most school treasurers are bankers and they are not particularly keen to lose the school money. The bill is on the house calendar for disposition this week. The senate has on its calendar for passage the Fitchpatrick bill requiring an annual report and small fees from all corporations engaged in doing business in Iowa, whether Iowa companies or foreign. The Seeley bill to exempt from taxation in Iowa the stock of foreign corporations held by Iowa residents is also up for passage.

The senate voted down the bill to take the insurance department away from the auditor but the house has for passage the bill to take the banking department out of his hands and place it with the state treasurer.

Des Moines Bank Clearings

Des Moines bank clearings made another decided gain over the corresponding week last year, so the reports for the week ending March 20th show. The clearings for the week were $3,860,531.75. These are an increase over the clearings for the corresponding week of last year of $950,613.20.

Meir of the Avoca State; Sidney Bates, assistant cashier of the Osceola Savings; J. E. Walker of the Truro Bank; J. E. Varnum of the Eldon Savings; A. Dixon of the First National at Coon Rapids.

The Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce

The Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce has followed its procedure of past years when it projected its original new building by easily disposing of the bonds whose proceeds are to be utilized in the erection of a twelve-story addition to the building. The bonds amounted to $200,000. They run twenty years and carry 4½ per cent interest. The Wells-Dickey company of Minneapolis, commercial paper, bonds, etc., took the issue, paying $200,200 for them. Even this small premium is considered satisfactory evidence of the commercial standing of the paper. The bonds will be paid off by the association in twentieths, beginning after 1911.

Mountain View (Cal.) Bank Resumes

The Bank of Mountain View, which had been closed by the bank commissioners one week ago, has reopened with the balance on the right side of the ledger, and with ample resources. Bank Commissioner Watson took charge of the bank on March 3d, when he found that $14,860.03 doubtful assets had been credited to resources, while the cash balances had shrunk to $4,876.23. Instead of forcing the bank into liquidation he granted the officers time to procure additional funds to place the bank upon a firm footing. The doubtful assets were charged to profit and loss, and the cash balances increased to $20,881.03. The depositors and stockholders will escape loss and the bank is now allowed to continue business.

Document Filed with State Treasurer Valid

The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has declared the bond of $2,000,000, given to secure deposits of the Commonwealth in the Allegheny National of Pittsburgh by Joshua Rhodes, John Caldwell, Jr., J. McM. King, Walter Chess, Thomas Evans and William Montgomery was valid and had not been discharged because the bonds of surety companies had been demanded by State Treasurer John O. Sheatz.

The decision affects the surety companies, who instead of paying all the deposit not realized from the assets of the bank, will now only be called upon to pay their proportionate share.

The Bank of France

The Bank of France has now 479 bank places, 127 branches (succursales), 61 bureaux auxiliaires, and 290 villes rattachees. The gross receipts during the year 1908 amounted to $10,570,930, to which has to be brought forward $2,129,265, making, with other smaller items, the total receipts of all kinds $13,546,135. The administration expenses amounted to $4,139,960, and taxes and duty on circulation amounted to $1,824,165, making the total expenses $5,964,125. There remained, therefore, divisible $7,582,010. The dividend for the whole year amounted to $5,840,000.

Bank of France Destroys Notes

At the close of each year the condemned bank notes at the Banque de France on which the dread sentence of execution has been passed are conveyed to the dungeon in the lowermost depths of the bank. The "condemned cell" is the repository of all French bank notes which have in the course of their contact with cash boxes, purses and pocket books, become crumpled, torn, or stained to such a degree that the authorities at headquarters judge it wise to withdraw them from circulation. At the head office of the Bank of France there is a permanent tribunal before which all doubtful paper is brought, and when once this tribunal has pronounced capital punishment on a bank note, the dread sentence is written on its face, and the judgment is countersigned by the treasurer. Once it bears the fatal word "annule," all hope is gone forever. The condemned bank note is seized, hurried off to join its doomed companions, and securely locked in the cell for "vieux billets," there to await the last gloomy formalities before the execution, from which there is no reprieve. The prison for superannuated bank notes is approached by sombre corridors, encumbered with huge drawers, containing the "proces verbaux d'annulation" of all the bank notes that have been destroyed since the constitution of the bank.

Reduced to Pulp

More than 1,500 alphabets which have been annulled repose there. When an iron door, with a triple lock, is opened, we see the canceled notes, in serried rows, lying before us. In narrow cells they are ranged alphabetically, awaiting the hour of their final disappearance. Once the date of their final destruction has been fixed, they are taken to the cellars in which the printing office is situated, and, in presence of the bank's officials, they are brought out for annihilation. When they have been distributed one by one into baskets provided for that purpose, the condemned bank notes are emptied into a great cylinder, half filled with water and caustic soda. The cylinder is then locked, and it is set in motion. At the end of the second day the officials return to witness the horrible end of the discarded bank notes. Furnished with a long spoon, a workman thrusts it into the depths of the cylinder, and withdraws a thick, steaming liquid, which he pours into a tin basin. One of the torturers approaches. He, too, has a spoon, but it is not so long as the other, and with it he stirs the bouillon round to make quite sure that not a remnant of the hapless bank notes has been left. Then he murmurs: "C'est bien," and the tragic operation is at an end. When the "bank note soup" has been reduced to a paste, it is sold for four shillings a hundred kilos (200 pounds), although the paper alone at one time cost a sovereign for two pounds.

Redeeming Mutilated Notes

Another interesting department at the bank of France is that which deals with imperfect bank notes. The persons who apply for the reimbursement of these notes are obliged to give every possible assistance to the bank officials in order to prove that they (the applicants) are of good faith. If the note has been partially burned, the owner must produce the cinders, so that they may be analyzed. One day a poor woman arrived at the bank, and with many tears related that she had put her husband's waistcoat in the wash, forgetting that in one of the pockets were a couple of bank notes. She had rescued what was left of them, but all that remained was a pulpy substance that bore no resemblance to the original document. As it was evident that the woman was telling the truth, she was sent away happy with the equivalent of the notes that had been "washed." On another occasion a man presented himself at the bank with a flower-pot, in which he had hidden his treasure, composed of bank notes. Some field mice had gnawed the notes, but the bank refused to make them good.

Counterfeits for War Times

In order to familiarize themselves with the methods employed by counterfeiters, the bank has a special workshop in which a staff of expert designers and engravers is employed in copying foreign bank notes. The bank of France is very proud of this department, and the head of the "counterfeiting" staff proudly boasts that the bank is better at falsifying than at making genuine bank notes. It is even asserted that were France to go to war with a foreign power, she would be in a position to flood the enemy's country with perfect counterfeits of her bank notes, a proceeding which would be nothing less than a financial disaster for the nation concerned. Legally the bank of France is not obliged to reimburse bogus notes, but if the holder of a counterfeit note can establish his innocence, he need not despair. Madame la Banque de France is miserly in her dealings, and she is accustomed to act liberally with those who throw themselves on her indulgence, always provided that their good faith is established.

Pittsburgh Bonds

The issue of Pittsburgh bonds, amounting to $1,975,000 and bearing 4 per cent interest awarded Monday evening to H. F. Bachman & Co. of Philadelphia and the Equitable Trust Company of New York, on their bid of 103.016, shows the fine credit enjoyed by that city. The bonds sold on a basis of 3.74 per cent, while city of Philadelphia bonds are now selling on a basis of 3.76 per cent. Seven Pittsburgh institutions bid for these bonds and two concerns bid for all, J. S. & W. S. Kuhn, Incorporated, who bid 102.67, and J. I. Buchanan, who bid 101.57. It will be remembered that J. S. and W. S. Kuhn bought the entire issue of $1,000,000 Allegheny County road bonds in September last, which enabled the county to prosecute its road building and give employment to many workmen. Other Pittsburgh bidders were the First National of Pittsburgh, which bid 101.506 for $600,000; Pittsburgh Bank for Savings, which bid $308,070 for $300,000; Colonial Trust Company, which bid $607,632 for $600,000; H. C. Bughman, $610,440 for $600,000, and the Dollar Savings Bank, which bid from 103.05 to 103.60 for $65,800 each of the issues from 1932 to 1939.

South Heart State Bank

The South Heart State Bank of South Heart, N. D., is erecting a bank building.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., March 24.—Union Trust Company of Spokane formally opened its savings department in the Marble Bank building the morning of March 15th. W. G. Hall is cashier and George Greenwood, formerly exchange teller at the Old National, is teller. The banking rooms are equipped with modern appliances and the furniture is in keeping with the general arrangement. The bank receives savings accounts of $1 and upward and allows interest on them, compounded semiannually, and issues certificates of deposit, bearing interest from the date of deposit. It also sells bank money orders and issues letters of credit for use in this country and abroad. It has a capital of $500,000 with the shareholders' liability of an equal amount, making it to all purposes a $1,000,000 institution, with a guaranty fund larger than any similar concern in the Pacific Northwest. The officers are: President D. V. Twohy, who is also head of the Old National; vice-president, W. C. Wakefield, secretary-treasurer; James C. Cunningham, who occupies a similar position with the Union Trust Company; directors, D. C. Corbin, president Spokane International Railway Company; Ray P. Graves, president Spokane and Inland Empire Electric Railway system; F. A. Blackwell, president Idaho and Washington Northern Railway Company; Robert B. Paterson, president Spokane Dry Goods Company; J. P. McGoldrick, president McGoldrick Lumber Company; George S. Brooke, president Fidelity National; T. J. ## L. Rutter Heads Cleaning Force

R. Lewis Rutter, secretary and manager of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company, has been appointed chairman of the crematory department committee by Mayor C. Herbert Moore, who has set aside April 3d to 10th as "Civic Week," when it is expected 50,000 men, women and school children will devote their energies to beautifying the city under the direction of the City Beautiful committee of the 10,000 club of Spokane. Plans have been completed by a committee composed of A. E. Barnes, Frederick W. Dewart, E. V. Lambert, Rich Stewart and N. S. Pratt for a general cleaning of streets, alleys and private grounds, planting trees, shrubs, and vines and the discussion of civic problems. Bankers, railroad presidents, lumber barons, mining kings, bonanza wheat farmers and others who have made fortunes in the various lines of commercial, financial and industrial activities will work shoulder to shoulder with laborers, clerks, office men and merchants in the annual cleaning, the close of which Spokane will be as bright as a new pin.

John Berry Dead

John Berry, who with E. A. Hawley, founded the First National at Dayton, Wash., in 1880, of which he was president and cashier 18 years, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ora Weatherford at Dayton, from a pleurisy a few days ago. Rev. H. E. Mason conducted the funeral services at Brooklyn under the direction of the Masonic order. Mr. Berry was born near Springfield in 1834 and educated at Lansing, Iowa. He crossed the plains in 1862 and became a merchant at Astoria, Ore., going afterward to Walla Walla, Wash., and thence to Dayton. When the First National passed out of existence in 1890, he became chief accountant for the firm of Schwabacher and Broughton, retiring eight years ago.

First National of Cottonwood

O. M. Collins of Uniontown, Wash., has become head of the First National of Cottonwood, Idaho, succeeding Frank W. Kettenbach, resigned. Mr. Kettenbach is president of the National Bank at Lewiston, Idaho, and is interested in several other banks on Nez Perce and Camas prairies. W. N. Brown of Cottonwood and W. W. Brown of Grangeville, Idaho, retire from the directorate of the First National, having sold their stock to Mr. Collins. D. V. Dowd and Mr. Collins were elected as directors to fill the vacancies. Mr. Collins is the heaviest stockholder. He is also a stockholder in other prairie district banks.

The Pioneer National

Pioneer National of Ritzville, Wash., which town enjoys the distinction of being the largest initial wheat shipping point in the world, has been named a depository for the Simcoe Indians, living on the reservation southeast of North Yakima. W. H. Martin, cashier, has been advised that the Indians most of whom will carry accounts with the bank, purpose signing their checks by making imprints of the ball of the thumb. He is now devoting his time to study books dealing with the art of reading thumb prints.

Bank Examiner Resigns

Governor James A. Brady of Idaho has sent the name of W. G. Cruse, deputy bank examiner to the senate to succeed Wilbur S. Chaney, resigned, as state bank examiner. Mr. Chaney has become president of the Bank of Commerce at Lewiston, Idaho, which opened its doors March 15th. Governor Brady wanted to reappoint Mr. Chaney, but the latter's connection with the new bank made it impossible. The Bank of Commerce takes over the interest of the Commercial Trust Company. Governor Brady has nominated Insurance Commissioner Goaslind to succeed himself.

Banking Notes

J. J. Browne of Spokane, owner of a string of banks in eastern Washington and northern Idaho, announces he will begin work at once on a three-story brick structure to cost $350,000 with frontage on three streets in the northeastern part of Spokane. There will be a court 42 by 136 feet in the center, thus giving natural light to every room in the structure, which will cover a half block. The building will be devoted to stores on the ground floor, and apartments and rooms on the upper stories.

Assessor Sinall of Yakima county has instructed his deputies to make a canvass of the residents of his bailiwick to ascertain if they have money in banks or anywhere else. If the depositors make acknowledgment the amount of cash will be taxed. He says there is no law in Washington to force a bank to give him a list of its depositors. The latest interpretation of the tax law is that only such money is taxable if the deposit is withdrawable on demand, and that savings deposits are exempt, for the reason that banks require notice in writing before the money can be drawn.

Justin A. Harsh, for years postmaster at Tekonsha, Mich., who with H. D. Warren of Aberdeen, Wash., organized the Latah county State Bank at Deary, Idaho, last summer, has resigned his government office and will move his family to Deary, where they will make their home. Mr. Harsh is president of the bank and Mr. Warren is cashier.

T. E. King, roadmaster of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound Railway Company, has presented a magnificent elk head to the First State Bank of St. Joe, Idaho. The animal was killed in Montana. The antlers are symmetrical and have a spread of five feet. The head is well mounted and is a beautiful adornment.

Farmers' and Merchants' State Bank of Malden, Wash., has opened its doors for business. The officers and directors are: J. W. Hughes, president; J. M. Richardson, vice-president; Edwin T. Taylor, cashier; L. F. Rohleder, J. M. Richardson, Charles Peterson, Ole Melhus, J. W. Hughes, J. W. Bartlett, L. H. Larson, Mr. Ackerly and Edwin T. Taylor, directors.

Bank clearings in Spokane for the week ended March 13th amounted to $7,091,803, as against $5,497,563, a gain of about 30 per cent over the same period in 1908.

First Bank of White Bluff, Wash., has filed papers of incorporation in Benton county, with these officers: President, L. E. Johnson of Kennewick, vice-president, F. F. Weil, and W. J. Kincaid cashier. This is to be a state bank with a capital of $10,000.

The affairs of the Exchange Bank at Blaine, Wash., are being wound up, with a final dividend to creditors of 5 per cent, in addition to the 12 per cent already paid.

Total deposits in Oregon banks reported to state bank examiner, amount to $74,929,500.86, an increase of nearly $1,000,000 since November 27th. As some difficulty was experienced in securing reports promptly, the examiner has set a fine of $50 a day for failure to report on time.

First National of North Yakima, Wash., has contributed $1,000 toward the Yakima county exhibit at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition.

St. Paul Bankers in Favor of Double Examination

St. Paul bankers will not object to the proposed double examination yearly as provided by a proposed state law. Said Cashier J. A. Swenson of the Scandinavian American: "We would have no objection to being examined twice a year or to paying the examination fees. We invite examinations from any source.

"In justice to the state examiner's office, I would like to say that it has been unfortunately hampered heretofore by lack of funds. It is a very important department and it is becoming more important every year. Yet it has never had enough money to make all the systematic examinations that should have been made. The examiner has been obliged to use his staff in examining frequently the institutions that he was not sure about. He has been unable to examine frequently enough the institutions that were apparently beyond question. If this bill will permit him to make more systematic examinations, it will be a good thing for the public and for the responsible banks."

Boston Trust Company Re-serves

The most noteworthy feature of the last statement of the Boston trust companies to the savings bank commissioner, is the increase of over $5,000,000 in cash. This brings the total cash held by the nineteen institutions to $13,750,000. The amount of cash due from reserve banks increased approximately $1,000,000, as compared with the previous report. This increase of $5,000,000 in currency and specie represents substantially the amount of cash which had to be added to the previous cash holdings of the trust companies, in order to bring total reserves up to the standard required by the new law, which went into effect January 1st. This law increased the cash reserve required from 5 per cent to 8 per cent of net deposits. Although the percentage of reserves which may be held in Massachusetts or United States bonds was lowered by the new law from 5 per cent to 4 per cent of deposits, trust companies have not decreased their aggregate holdings of these securities to any appreciable extent. As a matter of fact, the majority of Boston trust companies hold a very small fraction of their reserves in bonds.

South Carolina's New Law

In regard to the enactments of the South Carolina legislature requiring all insurance companies to deposit with the commissioner a bond or security, in the discretion of the commissioner, Commissioner McMasters has made the following rulings: Either the principal or the surety must have on deposit securities in the amount of the bond or must have in South Carolina property liable to attachment to the amount of the bond. This amount is $20,000 for life insurance companies and $10,000 for all other companies.

A surety company must have on deposit securities to an amount equal to the amount of the largest single bond which it will write, but should it have one deposit it will be received on the bond of the other companies to ten times the amount of the deposit it makes, that is to say, that to give bond for a life insurance company a bond company must have on deposit $20,000, and in this case would be received on a gross aggregate of bonds to the amount of $200,000. The commissioner for the present will receive any good securities, but he will expect the companies making deposits within a reasonable time to secure domestic investments, such as state bonds, county or municipal bonds, or real estate mortgages in South Carolina or some such domestic securities.

Of Interest to National Banks

Washington, March 29.—Senator Nelson is unable to discover any good reason why real estate may not be made the basis of loans made by national banks as is the case with loans made by other institutions, and he has introduced a bill authorizing such banks to let out a limited amount of their funds on such security when the land is improved, occupied, and cultivated farms.

H. E. Hallenbeck

Henry E. Hallenbeck, cashier of the Capital National, St. Paul, was in Chicago during the week calling upon old friends at the Central Trust, where he formerly was an assistant cashier. His "making good" in St. Paul is conceded by all. The Capital National now has $4,000,000 in deposits and is climbing steadily.

The Philadelphia Stock Exchange

Request will be made by the special removal committee of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange for a definite proposition from the Girard Trust Company.

Two Leaders in California Association

JOSEPH D. RADFORD

H. S. FLETCHER

Mr. Radford and Mr. Fletcher are team mates, at the head of the California Bankers, this year. Mr. Radford is president, and Mr. Fletcher vice-president. They made a hit by securing George M. Reynolds for the Del Monte convention, and are planning a rousing reception to the popular head of the A. B. A. Mr. Radford is vice-president of the German American Savings at Los Angeles, and Mr. Fletcher is president of the Bank of Watsonville.

F. E. Farnsworth

Frederick E. Farnsworth, secretary of the American Bankers Association, in commenting upon the business outlook, says: "The banks of the country generally, especially the banks in the reserve cities, have at the present time very large reserves, much larger than are desired for the requirements of business, consequently interest rates are low. There is a gradual improvement in the business condition of the country over the period of depression, but idle money is not seeking investment. This condition exists and will continue to exist to a certain extent until the policies of the present administration are fully outlined and final action has been taken on the tariff. Investors will not purchase securities to any large extent, especially corporation and railroad stocks and bonds, until vital questions are settled."

Arkansas Guaranty Clause

Little Rock, Ark., March 29.—The House Monday afternoon passed the Warnock-Seamster Arkansas banking bill, which contains a bank guaranty clause. The bill provides for a State Bank Commission to examine all banks in the state once a year.

Banks will Close Branches

The Bank of California, San Francisco, which has conducted a branch institution in Van Ness Avenue for the benefit of its depositors since the fire, is contemplating the abandonment of that branch on account of the downtown movement.

The Anglo-California Bank, which has also maintained a branch in Van Ness Avenue and in the Mission district, will abandon its Van Ness Avenue establishment and will also do away with the Mission bank as a branch.

J. C. F. Hull Dead

John C. Fremont Hull, vice-president of the American National of Los Angeles is dead of paralysis.

Banking Law Violated

Austin, Texas, March 29.—It is learned that the commissioner of insurance and banking has submitted to the attorney-general's department the proposition of one of the state banks that, it is alleged, has violated the law by making unauthorized loans to its officers. The attorney-general's department is making an investigation into the matter.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

NOW that the convention season is about to open, amateur photographers among the bankers will begin to polish up their equipment. Those who are not entirely satisfied with the results of last season's efforts are advised to consult the advertisement of the Goerz American Optical Company on another page of this issue. The lenses produced by this concern are in use by practically every government of any importance, by professional photographers, and by amateurs everywhere. They will send a complete catalog upon request.

A BIT of History" is the title of a very handsome booklet gotten out by the State Bank of Chicago. It was written and compiled by Henry S. Henschen, cashier, and is additional proof of the care and ability with which he transacts whatever comes to his hand.

THIS bank was established in 1879 in a very small way by H. A. Haugan and John R. Lindgren, the latter of whom was barely past his majority at the time. The firm prospered, and in 1891 was chartered as a state bank. It now has $20,000,000 in deposits and is rated one of the most progressive banks in the country.

AST year this bank secured the service of L. A. Goddard who at the time was president of the Fort Dearborn National, of this city. He is developing a new field of business for the State Bank, and Mr. Henschen is taking care that it loses none of its old.

SECRETARY KAUFFMAN, of the Washington Bankers, has sent out a partial report covering the work of the legislature of that state which now has adjourned. The state association was successful in defeating the guaranty of deposits law and in preventing the repeal of an act giving exemption from taxation to the mortgages, notes, etc. The bills of lading act slightly modified was passed and has become a law. In all of these matters, the state association and Mr. Kauffman are to be congratulated.

REPARATIONS are going rapidly forward for the tri-state bankers convention at Seattle, June 24th-25th-26th. Convention headquarters will be at the New Washington Hotel, and other hotels which may be addressed for reservations are the Butler, Savoy, Washington Annex, Lincoln, Northern, and Rainier. The secretaries of the three states have had one meeting to arrange a joint program, and the matter is progressing finely.

THE American Institute of Banking will meet in Seattle the same week that the three conventions are there, and a splendid train has been arranged out of Chicago by the Committee, of which Geo. A. Jackson, of the Continental National, of this city, is chairman. Railroad rates have been allowed, and special train arrangements have been made over the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, returning by whatever route the passenger may select. It is no secret that June is the most delightful month of the year in which to visit Puget Sound. It is said that the bankers of the entire Northwest will be present, and that every banker in Seattle will make reservations for another banker who may request it.

SECRETARY EMERSON, of the Colorado Bankers Association, does not want it to be understood that the American Bankers Association is the only organization with sufficient enterprise to furnish its offices with a specially prepared voucher-check. The Colorado bankers have been fortunate in receiving as a gift from the Western Banknote Company a special voucher-check for use by the Colorado association, and it is gotten up in the usual careful and artistic way for which the Western Banknote Company is famous. Mr. Emerson has adopted it for all official purposes in his transactions with the treasury of the Colorado association.

THERE is a farmer living near Mount Vernon, Illinois, who does not have the necessary amount of confidence in bankers of his locality. He is said to have buried about $53,000 last fall and to have failed to find it this spring when he looked for it. Some of the money has been recovered by detectives. Part of the money and all of the interest which it might have earned has been lost.

NO secret is made in New York of the fact that the National City Bank has captured another ex-secretary of the treasury of the United States. Mr. Cortelyou has been elected head of the Consolidated Gas Company of that city, probably in recognition of past favors.

LETTERS have been received from John H. Puelicher, of Milwaukee, who has been at Carlsbad and other European points in search of recreation and rest. He has worked practically unceasingly for several years, and his physicians advised him to avert a breakdown by going away for a while.

THERE are bills up for passage in both Pennsylvania and New York to compel "private bankers" to so designate themselves upon all signs, letter paper, accounts, checks, and other instruments used in their business, so that no one may be left under the impression that they have been supervised or inspected by state or national officers or that they have a known and fixed capital upon which to do business.

EVERY banker in Texas seems to be well pleased that the Comptroller of the Currency at Washington has appointed J. M. Logan one of the four bank examiners at large. Mr. Logan has been a bank examiner in Texas and knows pretty nearly every banker in the state.

THE Pennsylvania legislature is considering a bill to abolish to some extent "the loan shark evil" in that state. Investigation has shown that the loan sharks, as a rule, employ a capital of $5,000 to $10,000 per year in their business, and that the net dividends are more often above 100 per cent than below it. Such bills should be carefully scrutinized so that they may pass the supervision of the judges of the courts. Illinois had a law upon this same subject which the courts failed to sustain.

THE Old National, of Spokane, has been operating for several years strictly upon a civil service basis. Recently when a teller left to take a position in another bank, twenty clerks each moved up one step nearer to the cashier's desk, which, of course, is the goal of all junior bankers.

THE Minnesota bankers have come back to their original affinity, Lake Minnetonka, and their convention this year will be held there on June 14th and 15th. The transportation facilities have been very much improved recently in the Tonka Bay district and now almost all points of interest are readily reached by trolley and ferry boats as well as by steam cars. The ride through one of the most beautiful districts in the world is less than one hour from Minneapolis.

GEORGE B. CORTELYOU has been made president of the Consolidated Gas Company, of New York. All good secretaries of the treasury, when they leave office, go to New York to become heads of big corporations. — Central Banker.

They do if they faithfully have served the interests of "The System" while in Washington, "in" the public service.

C. T. LIBBY, of Portland, Maine, a writer for Bradstreets and other papers of like high character, is writing a new book to be entitled "The New Monetary Gospel." If it happens not to be new he says he will change its name. His treatment is predicated on the statement that no central law commanding universal assent, like gravitation in physics or the circulation of the blood in physiology, has yet been discovered in the science of money. "If I am wrong will not you most kindly write me what that central law is? I am writing to the leading economists of the world and, manifestly, if such law has been recognized their replies will disclose it."

THE new gospel is like this: The law of supply and demand as applied to money means the realizing demand, as shown especially by the prices of commodities. The demand for money and the demand for loans are complementary—as either decreases the other increases. Dealers in loans, therefore, are inclined to a diametrically wrong attitude toward the volume of money, which needs be controlled by the masters of traffic, or by government, in order to decrease the volume when the demand is falling below normal and increase it when the demand is rising above normal.

IF you don't like Mr. Libby's statement of the case he asks you to write to him, restating it to your own way of thinking. Here's where Andrew J. Frame might get in.

THEY do things mighty fine up in Minneapolis. When Mr. Cook left the Northwestern National to go with the Minnesota Loan & Trust as cashier, the Northwestern officers gave him a farewell banquet at the biggest club in town. In some towns they are just small enough to begin knocking a classy, successful fellow the moment he goes over to a better job in a rival institution. Hats off to Minneapolis in this, as in many other good things they do rightly and at the right time.

CASHIER.

Collecting Monetary Data

The Comptroller of the Currency has had a large number of answers in reply to his letters to the banks asking information as to the different kinds of moneys they have on hand. Mr. Murray does not consider himself at liberty to say what has been disclosed in these answers, and says he will not make public the information.

It is his intention to collect the data for the exclusive use of the monetary commission. As soon as he has received replies from all the national banks and the information is compiled in a suitable form, he will hand it over to the commission.

Festus J. Wade Discusses the Reciprocal Duty Between Banks and Citizens

Festus J. Wade, of St. Louis, eloquently presented the reciprocal duty between banks and citizens at the sixth annual banquet of the Hannibal (Mo.) Commercial Club last Thursday evening. He said in part:

"The business of banking is one of the essential constituents of modern civilization, and it has been one of the most potent factors in the rapid and healthy growth of the commercial interest of this country. The country banker has done his full part.

"I need not tell you that the bank occupies a very important position in every community; the town or city depends upon it; the whole community depends upon it as a convenient and safe medium for the transaction of business affairs, the collection and distribution of money, the safekeeping thereof, and the accumulation of savings.

"The duties between the bank and its customer are not one-sided, and in my opinion, those due from banks to the communities in which they exist are important and serious, and may be briefly summarized as follows:

"First: I am not aware of any asset which in the long run procures more business for a bank, and which serves to render life generally more pleasing and enjoyable, than courtesy and politeness.

"Second: A bank should never jeopardize its own funds or those of its depositors in speculation.

"Third: A bank should conduct its business on safe and conservative lines; it should avoid loans which bear too high a rate of interest, as well as paying too much for its deposits. A bank can be injured by paying too much for its deposits almost to the same extent that it can be harmed by extravagant management.

"Fourth: The bank is trusted by its depositor, not alone for the capital and surplus of the institution, but largely by reason of the integrity of its officers and directors; it is therefore the duty of the banker to loan liberally to all reputable citizens where the moral risk is first-class and the financial standing of the borrower warrants the loan.

"Let not the banker imagine he is the only honest man in town; if he reaches that stage of reasoning, the time is ripe for him to retire.

"Bankers make their profits from their customers, and they should always be fair and always be helpful; and it should be kept in mind that the depositors of the bank should be first protected, borrowers next, and the stockholders last; therefore, in times of financial distress, every safeguard should be thrown around the institution to protect its depositors, and every customer should be aided to weather the storm, to the limit of the bank's capacity, even though the bank may be obliged to borrow to meet such contingencies.

"The citizens of a community keep their deposits in banks upon the theory that they will be, and should be, loaned out for the development of trade and commerce of that particular locality. In view of this, the banker instead of being timid, and panic-stricken in times of stress, should be the broadest-minded and the most liberal citizen of the community in the management of his affairs, in so far as he can do so on a safe and sound basis.

Duty of the Citizen to the Bank

"It is the duty of every good citizen in every community, large or small, to foster, encourage, and develop the banking influence in that community, and he who fails in these particulars cannot be regarded as best fulfilling the obligations of a good citizen.

"The individual who selfishly hoards his cash in times of adversity, who will not trust in a particular community one of the banks there to be found, ought to be the subject of suspicion and distrust; he who cannot trust, should not in turn be trusted.

"In times of financial difficulty, such as occurred some eighteen months ago, the most undesirable citizen in a community was the man or woman who circulated unfavorable rumors about financial institutions.

"The next most undesirable citizen is the financial coward who rushes to his bank and withdraws his balance, taking the money from circulation, thus throttling the wheels of industry and commerce.

"It is the sacred and solemn duty of every citizen, during a panicky period to stand shoulder to shoulder, stemming the tide of adversity in the same way that every good citizen should stamp out a plague or protect his country in times of war.

"In periods of prosperity, the citizen owes to the bank of his community the same allegiance which he expects from the bank during the time of difficulty, and should not, for ordinary needs, seek depositaries, or borrow money, outside of his community so long as the local banks are capable of meeting such needs.

"How many merchants are lured away from home, assuming that by borrowing money from outside sources in such times as now exist, they can save one-half of one per cent, or one per cent on a loan of $50,000. Theoretically, $500 is made by such a transaction; the home banker is obliged to either hoard his money, loan it out at ruinous rates, or take chances on doubtful paper; whereas in times of distress, this same individual who is sounding around, trying to save a fraction of one per cent on his borrowing, will appeal to the banker on bended knees to help him in his hour of need, and will criticize the same banker for calling his loans in the hour of trouble.

"It is the duty of every citizen to foster, encourage, build up, and develop local financial institutions, quite as much as it is to take care of the health of his community. The merchant who neglects his bank has no right to expect that bank to take care of him or his business, or the commerce of the community.

"Let me ask those who were borrowers during the panic of 1907, what would have become of them if they had been required to pay every dollar they owed to their local banks during October, November, and December, 1907? What would have been their feelings when a note fell due if the local banker had advertised their collateral for sale, or pursued them in the courts for failing to meet just obligations maturing at that time?

"How many individuals, firms, and corporations would have been forever ruined, if the bankers throughout this whole country had not, with great patience and fortitude, stood the brunt of the panic of 1907?

"It is a poor rule that will not work both ways, and it seems both logical and just that if the banker cares for his patron in times of financial stringency, the banker has the right to expect that the citizen will stand by the bank in the hour of prosperity."

What Trust Companies May Accomplish as Receivers

The trust company as a receiver is either a financial nurse and doctor or an undertaker. If the patient is so far gone that new blood cannot be injected into the veins, there is nothing to do but to declare him dead, proceed to settle his affairs, and distribute the percentage, usually small, among the creditors. This requires more or less skill and ability according to circumstances. Sometimes it is easy, sometimes not. Sometimes collections are difficult to make, the property is not easily marketable or litigation has to settle the priority of claims, and the process is long drawn out in spite of the receiver. But his function of the undertaker is a simple matter in comparison with that of the combined nurse and doctor, as death is always simpler than prolonged sickness. The disease may have many causes and present many different forms, but almost invariably when brought to the notice of the physician it has developed extreme anemia. In other words, except when a receivership is sought because of quarrels in the ownership or where wrong is being perpetrated, the invariable trouble is lack of money.

Business Experience Required

Every well-organized and well-managed trust company should comprehend in its officers and directors a varied accumulation of business experience, including expert knowledge of credits and business conditions. These are not difficult to come by in any community. The officers of a trust company of some years' standing are usually well qualified to judge of the merits of any concern submitted to them, and they can call to their assistance directors who may know all about the particular class in question; or, if not, who do know about general business so well that they can apply the principles of sound judgment to this special case. They are certain to have one or more keen judges of credit, a very essential matter, and these men usually have considerable information about many diversified mercantile and manufacturing enterprises that comes into good play. Here is the great advantage of a trust company in that it can marshal such a force of intelligence upon the subject, that can sift and weigh the facts and arrive at reasonable conclusions.

Q Even at this early date The Bank of Pittsburgh had been established for twenty years and had a national reputation for strength and fair dealing. It desires to extend its collection facilities and its business with other banks and invites correspondence.

Three Classes Affected

It is the old adage over again that two heads are better than one, only there are apt to be a dozen instead of two. In such a body it is surprising how much valuable information will be elicited that will form sound opinions so that if there is hope for the patient it is certain to be made the most of. Speaking generally, there are three classes of business that get into trouble: mercantile, manufacturing and corporations conducting public utilities, railroads, interurbans, insurance, banks and even trust companies. With insurance and financial institutions, a receivership almost always means liquidation. Railroads, electric lines and public utilities are frequently over-capitalized or have not yet established their business and can not earn fixed charges. It is then a matter of delay until the traffic develops naturally, or a reorganization on a basis that fits the income. In such cases the help of a trust company that can furnish the means as well as the ability to conduct the enterprise is invaluable and often spells success instead of loss.

Mercantile Receiverships

In mercantile receiverships it is not common to run the business for a long time. Creditors, especially those furnishing merchandise, usually prefer to have the concern wound up quickly. It is frequently advisable to run the business for a brief period in order to reduce the stock or to get a purchaser for it as a going concern, but as a rule bankruptcy is pretty well established before the receivership is created, and there is no chance to save it. The manufacturing line therefore affords the trust company the opportunity to show its capacity to heal and save. As a class manufacturers are large borrowers, and as a class they are never satisfied with conditions. They act on the principle that a business is going backward when it is not increasing, and there is a constant tendency towards expansion. Often this goes into a larger and more efficient plant, fixing capital where it is not available, and when hard times come credit is reduced or extinguished.

The Reward of Success

The receiver must put itself in the place of the owner and take an active, intense interest in the work laid out. In short, it must be qualified to "do business" in addition to the advantage of capital it can furnish. With a receiver at hand to furnish money as needed, the relief of the concern from the annoyances or borrowing is great. Stricter attention can be paid to the problems of the business, the mind having no financial worries to distract it. In some cases concerns have been left in the hands of a receiver long after the debts were paid and working capital accumulated, or a private arrangement has been made continuing the same supervision and support. There is much satisfaction to be had out of a successful receivership. It gives the company a reputation for ability and good management, as well as a substantial fee, both of which are good. It causes that feeling of elation over accomplishment that is exhilarating and it undoubtedly is a service to the community.

Marwick, Mitchell & Co. Audit Banks

The bank audit department of Marwick, Mitchell & Co. has increased its business fivefold the past two years by putting practical, skilled bank auditors to work. No "city salesmen" on the job. John Williams, formerly of the First National, Chicago, is in charge. The firm has been engaged by the St. Joseph, Mo., clearing house to audit all banks in the association or clearing through a member bank. It is probable that an examiner from the firm will be placed in charge of the work and remain there continuously.

The plan of clearing house examinations, which originated in Chicago, is expected to work great good in the towns where it is established. The local examining bureau has, so far as can be learned, shown an unusual degree of independence and has served not only to correct abuses, but to gradually educate the management of the different banks to see the merits of a high standard of banking practice and also to restrain other kinds of practices where the educational idea has failed. A clean bill of health from an impartial and competent examiner is a gratifying report to be able to make by the president of a bank to the board of directors.

That the smaller cities should take up the clearing house examination plan is regarded by the banking fraternity as an important movement in the interest of good banking.

Banking Ethics in England

London, March 15.—The following seriously intended matters from the sober pages of the "Bankers Magazine" will, no doubt, be read with interest in America where such trifling matters are always overlooked or soon forgotten. What follows is from the pages of the "Magazine," emphasized in differing styles of type, and headed "A Banking Problem."

In the last issue of the Magazine we placed before our readers the following problem:—

In a certain country town, one of the butchers kept his banking account with bank A, the managers and clerks of which dealt with him. The manager of bank B was a customer of the same tradesman. Meeting the butcher one day, the manager of bank B informed him that his custom would be withdrawn, unless the account was transferred to bank B. In view of this, the butcher transferred his banking account to bank B.

We asked them to advise us as to the proper course for the manager and clerks of bank A to adopt. We have had several replies to our enquiry. We cannot agree with those who consider that the officials in question should transfer their custom to some other butcher as a protest: this seems to us to be an undignified course to adopt. To act in such a manner appears to place the bank upon the same level as an ordinary tradesman. Possibly there is a tendency in this direction already and everything should be done to counteract it. We consider that the correct solution of the problem is given by those of our correspondents who express the opinion that the bank officials should continue their custom with the butcher notwithstanding the loss of his account, thereby showing him that their institution does not engage in squabbles with its customers or attempt to punish those who happen to withdraw their accounts from its books. This view is well expressed by a correspondent who writes:

The manager and staff of bank A should undoubtedly, after mature consideration, continue to deal with the butcher and prove to the country town and all whom it may concern that banking business is a vocation that should be carried out under the highest principles. By continuing their custom with the butcher they prove that banks are open for the convenience of the public and not because the officials of one bank can buy more meat than the officials of another bank. In future by so doing the manager and staff of bank A will be in an enviable position, as they will open accounts, as I assume they have done before, not to give their custom away, but to do their duty as officials of a high-principled bank. The great temptation to the manager and staff of bank A is to withdraw their custom from the butcher.

The matter may also be considered as affecting the relations between the banks themselves, and on this point one of our correspondents writes as follows:

Either the business of the butcher is of sufficient importance, or it is not, to warrant notice of the incident. If it is, the manager of bank A should not be too ready to accept the butcher's statement as full and accurate, and should call on the manager of bank B and try to ascertain what has really been said. This presupposes that the managers of the banks are on such terms of friendly acquaintanceship as are compatible with honorable competition, and hinder a customer from playing off one bank against another, thus leading to the wisest action being taken, if any.

With our correspondent's views we are cordially in sympathy. It is, we feel, in the long run harmful to the interests of a bank for it to allow its branch managers to tout for accounts in the way they do. We sincerely trust that the practice is not becoming general. A case was brought to our notice recently. The manager of a bank, deputed to make arrangements in connection with the opening of a new branch, made a bargain with a local tradesman that he would buy the office clock from him, provided he promised to open a banking account with the branch when it was ready for business. This is almost on a par with the call one usually receives from the local tradesmen soliciting our custom immediately on our moving to a new house. We shall be obliged if any of our readers will give us particulars of any similar transactions which have come before them.

Ex-Banker Spalding in Suit

Charles W. Spalding, former president of the Globe Savings Bank, the wrecking of which led to his imprisonment in Joliet penitentiary, has filed a petition in the circuit court of Cook County, Illinois, charging that the receiver owes thousands of dollars to him and creditors of the Globe Savings Bank. Appended to his petition is a statement in which it is set forth that there is due from the receiver, aside from loss sustained through alleged improper sale of real estate, $63,388.99. He claims property was sold that was to have been held in trust only.

Ohio Banking News

The Commercial Savings and Trust Company, Cleveland, has reduced its capital from $125,000 to $100,000.

Trust Company Cannot Act

Insolvency Judge Warner has handed down a decision in which he grants the motion of Frank Armstrong, a creditor, for the removal of the Union Savings Bank and Trust Company, of Cincinnati, as trustee of the defunct Commercial Bank. The trust company was appointed April 6, 1895, under Section 3821c, which was afterward, in 1903, held unconstitutional. The trust company claimed to act under Section 3821b, which provides for trust companies to administer under wills. The court, however, held that this is different from an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and decided that the trust company should be removed as trustee for the bank. Attorney Louis J. Dolle represented Armstrong, and Morse, Tuttle & Harper the trust company.

No Changes Made in Banking Laws

Aside from appropriating the money required for the proper conduct of the state department of banks and banking the general assembly has adjourned without passing any laws affecting the financial situations of the state. As usual several bills, which, if passed, would have done great harm to the financial institutions of the state, were introduced, but all of them died in the committees and none of them saw the light of day. While the bankers of the state favored some amendments to the Thomas banking law, they did not consider the late session as the time to ask them and nothing was introduced by them to change the law. With the appropriation which is now available the Thomas banking law can be given a thorough trial and when the general assembly meets again next winter the bankers of the state will know just the changes which it will be necessary to make to improve its provisions. B. B. Seymour, the state superintendent of banks and banking, is now preparing to carry out the provisions of the law relating to the examination of banks and within a short time will have a complete corps of examiners at his command.

The Waterford Commercial and Savings Bank

The new Waterford Commercial and Savings Bank of Waterford, has elected the following officers: J. Zumbro as president; A. Lawrence, vice-president; V. W. Welsh, secretary.

First National to Build

The First National of Gallipolis is to build a new banking building. It will be erected on a site purchased by the bank now occupied by the Natural Gas Company. President Stockhoff and Vice-President Alcorn have been in Cincinnati and selected an architect to submit plans and specifications. The building will be probably one story with a handsome front, with all modern improvements.

The State Savings Bank

The State Savings Bank of Woodville has been organized by D. H. Bittinger, Wm. Doepker, H. W. Molkenbur, and J. F. Smith. The capital is $25,000.

The Commercial National

Forced by a rapidly increasing business to seek larger quarters, the Commercial National, of Youngstown, has closed a deal with the First National for the purchase of the building now occupied by the last-named institution. For more than two years the business of the Commercial National has been increasing so rapidly that it has finally reached a volume impossible to be accommodated in the bank's present quarters.

The present location is an ideal one, and except for the fact that business compels it, the officials would not think of moving. When the First National decided to build the new block now in course of construction, opportunity offered to secure quarters adequate to the demands of the Commercial National and negotiations for the purchase of the old building—which is comparatively new—were opened. Consummation of the deal was reached this week, and it is expected that the First National will vacate along about July 1st. With as little delay as possible the interior of the building will be renovated and redecorated and the Commercial National will take possession, possibly about the middle of July.

A New Brokerage Company

A new brokerage company, with a capital of $250,000, has been chartered at Columbus, to be known as the Success Investment Company. The incorporators are: George Ehrlich, John M. Duey, William L. James, William McGary, and Tony Bonero. The company will open an office in Cincinnati.

The Broadway Savings Bank

Charging that the directors failed to keep themselves properly informed as to the loans and discounts, and that they acted as mere figureheads and permitted the bank to be carelessly managed. William Beatty, assignee, and Robert J. McIntosh, trustee for the depositors of the defunct Broadway Savings Bank, of Toledo, have filed suit in the common pleas court for $194,302.

Capital Stock Increased

The capital stock of the Citizens National, of Springfield, has been increased from $100,000 to $200,000.

The Marshfield Bank

The Marshfield Bank has been organized at Marshfield. S. E. G. Pedigo has been elected president; J. H. Boden, cashier; and A. R. Byrn, assistant cashier.

Charles Wolf, formerly cashier of the First National, of Dana, is looking over Maxwell City, New Mexico, with a view to locating. Paragon is in an agricultural and stock-raising section.

Grand Jury to Investigate

The two cases against Frank M. Malone, cashier of the defunct Malone & Son's Bank of Cayuga, were dismissed on motion of the prosecutor, for the reason that the state failed to prove that Monroe Pugh, the leading witness for the state, had deposited money in the bank, as alleged in the indictment. Judge G. G. Rheuby promptly dismissed the cases, but ordered that the defendant be held for action of the grand jury under bond of $2,000. The grand jury is now in session and will investigate the cases at once.

Meridian Clearing House Association

The last legislature passed an act to incorporate clearing house associations. Under this statute the Meridian, Miss., banks have established the Meridian Clearing House Association, with the following officers: Walker Broach, president and committeeman from the First National; W. G. Simpson, vice-president and committeeman from the Citizens' National; R. C. Weems, manager and committeeman from the Union Bank and Trust Company; J. A. McCain, committeeman from the Merchants and Farmers Bank.

In a public statement the banks say:

"The object of the formation of this association is to encourage a faithful and honest administration of banking trusts and public duties, and, further, to formulate a uniform scale of charges for service of proper business methods. The banks generally everywhere are now making a charge for this service; at least, for an amount equal to the cost of handling such items, and it is the purpose of this association to put into effect such a regulation. There will be, in addition, a uniform charge in the buying and selling of exchange, which, however, is the scale now in use by the members of this association with but slight modification."

David M. Flynn

Mercer County and the Second Regiment have been highly honored in the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel David M. Flynn, as Inspector-General of Rifle Practice.

Colonel Flynn, who is cashier of the First National of Princeton, N. J., is probably the youngest officer in the National Guard of New Jersey to hold the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. He is only thirty-three years of age, having been born in Princeton in 1876.

In the Guard, as well as in business life, Colonel Flynn has come up from the ranks. He was one of the moving spirits in the organization of Company L, of the Second Regiment, which has distinguished itself on the rifle range at Sea Girt. He enlisted in the company as a private in 1900, was made a corporal in 1901, battalion sergeant-major in 1903; re-enlisted in 1905, was made captain and paymaster of the Second Brigade by Colonel Collins December 10, 1906; major and paymaster, Second Brigade, December 10, 1907, and major and inspector of small arms practice, July 9, 1908.

A few weeks ago, Major Flynn was tendered the appointment of assistant inspector-general of rifle practice by General Spencer, and accepted the place. His selection is meeting with the warmest commendation on the part of the Guardsmen everywhere, and, as the Princeton Press remarks, his promotion "comes as a gratifying compliment to him personally and a recognition of the efficiency of the younger officers of the state militia."

Colonel Flynn's success in a business way has been as remarkable and gratifying as his military success. Owing to the death of his father, he began work in a store at the age of thirteen, where by his industry and integrity he attracted attention to himself. He studied at night, and when nineteen years of age, passed a United States Civil Service examination, and was named registry clerk in the Princeton postoffice, which position he held until about ten years ago, when he was chosen teller of the First National.

Later he was made cashier of the bank and he has more than made good. Since his connection with the bank, the number of depositors has more than tripled and the deposits have more than doubled. Colonel Flynn possesses an attribute valuable in all walks of life, but more especially in the banking world—he has never touched liquor of any kind.

Philadelphia Banking News

By J. IRVING COOPER

The Manayunk Trust Company of Philadelphia increased its dividend from  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 4 per cent semiannually.

Application to be Made June 7th

Application will be made on June 7th for a charter for the Pennsylvania State Bank, which is being organized, and it is expected will open for business about the middle of June in Philadelphia. It will have a capital of $100,000. Among the incorporators are the following: C. Addison Harris, Jr., H. G. Peddle, P. J. Baral, John Knoell, Henry Brandle, W. W. Supplee, George B. Wells, John J. Caine and H. H. Sheip.

The Philadelphia Money Market

Philadelphia bankers express the belief that higher money rates will prevail the moment the tariff schedules become definitely fixed, if not before. Rates are abnormally low, it being possible to borrow over the end of the year at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, and four months' loans are obtainable at 3 per cent. These quotations have induced commercial borrowers to enter the market, but whether this was due to prospective business awakening or to the cheapness of discounts, bankers said they were unable to determine.

Personal Mention

Henry Heinemann has been elected a director of the Tenth National of Philadelphia, to succeed B. J. Woodward, deceased.

Charles H. Bean, a Philadelphia banker, has been confined to his home for several days with an attack of throat trouble.

The Franklin Trust Company

The Franklin Trust Company declared the regular semiannual dividend of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, payable April 6th.

The Philadelphia Bond Market

The spirited bidding of Philadelphia banking houses for the several issues of nearby municipal bonds sold last week, together with the fact that an unusual number of banking houses which have not heretofore made direct bids for such issues, were active participants in the offerings opened for these bonds, was the feature of the investment market last week.

For one transaction, that of the $70,000 Radnor township 4s, the Fidelity and Girard Trust Companies made direct bids, and among the banking houses actively participating in the bids for other issues were Edward B. Smith & Co., Charles Fearon & Co., Henry & West, and a number of others who have not heretofore appeared as direct bidders for municipal issues.

Bankers said there was nothing significant about this sudden show of interest, except that it indicated a better market for municipal issues, and that the various banking houses found that it was an advantage to secure bonds direct from the municipalities.

J. F. Fahnestock Elected Treasurer

J. F. Fahnestock has been elected treasurer of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, this position being vacated by Henry Tatnall in his election as fourth vice-president in charge of the corporation's finances.

The organization of the new Morris National of Philadelphia, is progressing favorably. The alterations on the building which the company purchased some time ago, at the southeast corner of Second and Walnut streets, will soon be put under way and the new concern will begin business as soon as they are completed, probably in two or three months. The bank has a capital of $500,000, par $100 per share and a surplus of $100,000. The bank will make a special feature of a savings department.

The board of directors, while not yet complete, will include S. W. Whan, of Samuel W. Whan & Co., wholesale wool merchants, H. Vance Peters, of James M. Vance & Co., wholesale hardware, F. A. von Boyneburgk, coal operator, H. G. Peddle, a director of the Franklin Trust Co., G. E. Spatz, capitalist, Arthur Dunn, banker, Scranton, Pa., Wm. S. ## Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Bank legislation favored by the Minnesota Bankers Association is coming along swimmingly in the Minnesota legislature. The senate has passed several bills which the bankers want to see put through for the advancement and protection of the business in the state. One of these bills is the Thorpe measure which establishes a separate bank examination department for the state, with an examiner to be appointed by the governor. Senator Thorpe's resolution asking congress to amend the national banking law so as to allow banks not situated in reserve centers to loan money on real estate security was adopted also. Another measure passed by the senate is the uniform bill of lading law and still another makes it a misdemeanor for persons to make false representations to obtain credit at banks. Still another law gives banks the right to hypothecate collateral to secure public moneys, state, county and municipal funds, instead of expressive surety bonds. Under a law which the senate has approved also no banks can operate that are not incorporated. This puts a cinch on the anti-private bank law which was missing because of the wording of the law passed two years ago to stop private banking. The word "institution" was changed to "corporation."

Minnesota Convention Dates

The Minnesota Bankers Association will have its annual convention on June 14th and 15th this year at the Tonka Bay hotel, Lake Minnetonka. Secretary Charles R. Frost says that it has been decided to hold an early convention. Hitherto the bankers have been accorded the honor of opening the Tonka Bay hotel when they assembled at Lake Minnetonka. This year if they "open" the hotel it will be about two weeks earlier than usual. Early June furnishes perfectly pink weather at Lake Minnetonka and Mr. Frost thinks that the bankers will have a fine time. The Tonka Bay hotel is at the terminus of a trolley line from St. Paul and Minneapolis and is the terminus of a boat line which reaches all points on the lake also. Since the bankers met at Tonka Bay two years ago, Big Island, a street railway picnic resort in the middle of the lake, has been opened. It has a big pavilion where it is possible to hold sessions under the best of auspices, in case the bankers decided to desert the main land.

S. E. Cunningham Wins Contest

S. E. Cunningham of the Northwestern National won the adding machine contest at the last meeting of the Minneapolis chapter of the American Institute of Banking. Guy Masters and Charles Shimer of the Northwestern were second and third.

Minneapolis Stock Exchange

At the second session of the new Minneapolis Stock Exchange, St. Anthony Falls bank stock was three points higher than previously bid, or 128. New bids were East Side State 110, and Central State 150. Four new applications for membership have been received.

E. S. Jones Addresses Publicity Club

E. S. Jones, president of the Minneapolis chapter, was speaker at the Wednesday meeting of the Publicity club. He was one of three speakers and the bank clerks consider their recognition at such a public meeting of business men to be highly complimentary. Mr. Jones was one of the special committee appointed to create a loan agency to take the edge off the loan sharks' business.

Fifth Dividend to be Paid

Checks for the fifth dividend are being mailed to the depositors in the Minnesota Title Insurance & Trust Company of Minneapolis by J. D. Shearer, the receiver. This makes a total payment of 70 per cent. The present dividend of 10 per cent amounts to $54,384. The payment made necessary the writing of 2,400 checks.

Third District Group Meeting May 11th

The third district group of the Minnesota Bankers Association have decided to hold their meeting on May 11th at Redwing.

Salary and Chattel Loan Bill

The salary and chattel loan bill which the Minneapolis bank clerks were largely instrumental in having drawn has been introduced in the legislature by senator W. D. Washburn. The bill is backed by organized labor, the Associated Charities, the bank clerks and two semi-public clubs of business men. The measure requires a state license with fee of $15, issued by the public examiner. Interest on loans is limited to 2 per cent a month with a minimum of 25 cents. Fees may be charged up to $1.50 on loans less than $20, $2.50 for loans from $20 up to $100, and $3.50 for loans of $100 and more. The loans must be made for a definite time, not exceeding one year. Banks are exempted from the operation of the law. The bank clerks and associated bodies expect to organize a company under the new law to loan money to worthy persons under

Guaranty in Missouri

The senate in the Missouri legislature has passed a bank deposit guaranty law.

Chicago Bank Clearings for March

Chicago bank clearings in March made a new high record for the local clearing house. The total of $1,202,000,000 of checks exchanged during the month was $34,000,000 larger than the former high record in October, 1907, just before the break of the panic. The March total this year was $172,000,000, or 16.7 per cent larger than that for the corresponding month last year.

The First National of Chicago Increases Dividend Rate to 16 Per Cent

Directors of the First Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago have declared an initial quarterly dividend of 4 per cent on its $2,000,000 of capital stock. Under the trust agreement by which the stock of the First Trust and Savings Bank is held for the stockholders of The First National of Chicago this dividend was mailed out March 31st to the stockholders of the latter institution. The 4 per cent on the $2,000,000 of First Trust stock is equivalent to 1 per cent on the $8,000,000 of the stock of the national bank. That amount will be added to the regular quarterly dividend of 3 per cent on the national bank's stock, making the total disbursement 4 per cent for the quarter, to the holders of First National shares.

With the payment of this dividend The First National passes the $22,000,000.00 mark in the amount of profits disbursed to its stockholders since its organization in 1863. In addition, it has surplus and undivided profits in excess of $12,000,000, which includes the capital and surplus of the First Trust, owned by the stockholders of The First National. The deposits of the two institutions exceed $150,000,000.00.

The Marshall Trust & Savings Company, Plymouth, Ind., has filed notice of increase of capital stock from $25,000 to $40,000.

Trust Company Laws

A handsomer law book never has been issued from the press than is the compilation of laws relating to trust companies of the United States, published by the trust company section of the American Bankers Association. The legal work was in the hands of the celebrated Benjamin J. Downer, of the New York bar, with general supervision by Secretary Babcock of the section. In this work, the states are alphabetically arranged and the classifications under each state heads are similar. When a banker has familiarized himself with the order and statement of the laws of his own state, which naturally he will do first, he will have no difficulty in deciding the laws and customs of other states. This, perhaps, is the very strongest feature of the work, so far as the lay member is concerned. Many compilations of laws are useless in practical life because of the lack of such clearly defined classification.

Trust company banking is but little more than ten years of age and the need for just such a work as the one under present mention has been urgent. It will help wonderfully the efforts now being made throughout the country by the American Bankers Association to secure conservative and uniform legislation in all matters, affecting trust company interests as well as general banking. It is not to be expected that general laws will be given attention under the title of this work—Trust Company Laws—but in all provisions of the general banking law which are specifically or otherwise applicable to trust companies, these laws have been included. All amendments passed by the various legislatures during 1908 have been included so that the book is right up-to-date and has marginal indexes to assist the reader. In addition to these marginal indexes, each state has its own index immediately following the chapter devoted to that state. The general index of the work coming at the conclusion of the book relates only to the pages upon which the laws of any particular state will be found. The detail indexes, as indicated above, follow each chapter. All members of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association, will receive a complimentary copy of this work and additional copies may be had at $3.50 each by application to the secretary of the section.

Recent and Prospective Banking Legislation

This is the third article in which it has been attempted to give in meagre outline, a synopsis of recent and prospective banking legislation. This being a legislative year in two-thirds of the states of the union, the legislatures are giving practically what might be styled "continuous performance" in the way of amending existing laws or of offering entirely new substitutes for the old. One feature of the new Massachusetts law which has attracted a great deal of attention, and some adverse comment, is that which reduces the amount of money which may be loaned to one individual with sureties, but without collateral, from 5 per cent to 1 per cent of the deposits. A provision which meets with much general approval is that which compels corporations desiring to borrow from savings banks, to be audited periodically by responsible auditors, satisfactory to the banking commissioner. This does not give the supervisor any new control over such loans, but it does give the bank a disinterested report upon the affairs of the borrowing corporation. Such a law in Illinois probably would have prevented the Booth fiasco and probably would have saved the banks of Minnesota and other states from the losses incident to the Pillsbury failure. The American Bankers Association has supported this movement in Massachusetts and believes that before very long, it will become a law and a custom in all states. In the case of collateral loans in Massachusetts the banking commissioner has a veto power as to the collateral accepted. When it does not suit him, a certain length of time is given for the substitution of collateral which does meet with his approval. The Massachusetts law also throws additional safeguards about savings deposits in trust companies, just as is now being attempted in Wisconsin and in some other states. The safeguard brings these deposits under the same restrictions as if they were held in savings banks. This, at least, makes the banking law of Massachusetts consistent in that savings deposits in whatever kind of an institution they may be made, are to be kept separate and distinct and invested according to the savings bank law. This splendid banking policy in a modified form has been fully tested out in Michigan, New Hampshire, and Connecticut.

The new Ohio law groups its savings banks, state banks, and trust companies all in one act. While it provides for mutual savings banks the provisions are not given much in detail owing probably to the fact that there is not likely to be many mutual banks established in Ohio. The important parts of the new Ohio law are those which compel all kinds of banks to follow certain provisions in investing the deposits made in the savings departments. This portion of the act made a considerable change in the method of conducting state banks and trust companies which heretofore, as in Illinois, were privileged to conduct their savings departments and commercial departments much alike. Rhode Island passed a law which contains many of the same provisions as that of Ohio, compelling savings deposits of trust companies to be segregated.

The Pennsylvania legislature is likely to pass a newly offered bill requiring "private bankers" to have their business so distinguished on their letter paper, office signs, and in other manners, so that they may not be mistaken for incorporated banks. The "private" banking in Pennsylvania is largely in the hands of foreigners, each proprietor having a system of his own for his own bank. Like most private bankers, the Pennsylvania private banker claims to be responsible to almost no one, and oftentimes, when he gets ready to return to the old country, he takes the bank and all that it includes with him. The new law if passed, will largely put a stop to this style of wild-cat banking in the Keystone commonwealth. There is a bill before the Minnesota legislature which proposes as a further contribution to the general security of banking in that state, the wiping out of the last vestiges of "private banking." The new bill has incorporated in it much that was cut out of the act passed two years ago. That act required every concern doing a banking business to be incorporated and thus come either under state or federal supervision. A further attempt to prevent the use of the word "bank" or "banker" is to be made.

The legislature at Albany, not being satisfied with something like twenty-five new banking acts passed at its last session, has a new bill regulating "private bankers" also and placing them under the jurisdiction of the state banking department. The method to be adopted for insuring responsibility is to compel the "private bankers" to file a sufficient bond with the state superintendent of banking, the bill suggesting a bond of $25,000 and also calls for a cash capital of $25,000, before starting in business. The defalcations recently by Italian bankers in New York City, brought about the present attempt at Albany to prevent further defalcation.

They have a bill in the Missouri legislature preventing mercantile agencies from printing or circulating the ratings of firms and individuals. The theory is that many are injured who, not seeking credits, do not "look after" their ratings and suffer in under statement of their responsibilities. The debate promises to bring out many instances. Newspaper agencies with publications of their own are said to have a way of marking down the circulation ratings of those who do not contribute to the advertising income of the agency publication. Mercantile agencies there may be, of the same kind. It would be hard on the legitimate, however, to class them with such.

The New Jersey legislature has under consideration a bill to increase the taxation of New Jersey corporations "from $50 to $65 per million of capital in excess of five millions." This is done to warm up the revenue receipts which have fallen off rapidly since the fall panic of 1907. The corporation mill of this famous state has been running short hours for the past fifteen months, and it is up to the corporations which enjoy New Jersey franchises to contribute just a little more liberally.

It seems that the travelers' cheques of the American Bankers Association are not to make a clean sweep of that profitable field as was expected. Several large Chicago banks have arranged to issue such cheques payable everywhere abroad that any kind of a cheque is good. Those cheques are issued by the American Bankers Association and drawn upon the Bankers Trust Company of New York, where Fred I. Kent, formerly of this city, is in charge of that department. Of course, there always will be the old-time rival express company doing business at the old stand.

It seems that the California Bankers Association has landed the biggest fish in the puddle for its state convention this year. They will meet at Del Monte, May 27th-28th-29th, and have a promise from President Geo. M. Reynolds, of the American Bankers Association that he will attend. The Californians are preparing to give him a warm welcome.

The whole press of Detroit, without exception, declare that the private banking bill at Lansing was defeated by disreputable lobbying methods. The bill was intended to prevent private bankers from passing themselves off upon the public by using such titles as are commonly used by incorporated banks. One paper calls it "a low dirty trick" and predicts that it will recoil upon those who are guilty. There are many private bankers in Michigan who are honest as bankers and loyal to the state laws. There are some who are neither. Fortunately, Michigan still has a law under which State Superintendent Zimmerman can prosecute any individual or firm in the banking line, unless it publishes the names of every member of such co-partnership or firm. Prosecutions against some of the most flagrant offenders will begin at once.

Both Kansas and Nebraska are busy securing constructions by the attorney-general at Washington on their new state laws guaranteeing deposits. The Kansas law extends its benefits to national banks if they will be permitted to accept them, by permission of the attorney-general at Washington. It probably will require six months to get the scheme into full operation in Kansas and fully as long in Nebraska. The Nebraska law is more nearly like that of Oklahoma than is the Kansas law. The general protective features, however, in both cases, are much alike.

New York City is having an epidemic of savings banks launched by department stores. Chicago suffered from the same disease until a sharp lawyer began a suit to "dissolve a well-known dry goods corporation for doing a business not authorized in its charter." The suit never was tried. They all quit. It can be done in New York, without even mentioning the state banking law. The corporation law does the trick.

New Bank for Haughville

Articles of incorporation were filed Saturday at the office of the secretary of state for the Haughville (Ind.) Bank, a private concern with a capital stock of $10,000. Dr. Elza W. Burris, 3332 West Michigan Street, is the president of the new institution. Thomas C. Dow is vice-president, and John L. Duvall is the cashier. Both Mr. Dow and Mr. Duvall are now connected with the Marion Securities Company in the real estate and loan department. Walter A. Underwood, who is named as assistant cashier, was cashier of the Citizens Bank at Arcadia, Ind., for five years. All of those named are stockholders and directors, but the management of the bank will be largely in the hands of the president and the assistant cashier. The personal responsibility behind the bank is said to be $100,000. The Capital National of Indianapolis will be the correspondent. The new bank will be located at 2659 West Michigan Street, and will be open for business May 3d. The time for opening is postponed on account of the necessity for remodeling the building. The management of the new institution expects to transact considerable business with the laboring people of Haughville and 4 per cent interest will be paid on time deposits. There are several large manufacturing industries in Haughville and a large working population.

The San Francisco Savings Union announces the following changes in its executive staff and board of directors: E. B. Pond, president, resigning, is succeeded by Lovell White, heretofore for upwards of forty years its cashier and secretary. John S. Drum has been elected a vice-president. R. M. Welch succeeds Mr. White as cashier and secretary, A. M. Whittle taking his place as assistant cashier. The number of directors has been increased from nine to eleven, John S. Drum and W. G. Irwin being elected to the two additional seats. The board of directors is now constituted as follows: Lovell White, president; W. C. B. de Fremery, C. O. C. Miller, and John S. Drum, vice-presidents; Wakefield Baker, Jacob Barth, F. H. Beaver, H. C. Breeden, W. G. Irwin, Wm. A. Magee, and John F. Merrill.

The Crown City Bank

The Comptroller of the Currency has issued a certificate authorizing the Crown City National of Pasadena to begin business; capital, $100,000. J. B. Coulston is president; Harry Schlaudeman, vice-president; Albert Mercer, cashier; A. B. Palmer and H. W. Meyer, assistant cashiers.

American National's Financial Letter

In its March financial letter the American National of San Francisco says: "Comparison of bank clearings shows that San Francisco is just about abreast of other large cities in the extent of business recovery. For example, in the week ending March 18th, San Francisco's clearings were 15.7 per cent greater than for the corresponding week of 1908, while the percentage of increase in New York was 15.3, in Chicago 15.8, Boston 17.6, Philadelphia 5.4, and St. Louis 13.9. In bulk of checks cleared, San Francisco ranks seventh among the cities of the United States, having passed Pittsburgh for the first time since 1906.

"Gradual reduction of the loaning rate by savings banks has prompted additional building activity in San Francisco. In one week of this month, mortgage loans to the amount of more than a million dollars were recorded, and architects are busily preparing plans for new structures. Some of the East's cheap money is finding its way here for investment, and the president of one of the largest life insurance companies has been on the ground making a personal investigation of conditions, and finding them more satisfactory than he anticipated."

New York Life to Loan in San Francisco

The coming of Darwin P. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance Company to San Francisco, has excited much speculation among real estate men and borrowers as to the purpose of his visit. The New York Life has an income of $100,000,000 annually, which can be loaned on safe investments. The Armstrong insurance law of New York prevents a life insurance company from erecting its own buildings, consequently the money is available to those who can furnish the proper security. While in the city Kingsley has spent much time with financiers and real estate owners. He has made the statement that the company desires to have an accurate report upon the situation out here, and upon that report will depend further action by the company.

The Bank of Ireland

The Bank of Ireland has been organized in Oakland. Ed. Cavanaugh, H. C. Montgomery, and N. B. Greensfelder are promoters.

The Peoples Bank

The Peoples Bank of Sacramento is to erect a new bank building.

The First National of Marshalltown, Ia., recently opened for business in its new building.

Pittsburgh Chapter Hears an Address on Administrative Features of the National Banking Laws, by C. H. Treat

Charles H. Treat, United States Treasurer, made an important address recently before 100 members of the Pittsburgh Chapter of the American Institute of Banking in the lecture hall of Carnegie Institute. His subject was "Some Administrative Features of the National Banking Laws, with Suggested Amendments." J. S. Kuhn, president of the First National, introduced Mr. Treat.

The speaker alluded to the pleasant acquaintances formed with his auditors at Atlantic City in 1906, and admonished the young men to study hard the great banking problems certain to arise in the next two years. Then he defended in detail the national banking law of Secretary Chase, answering the most familiar criticisms by citing facts that expose their fallacies.

The most valuable branch of the address was, of course, that suggesting amendments to the present law. His views in part are:

His Leading Suggestion

I suggest a national clearing house bank, to be owned by the banks—not by any one bank or by the Government—but simply a bank under the present national banking system. Its capital should be from two hundred to five hundred million dollars, and the bank should be allowed to issue national bank currency. It should be a government depository and also be a reserve agent for all the banks doing business with it. It might be particularly a reserve agent for the three central reserve cities.

It should have the right to buy and sell foreign exchange and the privilege to rediscount the bankable paper of its shareholders at a rate of interest not exceeding 4 per cent.

The bank should have further expansion privileges, and in time of commercial need the Secretary of the Treasury should be authorized to receive as collateral security the paper discounted by the national clearing house bank.

This clearing house bank would also furnish a market for the balances of urban banks, to be invested in commercial paper at convenient seasons during the year. It would also give an opportunity for the city banks to invest their money more in commercial paper and less on the stock exchange.

Advantage of Plan

This would also be a more simple way for each bank to get a rediscount of its paper and a supply of currency better than under the arrangement of the Aldrich-Vreeland bill, where one bank guarantees for all and all for one. This method would give elasticity to our credits, as well as an ample supply of currency, and there would be no scarcities or famines in currency thereafter.

I would not give the national clearing house bank the privilege to establish branch banks for the reason that the national banks of small capital, of $25,000 or so, have proved a great success.

As a very important amendment to the national banking system I would propose that all the present national bank notes be retired, and that the government bonds, on which the circulation is based, should be redeemed at 105—a price that would fairly cover the average cost that has been paid by the banks—for I believe the Government should not exact anything from the public for which it does not give an adequate return.

Calls Them Banking Bonds

This issue of bonds by the Government at 50 years I would have known as "Banking Bonds," with interest at 2 per cent—to be sold always at par, neither above nor below—and be redeemed at the option of the holder. This would do away with the prevailing practice of speculating in Government bonds.

I would also do away with the multiplicity of names of so many, many banks, and the location—by state or county. I would substitute a uniform currency—to be known as United States Bank Currency—comprising the denominations of 1s, 2s, 5s, 10s, 20s, 50s, 100s, 500s, and 1,000s.

The simplicity of direct government issue notes to the banks would be a great saving in the expense of the redemption agency, to the amount of over 40 per cent of the present cost, and would also facilitate a more speedy redemption.

This United States bank currency, with gold certificates, I would have constitute the entire paper currency of the country—for the greenbacks would be retired so many millions per annum—and also the silver certificates—at a rate of, say $50,000,000 per annum, so that in a period of 11 years they would all be supplanted.

The popular idea has been that a central bank must be patterned after the old United States Bank. We have traveled a long ways in advancement since that era. We do not need branch banks because we do not need urban credit to help suburban need. The suburban trade of the country is gathering enormous amounts of deposits.

Mr. Kuhn entertained the distinguished visitor during his stay in the city. At the Duquesne Club Mr. Treat said he had met many men who had helped to make Pittsburgh and that he hoped the young men present at the meeting would continue to build the city.

San Francisco Chapter Election

San Francisco Chapter, American Institute of Banking, will hold its annual election on Tuesday, May 18th. Nomination night has been set for April 13th. Under the new constitution nominations must be made not less than 30 days prior to the election. Four officers, ten governors, and 17 delegates are to be chosen. President Harry Clapp positively declines to again be a candidate, as he has served two terms as president. George L. Woolrich, of the Wells Fargo Nevada National, and William A. Day, of the Mechanics Savings Bank, are favorably mentioned for the first place on the ticket.

Philadelphia Chapter Banquet Enjoyed

The Philadelphia Chapter of the American Institute of Banking held its annual dinner at the Hotel Walton on Saturday night. Joseph Moore, Jr., president of the National Bank of the Northern Liberties, acted as toastmaster. A feature of the menu was moose steaks, furnished by Thomas Martindale. The banquet was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Detroit Chapter News

The Detroit Chapter annual ball will be held Wednesday evening, April 21st, at Strassburg's Academy.

After much thought and discussion the part that the Detroit Chapter is to take in the making of the Institute Text Book, has at last been decided upon.

The officers after considering the matter carefully, have agreed to furnish material for Chapters 9 and 19, "Due from U. S. Treasurer" and "Notes and Bills Discounted."

In order to get as full a representation as possible of the members to write papers on these subjects, the board of governors decided at a recent meeting to offer a cash prize of $20 for the best paper on each subject, provided that not less than three papers on each subject be offered. That is, if three papers were offered on chapter nine and only two on nineteen the best paper on nine would receive the prize of $20.00, and no prize would be given for nineteen. If three papers are written on each subject, the best of each class will receive $20.00. The only restrictions imposed are:

1st. Papers must be written by chapter members.

2d. Papers must be in the hands of the committee by April 30th.

In accepting the resignation of Arthur Schiedel from the editorship of the Detroit Chapter News, there passes from the ranks one of the most promising young bank men in Detroit. Wm. T. McFawn is Mr. Schiedel's successor.

The Board of Governors of Detroit Chapter announce that the sixth annual moonlight excursion will be given Thursday, July 8th on the Steamer Columbia as usual.

Detroit Chapter will have a good representation at the A. I. B. convention at Seattle.

Los Angeles Chapter News

By H. C. HURST.

The Los Angeles Chapter Senate continues to be the one big drawing card. For an infant of five weeks it is a very husky child, and it is growing like a presidential boom. The membership is heading straight for the seventies, and the secretary has had to paste a strip of paper as long as a round-trip railroad ticket to the original roll to accommodate the new names.

The senate is in session every second and fourth Tuesday evening of each month, and on these evenings you will find the members in their places, each one having obeyed the new commandment which says, "Get that happy look." Motions, appeals, questions of privilege, reports, and amendments fly about as thick as mosquitos in a New Jersey swamp, and no question is too big for them to light upon.

The first bill brought before the body was one providing for four new battleships of 26,000 tons each, cost not to exceed thirty-eight millions of dollars. As might be expected there was a whirlwind of debate on this vital topic, the urgent need of an increased navy being offset by the fact of an annual and growing deficit in the treasury of the United States.

Senators Barrere, Civile, Prior, and Converse led the fight for the larger navy, while Senators Seidel, Lutz, Jacobus, Greene, and Ostrom headed the opposition. After a long and heated debate the motion was tabled, but it would not stay downed. A motion to take it from the table soon placed it once more before the body, when it was voted on and lost by the narrow margin of 17 to 22.

It is a fact dark with suspicion that the senators who knifed this bill were without exception from the interior states, states having no coast line in need of protection. It is also whispered about the lobbies that failure to secure an appropriation for widening a creek back in Senator Greene's dear Arkansas added one spiteful vote to the negative side of the naval bill.

Other bills that have passed their second reading and will soon be up for final debate are: An act providing for a national highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to be known as the Roosevelt Drive; an act amending the constitution of the United States as it applies to elections; and an act relating to the taxation of national banks, providing that they pay annually to the Treasurer of the United States a tax of one per cent of their capital, surplus, and undivided profits.

The president, George Greene, in the midst of all the turmoil of a busy session, keeps delightfully cool, confident, and serene. But he carries a big stick, and wields it with vigor against all malefactors and undesirable citizens who attempt to wind any red tape about the progress of business.

Say, you, don't worry about the senate! Watch it grow! At every session everything goes with a rush, except the motion to adjourn. When you are sitting in the senate it seems as if you just don't want to ever go home.

We're starting out to make our chapter membership 500. No reason why we shouldn't. If you're a chapter man, go after some fellow who isn't, and show him he should be. If you're not a chapter man, stop and think what the advantages are in being one, and then—sign an application.

Los Angeles chapter's motto: "Come in without knocking and stay in under the same conditions."

Bankers' Rifle Clubs in London

That the rise of the Rifle Club movement during the past few years has not been neglected in the city is amply evident, as the magnificent building—The Rifle and Revolver Club—erected about six years ago by the generosity of Col. R. W. Inglis proves. This club house, situate in the heart of the city, is now the rendezvous of the rifle clubs of nearly all the leading city institutions, and is acknowledged to be one of the most complete in the matter of equipment for the development of both rifle and revolver shooting in the Kingdom.

Practically all the clearing banks and also a combination of the Scottish banks in London have now formed clubs, with the most cordial co-operation of their respective directors and managers, and have their headquarters at the Rifle and Revolver Club. The ranges are open between the months of October and April inclusive, and a series of most interesting matches and competitions are arranged by the several banks. The leading feature, however, is the competition for the handsome challenge cup, presented to the clearing banks by Col. Inglis in 1907, and won in that year by the team of four entered by Messrs. Robarts, Lubbock & Company's Rifle Club. Last year under altered conditions, i. e., teams of six, the Capital & Counties Bank Rifle Club were the victors, being closely followed by the London City & Midland Bank Rifle Club, only five points behind. The interest taken in this event is shown by thirteen banks having competed last year. The conditions for this year's shoot are not yet finally completed, beyond the fact that it will be decided early in April.

The trustees of the Rifle and Revolver Club recently (from February 1 to 6) promoted a prize meeting open to all members now using this club house. The members of the bank clubs were well to the fore. There were a large number of entries for the various competitions, drawn from the Stock Exchange, Insurance Company, Baltic, Corn Exchange, and other city clubs, in addition to the banks, and among all this array of talent the banking representatives were able to annex four first prizes, the fifth going to the Insurance Company Rifle Club.

Michigan Banking News

By W. T. FOSTER.

The Kalamazoo Savings Bank will increase its capital stock from $50,000 to $100,000.

Private Bank to Become a State Institution

The stockholders of the proposed state bank at Galesburg to succeed the private institution of Dunn & Clapp, recently met and elected the following officers: Sidney Dunn, president; T. S. Clapp, vice-president; Carl Clapp, cashier. Directors are, including officers: H. A. Steward, Roy Spiers, C. G. Curtis, and I. N. Carson.

M. B. A. Bill Altered with Its Knowledge

The Michigan Bankers Association has discovered what the nature of the private bankers' bill was, that was killed in the house a few days ago. It was none other than the bill submitted to the legislature by the association, but altered in one of its most material points, by the house committee on banking, without knowledge or consent of the officers of the association.

When the Michigan bankers submitted the bill, it contained the provision that the private banker shall not use any name in his business that will give the public the impression that his is a regular state banking house. It did not prohibit the use of the word "bank" in the name.

The house committee, however, took it on itself to so alter the bill that the private banker was prohibited from using the word "bank" under any circumstances. The bill was killed, because both the private bankers and the association of officers were opposed to it. At first the private bankers thought the association was trying to "put one over" on them, especially after they had reached an amicable agreement on the bill as submitted by the association. They have since learned that the change was made without the knowledge of the association, and a new bill will be drafted along the lines of the first one submitted.

The Peoples State Savings Bank

The Peoples State Savings Bank, of Kalkaska, has filed articles of organization. Capital is $20,000.

Detroit Corporations

Detroit corporations will distribute about one-half million dollars in dividends this month.

The amount to be distributed by eight banks and three trust companies is $197,000. Three industrial corporations with a total distribution of $253,500 bring the grand total to $450,500.

In addition to these quarterly dividends, miscellaneous concerns will pay dividends sufficient to bring the total in the close neighborhood of $500,000.

The Peninsular Savings Bank

Contracts have been let for the complete remodelling of the first floor and basement of the Peninsular Savings Bank, of Detroit. The offices will be finished in white marble and bronze, and will be the equal of anything in the city. In the rearrangement of the offices on the first floor, a new teller will be appointed, and promotion for one of the assistants is in prospect. An elaborate directors' room will be fitted up in the basement of the building.

A. Prosser Elected Cashier

A. Prosser is reported cashier of the G. J. Baetcke & Co., bankers at Brighton.

Mortgage Taxation Bill

L. E. Wise, president of the Detroit Real Estate Board, appeared at a hearing before a senate committee to boost the MacKay mortgage taxation bill. There are several mortgage tax bills before the legislature divided into two main classes. One class aims to abolish mortgage taxation altogether, the other to impose a tax that can be invariably collected.

The MacKay bill, the one favored by the Detroit real estate men, is modeled after the New York law. If enacted, it will call for payment of the tax by the mortgage holder at the moment of filing the bill. The tax is to be one-half of one per cent, based on the sum of the mortgage, irrespective of the time duration of the indenture. This will be the sole tax levied on mortgages. In case of renewal, as one proposition in connection with this bill goes, the tax must be paid gain.

The Lenawee County Savings Bank

Fred E. Ashe has been appointed assistant cashier of the Lenawee County Savings Bank, of Adrian.

The Iron City Trust Company Affairs

It is stated that in the near future stockholders of the closed Iron City Trust Company of Pittsburgh, will receive a dividend of $52 a share. This will be paid in cash or in bonds of the Oklahoma Railway Company. Those who wish it can receive two-thirds in bonds and one-third in cash. Receiver Abbott says that there is on hand about $350,000 available for distribution, and among the assets are $738,000 par value 5 per cent 30-year gold bonds of the Oklahoma Railway Company.

The State Bank of Zion

A new bank building is to be erected for the State Bank of Zion, Ill.

New Bank for Maxwell City

By the latter part of this month Maxwell City, Mexico, will have a good, strong bank, ably officered, and with plenty of capital. Work on the organization is now under way, and so far have plans progressed that a temporary building is now being erected to house the new institution. It is the purpose of the organizers of the bank to build a fine brick structure as soon as the brick can be secured, and to make the bank worthy of the town. There is a great deal of banking business from Maxwell that is being done in Raton and other nearby places, that naturally belongs here. It is to take care of this home business that the new bank is organized.

A meeting of the stockholders of the bank will be held early next week, at which time officers for the first year will be elected.

DAVENPORT SAVINGS BANK BUILDING
Davenport, Iowa

The Davenport Savings Bank

The Davenport Savings Bank, of Davenport, Iowa, is now located in its own beautiful banking home. The exterior and interior of the building is all that could be desired. The Davenport Savings Bank has been steadily increasing in growth until to-day it has more than $3,600,000 in deposits. It has a capital of $300,000 and a surplus of $290,000. The results obtained have been largely due to the high character of the officers of the bank. The officers are: John F. Dow, president; Louis Haller, vice-president; Henry C. Struck, cashier; Otto Ladenberger, teller.

Cashier Henry C. Struck, who has been with the Davenport Savings Bank for a number of years, is very proud of the bank's new and beautiful home.

The Citizens Trust and Savings Bank

A new bank building is to be erected by the Citizens Trust and Savings Bank of Aberdeen, S. D.

Three "First" Banking Institutions

A recent compilation of banks and trust companies with deposits of $10,000,000 and over, shows that there are in the United States 151 such institutions out of the twenty thousand banks and trust companies in the country. Comparing the gains in deposits since 1900, the First National, of Boston, is found to stand at the head of the list, with percentage of increase of 2,411.

It is a singularity that the three banks that show the greatest gains in deposits since 1900, are all named "First." These are the First National of Cleveland, whose deposits in eight years since 1900 grew from $2,178,000 to $26,365,000, a gain of $24,187,000 or 1,111 per cent; the First Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, which has made a similar gain since December, 1903, the date of its statement, or from $2,344,000 to $34,915,000, gain of $32,571,000 or 1,390 per cent; and the First National of Boston, which shows a gain since December, 1900, from $2,184,000 to $54,835,000, an increase of $52,651,000, or 2,411 per cent.

Nothing else in the banking line approaches these gains of these three "First" banking institutions.

Justin Huntly McCarthy's New Novel

"The Duke's Motto" and "If I Were King" were but the forerunners of Justin Huntly McCarthy's "The Gorgeous Borgia" a tale of Roman times and characters. It is a romantic and highly dramatic story, woven around the career of Caesar Borgia, the scourge and terror of Rome in the fifteenth century, whose name has passed into history as a synonym of monstrous cruelty.

In Mr. McCarthy's story, Caesar Borgia plays in disguise, a false game of love. He finds in his rambles a charming Roman maiden beautiful as a pagan and innocent as a saint. The girl, in her tender, ignorant beauty, is readily deceived, and learns to adore him.

Herself of the rival house of Orsini, she is elected to slay the tyrant, not dreaming that he is her lover. An accident separates the two in one of their meetings, and the tyrant bends every power in Rome to find her. She is finally brought to him, and, still not knowing his identity, tells him that she has come to kill the Borgia. In a scene wild with his passion for her he reveals himself. She fights the passion, but is overcome.

Thereafter the girl is willingly his slave, bewitched by his mastery over her. Then Borgia, wearying, decides to give her back to her people. They have been furious at her treachery, and Caesar knows he is giving her to death. By aid of a Borgia enemy she is saved, and at the same time the tyrant's lucky star begins to set.

As he is beset by his enemies, the girl returns to warn him to flee. She has taken the vows of the church, and still Caesar would attempt to defile her, when at the moment his enemies break in to kill him, and the last scene is his assassination. There is fire and fury from beginning to end—a startling display of imaginative literary art.

More Than Four Per Cent Bad Business Policy

A. M. Young, state bank commissioner, of Oklahoma, has refused the petition of state bankers asking permission to pay more than 4 per cent for time deposits. State bankers say that the national banks are paying from 5 to 7 per cent. Young says his investigations satisfy him that national banks are paying such per cents, but he considers more than 4 per cent bad business policy.

St. Louisans Plan New Gotham Skyscraper

Samuel Bowman, of Samuel Bowman & Co., in connection with other St. Louisans, is to erect in New York City a skyscraper that will surpass in cost and size the Bryant Building, which is to be erected with St. Louis capital at the northwest corner of Nassau and Liberty streets, New York.

"The building is to be located in the heart of the financial section of Manhattan," said Mr. Bowman. "The site has been contracted for and will cost about $2,000,000, while the building, which will probably be thirty-four stories high, will cost between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000. I am not at liberty just now to state its exact location, but it is one of the most desirable sites in the city. The structure will be just as handsome as the Bryant and will be larger. The Bryant site cost $1,200,000, and the structure will cost $1,000,000. The lower floors of the building I am now promoting will be occupied by a banking company, and it is expected that the larger portion of the structure will be taken by financial concerns.

pursue the same policy in all things as inaugurated by the Houston National.

The Bankers Are in Line

Business men in Kansas City other than the merchants, who expect to ship their merchandise by way of the Missouri River, are advocating the organization of a transportation company with sufficient capital to assure river navigation. Almost without exception, the bankers are of the opinion that in the navigation of the Missouri lies the future of the city.

Bankers Oppose Guaranty Law

One hundred national bankers of Kansas met in Topeka last Friday to discuss the new Kansas bank guaranty law. The sentiment is decidedly hostile to the law, and the disposition is to make no effort to have the order of the government refusing national banks permission to participate in the guaranty plan revoked. Conferences have been held with Governor Stubbs and Bank Commissioner Doley with reference to the measure, and the bankers were requested to take no action

The Cureton Bank Bill

For the purpose of urging the passage of the Cureton bank bill, the following letter has been sent to each of the senators and representatives at Austin, Tex.:

"Dear Sir: You have heard the testimony of bankers, who said they saw the panic of 1907 coming for more than two years, yet they made no effort whatever to inform the people or to prepare the people for the coming storm. They deliberately shipped their money to New York in the face of the fact that they saw a financial storm brewing. They shipped their money to New York, then deliberately locked up the people's money and refused to pay checks upon demand. They deliberately tied up the people's money; they deliberately destroyed markets for the time being, and had it not been for the organization of the people the country would have been plunged into bankruptcy.

"The farmers of Texas want the Cureton bank bill as it is, without amendment. It will give protection to the depositor and yield protection to the country.

"They appeal to you to pass this bill, and the great common people of Texas will rise up and call you blessed."

The letter is signed by D. J. Neill, president of the Texas Farmers Union; C. Smith, secretary-treasurer; Joe E. Edmondson, general organizer and lecturer.

New York Banking and News Letter

Hepburn on Mexican Securities

President A. Barton Hepburn, of the Chase National of New York City, now on a visit to Mexico, says: "Mexican securities stand well in the United States, and we are now the largest holders of them. Mexican railroad securities, particularly since the merger, are very popular. I know, through the great amount that our bank handles, something of the stream of American money that is constantly pouring into Mexico, not only to pay for properties, but for pay rolls, improvements, and developments, and this money will continue to flow South. I have been greatly impressed with the potential wealth of this country, and I think more money will come every year for agricultural development. Heretofore the greater part of American capital has been devoted to mining, but the richness of the soil and the attractions of the tropical and semitropical climate will, I am sure, attract more and more Americans to that branch of investment.

J. F. Allen & Co.

One of the new brokerage houses established recently in the financial district is the firm of J. F. Allen & Co. J. F. Allen, the head of the firm, is a man of wide experience, and was formerly identified with the Oriental Bank and later with the Seaboard National. Mr. Allen is regarded as an excellent authority upon financial affairs, and it may be noted in this connection that at the Seattle tri-state convention this summer, Mr. Vanderlip, of the National City Bank, and Mr. Allen are scheduled to represent the East and to make addresses on topics which will be announced later on.

J. F. Allen & Co. propose to carry on a general banking and brokerage business, handling high-grade investment securities, such as bank, trust company, railroad, and industrial stocks and bonds. They are regarded as being exceedingly strong from a financial point of view, and there is not the least doubt but they will make a complete success of the work they have taken in hand.

Disposes of Last Installments

The action of the directors of the Knickerbocker Trust Company in authorizing the payment of the thirteenth and fourteenth installments of 12½ per cent each on the certificates of deposit on April 22d, disposes of the last installments due under the plan of resumption.

When the Knickerbocker Trust Company reopened on March 26, 1908, there was outstanding about $25,000,000 of these certificates of deposit. The plan was to pay them off within two years and five months. With the final payment on April 22d of the thirteenth and fourteenth installments, amounting to $6,040,000, the entire amount will have been paid off within thirteen months.

Wisconsin Bankers Association News

It is proposed that instead of the usual annual meeting of the Wisconsin Bankers Association held in Milwaukee, that the Steamer Carolina of the Goodrich Transit Company, be engaged for an excursion to the Mackinac Islands and back, and the convention be held on the boat during this trip.

The itinerary would be as follows: Friday, June 25th. Leave Milwaukee in the evening, Saturday, June 26th. Arrive at Green Bay in the morning (members from the northern part of the state can board the boat here if desired). Will leave Green Bay in the afternoon, Sunday, June 27th. Arrive at Mackinac Island—spend the day sight seeing. Leave in the evening, Monday, June 28th. Arrive at Green Bay at noon (members who came on board here would land for the journey home). Leave in the evening, Tuesday, June 29th. Arrive at Milwaukee in the morning.

If satisfactory arrangements can be made, another day may be included by stopping at Sault Ste. Marie. The rate will be about $14.00 for the round trip, including berth, meals extra. Should the trip to the "Soo" be added it may be a little more. In order that we may have an expression of your opinion regarding this proposition, kindly fill out the blanks on the enclosed card and mail same to the undersigned at once.—M. A. Graettinger, Secretary.

Seeking L. S. Baker

New York, March 29.—Police Inspector McCafferty, according to an announcement published here, has detailed detectives to search for Lora S. Baker, formerly cashier of the Northern National of Big Rapids, Mich., a man who has been legally dead for fifteen years.

The search, it is said, has been made at the instance of Frank Chickering of Big Rapids, who has extensive lumber interests in Michigan. Chickering says Baker is alive and for several months has been associated with a firm of Wall Street brokers under the alias Kaber La Toras, his real name with the letters transposed. Chickering told Inspector McCafferty that it was necessary for him to find Baker in order to clear up the title to timber lands valued at $3,000,000.

The case is a strange one. After Baker's bank failed he came to New York. In February, 1894, after he had been here but a few days, word was sent to his family that he had died in Bellevue hospital as the result of injuries received in an encounter with highwaymen. A body was sent home to Big Rapids, and this, it is stated, was identified as that of Baker by his wife and children.

Bank's Liability Decision

In the case of The Kepitigalla Rubber Estates, Limited, vs. The National Bank of India, Limited, recently decided by the Commercial Court of the King's Bench Division, England, the plaintiff company brought suit to recover £2,400 paid by the defendant as the company's banker without its authority. The amount in question was obtained by the secretary of the company by forging in the names of his employers' checks which the bank cashed. By agreement with the bank all the company's checks had to bear the signatures of two directors and the secretary. One check was actually signed by one director and was originally made payable to Messrs. Lloyds "or order," crossed, and marked "not negotiable." "Order" was altered by the secretary to "bearer," and he added the second director's name and initials from two rubber stamps. He did not add the first director's initials to the alteration, but in spite of this omission the check was cashed by the bank. All the other checks bore two forged signatures. The court (Bray, J.) decided against the bank.

Bank Robbers Secure $1,000

The safe of the Abraham Bank at Watson, Illinois, was blown open early on Friday last by two men and $1,000 was secured. The robbers did their work in a remarkably quick time and escaped in a buggy before any one realized what had happened. Besides the $1,000, the robbers also got $5,000 worth of certificates, but none of these was signed and they will be useless. When the large charge of nitroglycerin was exploded, the terrific force blew out the north end of the large frame building in which the bank was located.

Banking News, Milwaukee—Wisconsin District

The appointment of Charles B. Norton, general agent at Chicago of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee, and at one time clerk in the local office of the company, as assistant secretary of the treasury, has been confirmed by the senate. Mr. Norton came to Milwaukee at the age of 15 from Burlington, Wis., his birthplace, and was employed at the office of the Northwestern Company for two years. He then went to Chicago and worked in the Chicago office, becoming general agent four years ago.

Another Bank for Milwaukee

The establishment of another bank in the northern portion of Milwaukee is asked for by the Northside Civic League. Alfred Klingelhofer, secretary of the league, expresses the opinion that the rapid growth of the business portion of the district fully warrants the establishing of another banking institution.

"The savings business alone to be gained in this portion of the city would make it well worth the bank's while," declared Mr. Klingelhofer.

Senator Stephenson in Marinette for a Few Days

Senator Isaac Stephenson, accompanied by his daughter, arrived in Marinette from Washington Saturday night, both in good health. The senator said he was called home by important business matters which require his attention at this time of the year.

He says the senate can do little with the tariff bill until the consideration of it in the house has been finished, so there is practically nothing to do in that body at present except to confirm an occasional appointment of the President.

To Hear Bankers April 7th at Madison

Bankers will invade Madison April 7th. The joint committee on taxation has set for hearing on that day the bill introduced in the assembly by Frank Smith and the one in the senate by James H. Stout, relating to the taxation of bank stock. This question has been a problem before the state for a number of years and comes up biennially before the legislature for solution. The proposed law provides that in assessing the shares of bank stock, the assessment and taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is made or assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the state. The bill also provides for the manner of ascertaining the value of the shares of stock in each banking institution.

Plan State Wide Boom

William McLaren, Milwaukee member of the state fair board, called at the headquarters of the homecoming celebration committee to suggest that all the cities and towns in Wisconsin be organized to boom the celebration. He explained that this could be done by appointing one former Milwaukee man in each municipality as special representative of the homecoming. This representative will be asked to work for his former home city among his neighbors and friends to bring them here.

Helping the Boys

A. C. McClurg & Co. of this city has published the second series of "Making the Most of Ourselves" by Calvin Dill Wilson. The book consists of talks for young people, in about fifty short, crisp essays. The talks were directed mainly to young people, by Dr. Wilson, in an attempt to increase their ambition for self development. The suggestions are practical rather than theoretical. When in doubt about what book to buy for a son or daughter buy "Making the Most of Ourselves." It is a mental stimulant, a character builder. The advice is as good and as clean as the English is pure and simple.

The Peoples National

The credit of the Peoples National of Pittsburgh, at the clearing house one day last week, amounted to $2,056,000, the record. The next highest mark was made some time ago, when one bank had a credit of $1,500,000. The increase in the figures given out at the clearing house for that day showed a substantial gain over last week and over the same day for last year.

Protests Against Taxation Bills

The board of directors of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce has also adopted a protest against two bills now pending before the legislature, both of which are under consideration at Harrisburg by the committee on ways and means. One, which was introduced by Representative Densmore, provides for doubling the tax on capital stock—increasing it from 5 mills to 10 mills; the other, introduced by Representative Dennison, imposes an 8-mill tax on the capital stock of manufacturing corporations. These bills were brought to the attention of the chamber by the trade league of Philadelphia, which is fighting both measures.

The Guarantee Title and Trust Company

The Guarantee Title and Trust Company of Pittsburgh has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent.

Record Breaker Year Expected

The Bankers & Bank Clerks Mutual Benefit Association, of which Alexander Dunbar of the Guarantee Title & Trust Co. of Pittsburgh, was recently elected president has so far this year increased its membership by adding 47 new members and Mr. Dunbar said that the prospects for the year are excellent and will probably be a record breaker. A bulletin issued this month shows that the association has just closed its thirty-fifth year and has a reserve of $77,000. It pays no salaries, has over 1,200 members and has paid $127,000 in death benefits.

H. P. Taylor & Co.

H. P. Taylor & Co. report sales of $8,000 City of Allegheny water 4 per cent bonds, maturing in 1923, and $3,000 maturing in 1914, and $3,000 southern traction 5 per cent bonds.

Banking Notes

W. Robert J. Eberhardt has been elected a member of the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange.

The Duquesne National of Pittsburgh has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 3 per cent.

Directors of the United States National of Pittsburgh have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent.

Directors of the Western Savings & Deposit Bank of Pittsburgh have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent.

Directors of the Washington National of Pittsburgh have declared a quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent.

Directors of the Diamond National of Pittsburgh have declared the regular quarterly dividend of 5 per cent.

The First National of Pittsburgh has resources in excess of 24,000,000. It has bank balances in foreign cities.

Scene Laid in the Philippines

A new novel by Rowland Thomas lays its plot in the Philippines. His "Fagan" was the $3,000 prize offered by a New York publication, and "The Little Gods" probably is a better story and twice as digestible. The whole book teems with vivid portrayals of the lives of real men and women in a world as far removed from ours in faith and ideals as it is in landscapes and distance, and the author gives the spirit, the atmosphere and the tang of Philippine Island life and of the American army stationed there, with the same realism that made Kipling's stories of India world-famous.

Published by Little, Brown & Co. Boston, at $1.50.

The Skagit Valley Bank of Bellingham, Wash., was recently destroyed by fire.

Des Moines, April 1.—Much of the time of the Iowa legislature was taken up the past ten days in discussion of measures of particular interest to bankers. When the smoke had rolled away, the house of representatives had passed a bill completely revising the banking laws of Iowa placing state and savings banks on exactly the same footing and had passed a bill to tax state and savings banks on the same basis as are national banks. The house had also killed the Darrah bill to guarantee bank deposits by the small majority of six votes. The bill to force the putting of public funds at interest at 2 per cent on 90 per cent of daily deposits passed both houses and went to the governor. The senate passed the Seeley bill doing away with the taxation in Iowa of foreign corporations' stock held by Iowans, and defeated the bill to tax railroad terminals and the Fitchpatrick bill to require corporations to make annual reports to the state and pay each year a filing fee. The house of representatives passed the Ward bill permitting the state treasurer to deposit the state funds in other than Des Moines banks and killed the senate bill for a direct inheritance tax. A bill authorizing the city of Des Moines to increase its legal indebtedness so as to permit the sale of its $350,000 city hall bonds was introduced, and another bill was introduced to permit school bonds to run for twenty years if the amount issued exceeds $400,000. They now run but ten years.

Iowa Kills Bank Guaranty Bill

The house voted down the state guaranty of bank deposits bill by a vote of 50 to 44. It provided for an absolute guaranty by the state.

Going the Anamosa Bank One Better

Last week I told of how the First National at Anamosa is offering prizes for good roads making. But the Cedar Falls National is going the Anamosa institution one better by offering bounties on babies. The bank is advertising to give a dollar to each baby born in any township surrounding Cedar Falls during the year 1909. Within two months after the baby arrives, this period being given the parents in which to select a name, the parents must open with the bank an account of $1 in the baby's name. To this the bank adds $1 to the amount, gives the parents a passbook for the baby and a recording safe. The bank specifies that the dollar deposited and the additional dollar given by the bank must be left on deposit for one year before they can be withdrawn.

Des Moines Clearing House Association

A movement is gaining in popularity among members of the Des Moines Clearing House Association to hire a special bank inspector for the Des Moines institutions. It is argued that the Des Moines institutions have reached a stage of advancement which makes them financially able to thus provide for their own examinations which would not only give the public more confidence—though that is not needed—and would at the same time serve to bring the bankers closer together, and thus add to the advantages of belonging to the clearing house association. Some of the Des Moines bankers are studying the system as it works in Chicago and elsewhere, and they believe that the time will soon come when Des Moines will be similarly caring for her banks.

Group Six Chairman Attacked

It is not generally known that S. M. Leach, of Adel, chairman of Group Six, I. B. A., last year, came near to a fatal ending when attacked by a highwayman some fifteen years ago. The robber pointed a revolver at the banker's head and asked for his money. When Mr. Leach showed fight the robber fired and the bullet caught the banker in the arm. The robber ran and concealed himself in a barn. A crowd gathered, the barn was fired, and when the bandit ran, he was literally riddled with buckshot. Mr. Leach carries the scar on his arm, but seldom feels any discomfort from it.

Bradley Bank Robber Dead

Charles Stevens, formerly of Eldon, and who planned the robbery of the Bradley Bank at Eldon in 1897, has just died in Michigan, much to the surprise of his wife and the folks at Eldon who thought he had been dead for more than seven years. Stevens was city marshal of Eldon when he planned the robbery, and he had called in a bunch of Chicago cracksmen to help him do the job. Afterwards he said that they had refused to divide with him, and he confessed the entire transaction, all going to the penitentiary. Stevens served two and one-half years and returned to Eldon where he was so snubbed that he left and was reported to have suicided in Chicago. Hence the news of his death in Michigan a few days ago caused considerable talk in Iowa. The robbery of the Bradley bank and the confession of Stevens afterwards were much discussed topics in Iowa a few years ago.

No Successor Named

Up at Northwood, there is much speculation as to who will take the place as cashier of the First National, succeeding N. E. Haugen, recently named national bank examiner. Mr. Haugen is connected with four banks, the First National, of Northwood, the Northwood Savings, the Kensett Bank, and the Bank of Mahomen, Minn. The directors of these various institutions have held meetings, but the successor to the new bank examiner has not yet been named.

The Cedar Rapids National

The Cedar Rapids National, which was organized in 1887, has in the twenty-two years of its existence regularly paid dividends to its shareholders, and in addition has accumulated a surplus and undivided profit account of almost $200,000. The Cedar Rapids National is housed in one of the prettiest banking homes in the Middle West. The half-tone on the opposite page is an interior view of the Cedar Rapids National.

The bank building covers a ground area of 60 feet on Second Avenue by 140 feet on Third Street. The banking rooms proper occupy a space on the first floor 60x80 feet and have two entrances, the main entrance on Second Avenue directly opposite and facing the United States court house and postoffice building now under process of construction and an entrance on Third Street, which is also the main building entrance for the office rooms above. Both entrances are of the Roman Ionic order of architecture and the materials

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., April 1.—Amendments to the state banking laws, enacted as an emergency measure by the legislature, which adjourned its biennial sessions a few days ago, are satisfactory to the bankers in Spokane and throughout eastern Washington, in that the provisions governing state and foreign institutions are more stringent, preventing also the formation of branch banks in the future. Branch banks in existence must increase their capital stock to make it equal the rating, which is given as follows: Towns of 1,000 population, minimum capital $10,000; 2,000, $15,000; 3,000, $25,000; 5,000, $30,000; 10,000, $50,000; 25,000, $75,000; and 50,000 or more, $100,000. This does not apply to banks already established. However, the capital of all banks organized prior to June 12, 1907, must be paid in full within five months. Other provisions are:

Banks are prohibited from purchasing their own capital stock and no bank may purchase or subscribe for the stock of any other bank.

All banks must add one-tenth of their semi-annual dividends to their surplus until such surplus is equal to 20 per cent of the bank's capital stock. Accrued and uncollected interest can not be entered by a bank in its account or distributed as earnings.

State banks are prohibited from lending to one person or firm an amount equal to more than 25 per cent of the bank's capital stock.

No officer or employee of a bank may borrow from it by overdraft or otherwise any amount without the knowledge of all the directors of the bank. If such a loan is made all the directors are held responsible for damages to the bank's creditors.

Buys Controlling Interest in Bank

J. W. Hughes, president of the Bank of Fairfield, the Waverly Exchange Bank and the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Rockford and Malden, Wash., Edwin T. Coman, president, and Thomas H. Brewer, vice-president of the Exchange National of Spokane, and J. W. Greene have bought the controlling interest in the Farmers and Merchants' Bank in Spokane which was organized four years ago. The bank has a paid-up capital of $50,000 with surplus and undivided profits of $15,000, and its deposits are approximately $200,000, giving its stock a book value of $130 a share. Robert Sheffels and William Gemmill will remain as president and vice-president, respectively, and Ole Olson, Robert Hyslop, T. H. Brewer and J. W. Hughes will take the places of non-residents on the board of directors. Mr. Hughes will have active charge. Mr. Brewer says that the stockholders represent a capital of more than $1,000,000. The banking room at Monroe Street and Broadway is to be remodeled and refurnished to make it one of the best state institutions in eastern Washington.

Forming Abstract and Title Company

Interests identified with the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company, of which J. P. M. Richards is president, are forming an abstract and title company with a capital of $50,000, fully paid. Real estate dealers, bankers and mortgage companies have subscribed for most of the stock. This is the second company since the consolidation of all the abstract and title concerns in Spokane under the name of the Spokane Title Company, headed by James C. Cunningham, secretary-treasurer of the Union Trust Company. John Helberg and Robert A. Koontz and associates have also organized a company with $50,000 capital. There is sufficient business in Spokane county to keep the three institutions busy. More than 100 applications for abstracts a day have been made the last 10 days to the Spokane Title Company, which is two weeks behind and it is believed this will increase, as real estate operations are the largest ever known in the city and county.

Returns from Extended Trip

D. W. Twohy, president of the Old National who has just returned from an extended trip to the east, taking in California on the homeward journey, says he found eastern capital hesitating, "and," he added, "This condition will not change until the tariff matters are settled. Of course, those who will be affected by the new schedule believe it will hurt business, however, I believe business will be better all round when congress has finished tinkering with the tariff. The uncertainty that exists at present is worse than anything else is likely to be." He added that the Spokane country and the Pacific Northwest are attracting much favorable attention in the eastern states as well as on the California coast.

Will Become Chief Accountant

Fred P. Greene, auditor of Spokane county, has accepted the position of chief accountant of a commission to be appointed by Marion E. Hay, acting governor of Washington to devise and put into operation throughout the state a uniform accountancy system. Mr. Greene is serving his second term as county auditor. He was elected by a large majority last fall, following the direct primaries at which he had no opposition from candidates in his party. Fred Leghorn, formerly a deputy in the office of the assessor of Spokane county, will also be a member of the commission. R. W. Butler, chief deputy auditor, probably will succeed Mr. Greene.

First National of Wenatchee

The First National of Wenatchee, Wash., has bought the Rosenberg building in that town for $50,000 and will alter it to suit the bank's requirements. The location is one of the best in Wenatchee, where it occupies a corner in the heart of the town. There are five store rooms on the first floor and a full basement, the second floor being used for offices and apartments. The building was erected three years ago by Mr. Rosenberg and with the site it represents an investment of $32,000. The rents at present are approximately 10 per cent net of the sale price. The officers of the bank are: President, W. T. Clark; vice-president, D. A. Beal; cashier, George R. Fisher. The business shows increases last year and the outlook is bright.

Spokane Chamber of Commerce

Trustees of the Spokane Chamber of Commerce adopted a resolution at their last meeting, pledging the support of that organization to the proposed bond issue of $1,000,000 to improve and extend the park system in this city as outlined by Aubrey Lee White, president of the park commission, who pointed out that city real estate has increased in value from 400 to 500 per cent in the last 10 years. He urged the city to buy property now for park purposes, for the reason that prices will never be lower than they are to-day.

Banking Notes

J. O. Tiffany, paying teller at the Traders' National, frustrated an attempt by William H. Van Tassell, believed to be a notorious check-worker, from realizing on a forged check for $250 last week. Van Tassell was arrested by a special officer at the bank window, where he had been detained, and at the police station his story of finding the check was disproved. The prisoner was held for trial in the superior court.

Thirty thousand dollars' worth of bonds bid in at Wenatchee, Wash., by the Harris Trust and Savings Company of Chicago, after the election last December have been declared invalid by the firm because of insufficient notice to the electors. The defect was discovered in the proceedings, and a new election will be called.

First National of Pullman, Wash., was victimized for $200 by a man giving the name of G. W. Watson, who forged the name of Napoleon Bourbonnie as security to a note for that amount. Mr. Bourbonnie says he never saw the man. The pen work is good and the signature cannot be distinguished from the real one.

When W. F. Meier, receiver, voluntarily turned over $900 more than the original counting allowed to the stockholders of the Inland Bank of Spokane a few days ago the case to reduce the fees of the receiver and his attorney as dismissed, thus closing the legal affairs of the concern.

Bank clearings in Spokane for the week ended March 20th show a gain of 40 per cent over the corresponding week in 1908. The total for the week is $7,071,910, while for the same week last year it was $4,836,465.

Benton County National was organized at Prosser, Wash., last week with a capital of $25,000. The officers are: President, G. W. Hamilton; vice-president, E. L. Stewart; cashier, C. R. Harper. A building 20x50 feet will be erected.

An African Book of Travel

Winston Spencer Churchill's new book "My African Journey" came out in time for Mr. Roosevelt to carry a copy on board ship with him. This highly illustrated work covers the same stretch of tropical wilderness that he is about to visit, beginning at Mombasa and proceeding up the Uganda Railway through British East Africa and the Uganda Protectorate to the source of the Nile, thence by "Safari" through unbroken jungle and forest to the head of navigation, and on down the Nile by boat through the Sudan to Khartum and finally to Cairo. If Mr. Roosevelt meets no more perilous adventures than Mr. Churchill he will find enough doing to satisfy even his strenuous soul.

From the windows of his private car soon after leaving Mombasa he will see the plains "crowded with wild animals"—herds of antelope and gazelle, hundreds of zebra placidly trotting close enough to the train for their stripes to be admired with the naked eye, files of black wilde beeste, wild ostriches walking sedately in twos and threes, and perhaps half a dozen lions stalking together over the plains in broad daylight. This is what Mr. Churchill saw from the same car that Mr. Roosevelt is to have. At Simba he stopped several days to shoot. His first rhinoceros charged at him furiously, coming on like a steam engine in spite of the heavy bullets poured into it by the whole party, until it dropped to earth only a few yards away. His attempts to get a lion were less successful, but he killed elephant and every other kind of large game before the end of the trip.

Among the most interesting chapters, however, are those describing the internal affairs of Uganda and the ravages of the sleeping sickness, which in three or four years has swept away 200,000 people, or two-thirds of the whole population. The disease is carried by the tsetse fly which bites like an ordinary horse fly. So fatal has it become that in certain districts it is as necessary to wear veils as to carry guns or to shake the scorpions out of your boots before putting them on.

Everyone interested in Mr. Roosevelt, in Africa, or in Mr. Churchill's splendid abilities will want the book. Published by the George H. Doran Co., New York.

"The Whips of Time"

Miss Arabella Kenealy who wrote "Dr. Janet of Harley Street" and "Women and the Shadow" has given us another offering. This time it is "The Whips of Time" a story of great interest, with a most unusual theme. In the interest of psychological science, a London physician substitutes the child of a condemned criminal for that of a lady of wealth and family, acting upon the theory that science would be benefited and that environment alone is responsible for character. What happened twenty-three years later furnishes the plot for this absorbing book.

To read it is to speculate upon your own imaginings. It is deeply engrossing, and of the greatest literary excellence.

Rare Treasury Note

Levi Davis, of Anthon, Ia., is the possessor of a one-third dollar scrip that was issued by the United States government on February 17, 1776—a little more than 133 years ago. It is 2 1/2 by 3 inches in size, and is numbered 208,929, and on one side bears these words:

"One-third of a dollar, according to a resolution of Congress passed at Philadelphia, February 17, 1776."

In the center of the scrip is a dial, below which is the command, "Mind your business," and the signature of the person who issued the money. On the reverse side is a circle of thirteen rings, on the rim of each being the name of one of the original states.

On the inside of this circle is a sunburst, containing the motto: "We are one," and the words, "American Congress."

To Improve the Currency System

Washington, D. C., April 7.—From all appearances the work of the currency commission which for some time has been allowed to rest, will be renewed vigorously. Secretary MacVeagh is intending to co-operate actively with the commission and while it is not expected that anything actually will be accomplished this session, the situation will be cleared up and put in good shape for the next congress.

Oshkosh Banks Merge

The German National of Oshkosh, Wis., has been absorbed by the Old National of Oshkosh. At the regular meeting of the stockholders of the German National Monday night, it was decided to liquidate and to sell the entire banking business, including the stock, deposits and good will to the Old National and Tuesday the exchange became effective and the German National went out of existence. The sale was made upon a vote of more than three-fourths of the stockholders, an offer having been made by the board of directors of the Old National. Under an arrangement of the transfer, Frank La Budde, cashier of the German National, will become assistant cashier of the Old National.

Dead Deposits in Illinois Banks

No less than three bills are up for passage at Springfield, which if passed, will divert all dead or forgotten deposits from Illinois banks to county or state treasurers. Similar bills have been passed in other states and there is no moral reason why such moneys should not go to the public funds. Private gain is the only reason which can be urged against it. An influential part of the Illinois Bankers Association will fight to retain such funds in the banks where they may have been forgotten.

Group Two, N. B. A., Meeting

The annual convention of Group Two, Nebraska Bankers, will be held on Arbor Day, April 22d, in Masonic Hall in Fremont, commencing at 10:30 o'clock a. m., and closing with a banquet in the evening. The one day plan of convention, and that, too, on a legal holiday, ought to bring a splendid attendance to our meeting, not only of the bankers in this, but from other groups as well. Every bank in the group, without an exception, should have at least one representative present and as many more as can come.

In the preparation of the program the committee has been ably assisted by a number of the prominent bankers of the state and the committee feels warranted in stating that no stronger program has ever been offered at our group meeting.

One of the addresses in the afternoon will be given by Ralph C. Wilson of the Bankers National, Chicago. Governor Shallenberger and Rev. F. H. Sanderson, D. D., are among the speakers in the evening at the banquet. Bankers of the Group, like Gray, Hirshmann and Knapp, will also appear on the program.

The question box will be conducted by E. F. Folda, ex-president of the Group. Send in your questions to him at South Omaha before the convention if you can. Secretary Hughes of Omaha, and ex-presidents of the State Association P. L. Hall of Lincoln, and J. T. Trenery of St. Joseph, Mo., have all promised to be present.

The Fremont Clearing House has taken charge of the banquet, and the decorating of the banquet room is in the hands of the bank clerks of Fremont.—F. M. Weitzel, President Group Two.

A. G. Candler

Atlanta, Ga., April 6.—Charged with attempting to blackmail Asa G. Candler, president of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, and Atlanta's wealthiest citizen, out of $35,000 by Black Hand methods, Daniel W. Johnson, Jr., 18 years of age, and a member of Mr. Candler's Sunday-school class, was arrested to-night at the instance of postoffice inspectors.

Another Pair of Association Workers

J. R. DOMINICK

EMORY W. CLARK

Mr. Dominick, for many years a hard worker in the Missouri Bankers Association, was last year elected to the presidency, and will, this year, preside at the big St. Joseph meeting on May 5 and 6. Mr. Dominick is president of the Traders National at Kansas City, and is rated one of the best public speakers in the organization.

Mr. Clark is a Detroitier, and a favorite in the matchless Michigan association. His banking connection is as vice-president of the First National, at Detroit, and he is vice-president of the state association. Like Mr. Dominick, Mr. Clark has been a consistent worker in the association, in which he believes implicitly.

W. T. Elliot

William T. Elliot, president of the Central National of Philadelphia, has been elected president of Group One of the Pennsylvania Bankers Association, and Roland L. Taylor, vice-president of the Philadelphia Trust, Safe Deposit and Insurance Company, secretary.

First National Sends First Shipment

This week the first shipment of American currency was made from Pittsburgh to Austria for sale amongst immigrants on their way to the United States. The people of Austria and Italy are keeping well posted on business conditions in this country and it seems that the newspaper reports of a continued betterment have convinced them that the time for their return or immigration to this country has come. Banks in Austria are preparing to meet the demand for American currency and the first shipment went forward on the "Lusitania" Wednesday, and was sent by The First National of Pittsburgh, as a beginner of a number of shipments at regular intervals for which the bank's Austrian correspondents have cabled.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THE "Regulation of the National Budget" in the April North American Review, by Cor-you, is a paper nearly every banker should read. The exceptions are those b. n.'s who read the "home paper" being "too busy?" to read more in the way of progressive literary port.

OWN in Virginia they are trying to pass an entirely new banking law. W. B. Vest, chief of the Citizens and Marine Bank of Newport News, is chairman of the committee appointed to draft the bill. He writes to THE CHICAGO BANKER to say: "Appreciating your interest in bank legislation, and the good work you have accomplished in bettering the laws of a number of the Western states, I am to-day mailing you a copy of a suggested law for the State of Virginia, which has been prepared by a committee, of which I am chairman, and will be submitted to the Virginia Bankers Association at their meeting in May for approval and then offered in the legislature for enactment into law."

THE thing which bothers the committee is what to do with the "private banker." They know what ought to be done, and have done in most up-to-date, new banking laws, and they know their own minds, too, but all gets back to a dislike to tread upon the toes of the few for the benefit of the many. The private snap banker is a greedy fellow and is likely to take his feet out of the trough unless he has to.

HAVE You a Nest Egg?" is the title line on a beautifully colored picture of the new building of the Columbus Savings & Trust Co., Columbus, O., and having in the foreground a handsome "Easter Chick," a few days of age. It is a hit of the finest kind. The nest egg is a course a savings account at 4 per cent with Columbus.

THIS bank is 26 years of age and is a progressive with 12,000 depositors. The new building is at High and Long streets and is on High Street and long on Long Street.

MAX MEHL'S Numismatic Monthly, published at Fort Worth, Tex., devotes the April edition to British coins, with many illustrations and has the real story of the dollar of 1804, which is the most valuable of American coins.

JOHN E. SWANGER, bank commissioner for Missouri, reports 1,021 state banks containing resources of $229,549,802.55. There are only 58 private banks in the state, but they are compelled to report by law and their individual deposits amount only to $3,755,489.24. There are 39 trust companies in Missouri with resources of $133,450,314.80.

THE safe-cabinet being advertised in THE CHICAGO BANKER is the ideal thing for the bankers home, for the safe preservation from fire or theft of papers and notes, taken home from the bank for leisurely examination. It is a find for such a man, and in the dining room it is a jewel for the silverware. Get a booklet.

ON April 19-20 at the "State Department" of the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, the committee on commercial law of the commissioners on uniform state laws, will hold an important meeting. On this committee are Francis B. James of Cincinnati; Charles F. Libby, Portland, Me.; Walter George Smith of Philadelphia; Talcott H. Russell of New Haven and others. The committee is working for uniformity in laws affecting bills of lading, in certificates of stock and in partnerships.

J. HUGH POWERS of the Mercantile Trust, St. Louis, has the knack of making a bond department circular interesting to those who "only want to look it over" as well as to the man with the long green check book. This is art.

"HOUSEHOLD expense account books are being given away by some of the finest banks in the country. They are made by Singer Specialty Co., Schmidt Building, Pittsburgh, and samples can be had for the asking. One big Chicago trust company has made a ten strike with them, but in smaller places is to be found their real field.

SWIFT & CO. of this city, with $60,000,000 in capital, has 10,000 satisfied stockholders and the thrifty housewife still is buying in small lots. Thereafter she uses only "Swift brand."

THE Bank Advertiser, C. E. Auracher's useful paper, has outgrown the little town of Lisbon, Iowa, and has moved over to Cedar Rapids, to put on metropolitan airs. It is expected to puff-up like the famous rice which comes from that city.

PROF. J. PAUL GOODE has "made good" in his lectures before the Chicago Chapter and now has been invited to address the Union League Club, April 13th, on the improvement of Chicago harbor. He will use his famous stereopticon and give views showing where the abutting river lines have been pushed out into the stream until part of the river is underground.

THE real significance of the tariff revision movement seems, for the moment, to have been lost in a labyrinth of rate schedules. Even the briefest analysis of this movement will reveal greater progress in the advancement of this important matter along sound and enduring lines than was made in the previous half century. This progress is due to two facts; A fundamental principle, previously ignored, has been accepted and incorporated in the movement, and for the first time in our history data essential to its right application are available. The principle referred to is that the duty proposed by a protective tariff should be the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad plus the rate of transportation. It follows as a corollary that to apply this law intelligently, domestic and foreign costs of production must be ascertained.—Fisk & Robinson.

THE Old National, Spokane, has made a success of a line of advertising copy, which unlike John, speaks for itself. W. J. Kommers. (Continued on page 15)

THE CHICAGO BANKER

Founded in 1898

CHICAGO, APRIL 10, 1909

NUMBER 15

Development and Power of the Savings Bank in France

Provision for the future was the fundamental idea of the creation in France of the savings banks. These had been in operation for upwards of twenty years in England when a group of French financiers was formed to found the first insurance company. It was a general maritime insurance company, with such well known names as Laffitte, Casimer-Perier, and Ettinguer, who also deposited with a notary in Paris on May 2, 1818, the constitution and laws of a corporation which was called the Caisse d'Epargne et de Prevoyance (Bank of Savings and Foresight). The founders paid $200 each, while the insurance company furnished the place of business, and although the idea of personal profit in favor of the founders were discarded, the royal authorization, published July 29, 1818, provided the bank with the formalities of supervision and control at that time imposed upon commercial corporations.

Object of the Company

The new company had for its object to receive, on deposit, the small sums which might be entrusted to it by the laboring classes, whether workmen, artisans, domestics, or those engaged in agriculture, as well as other persons who were both economical and industrious. The smallest deposit allowed was 20 cents. The statutes contained a fundamental principle: "Whenever the account of a depositor shows a sum sufficient to buy, at current rates, the sum of $10 annual payment, in state bonds, the bonds shall be transferred and registered in his name, and he will become the owner, except that the bond will be left on deposit in the bank, which is charged with the duty of collecting interest for him." Thus, the final principle of the savings bank was to multiply the small economies of the working classes, and to accumulate them until it was possible to buy, at current rates, a bond of 50 francs of state rentes. The French rentes, in 1818, carried 5 per cent interest, and it required 100 francs, placed in this way, to bring in 50 francs, or a little more than 7 per cent of return. The bank employed the whole of its deposits in government rentes, for it paid 5 per cent interest on the amounts deposited; but so long as the credit of a depositor represented the value of stock producing $10 the conversion was effected, and the depositor then became the owner of his share, at his own risk and peril, the bank, however, holding the stock on deposit, without charge, and also collecting the dividends due.

Working of the System

The working of the Savings Bank of Paris has given excellent results, its example was widely followed by the various departments, and savings banks were established at Bordeaux, Metz, Marseilles and other places. Up to 1835 the savings banks were administered as ordinary corporations, but, at that date, they were placed under the direct control of the state. In 1835, the number of the depositors in the whole of the French savings banks had increased to 121,500, and the amounts carried to credit were $12,400,000. In 1855 there were 893,800 depositors, whose deposits amounted to $54,400,000. In 1875 the deposits had increased to 3,365,600, and the deposits amounted to $132,080,000. It rapidly rose and reached, in 1895, $829,780,000, with 8,984,900 depositors. In 1905, 12,462,900 depositors had on deposit $954,560,000. Ten years after the passage of the law of January 5, 1835, the number of depositors had increased by 463 per cent, and the whole amount of their deposits by 531 per cent; but the revolution of February, 1848, dealt a hard blow at the savings banks which, in the presence of the general panic, were obliged to suspend payment.

A Forced Liquidation

The government of the day found itself compelled to undertake a forced liquidation by taking over the deposit account. The depositors received a government bond in place of coin, which had become so rare that the metallic reserve of the Bank of France itself had fallen to zero. Profiting by the experience of these events, the government of the empire in 1853 materially reduced the rate of interest paid to depositors, and restored the maximum limit of each deposit account to $200. It was a wise return to the principle of the statutes of 1813. This restriction modified the nature of the services that the savings banks had been destined to render to the public. In 1845 the average of the deposits reached $125, with 684,200 depositors; while in 1855 with 893,800 depositors this same average was hardly $60.60. Ten years later an average of $59.80, with 1,644,700 bank books. Down to 1880 the average of the deposits varied between $60 and $68, but in 1881 parliament, when voting the law which created the postal savings bank, raised the maximum of deposits to $400, as it stood before 1853. Consequently the average of each deposit which had been only $66.60 in 1880, rose to $84 in 1885, and exceeded $90 in 1890. The amount due from the state to the depositors, in 1890, represented the serious amount of $665,000,000, or the eighth part of the entire consolidated debt of France. This situation caused grave anxiety in the political world, and numerous proposals of reform for the savings banks were presented in the course of the year 1891. Unfortunately, every one looked at the problem from his own point of view, and the discussion which took place shows how far the institution of the savings bank had deviated from its original object.

Reforming the System

In an admirable speech M. Aynard, a deputy from Lyons and Chief of the Commission charged with elaborating a bill for reform exclaimed that the law of 1835 having had the misfortune to suppress the fundamental principle of the savings banks of 1818 by rendering permissive and not obligatory the transformation of the capital constituted in Government stock, the savings banks, under the direct management of the Caisse de Depots et Consignations, had assumed the attributes of trust companies, and had, in reality, become a vast bank of deposit for the benefit of the state. The great danger of this situation lay in the obligation to pay depositors on demand, and although the securities were of the highest class, and convertible in moderate quantities, it was evident that this would not be the case when the amounts were hundreds of millions. M. Germain confirmed this opinion. This discussion of 1892 showed that the savings banks were a public menace, and had ceased to be banks for the transformation of earnings into government bonds. The law of 1895 to a certain extent corrected this. "It aimed to consolidate the savings banks, so that their use should be confined to those for whose benefit they had originally been established; and to relieve the state as far as possible from liability." But the most important feature was the introduction of a clause, which under authority from the Council of State and the Minister of Finance and Commerce authorized payments of depositors in sums of $10, at fortnightly intervals.

The Present Workings

At present, by an arrangement made with the Bank of France, the Government in case of need can avail itself of the clauses which permit payment by instalments. The depositors may be required to wait for the entire amount due, but they are certain to receive in silver or notes $20 per month. Depositors in trust companies, or holders of negotiable securities might be compelled to wait a far longer time to recover their deposits or the value of their investments. Although the law of 1895 required the repayment of all double amounts, and reduced the maximum limit from $400 to $300, the number of depositors in the French savings banks, as well as the balance due them at the end of each year, have steadily increased. The latest official statement is that of December 31, 1905. Comparing this with that of December 31, 1891, it appears that there were 7,682,500 depositors in 1891, as against 12,462,900 in 1906, or an increase of 4,780,400. The amount of the deposits was $711,800,000 in 1891, as against $954,560,000 in 1906, or an increase of $242,760,000. The total of deposits during the sixteen years preceding January, 1906, is $3,327,420,000, and withdrawals of $3,072,360,000, showing an average annual movement of over $375,000,000.

Interest on Savings Accounts

The Savannah Clearing House has adopted the following:

"Resolved, That on and after Saturday no certificates of deposit bearing interest shall be issued for less than $500. Demand certificates and time certificates, in amounts of not less than $500, having less than twelve months to run, shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum. On time certificates in amounts of $500 or more, having twelve months or longer to run, interest at the rate of 4 per cent may be allowed. Interest on time certificates to be payable quarterly. Interest on all time certificates to cease at maturity. Banks issuing time certificates may cash them at bank's option at demand certificate rate.

A. B. Hepburn Back from Mexico

President A. Barton Hepburn, of the Chase National, of New York City, has returned from a sojourn in Mexico, where he was greatly impressed, he told a representative of THE CHICAGO BANKER, with the remarkable potentialities of the country's resources, not merely in mining, but in agriculture, oil, rubber, coffee and other products. The United States public do not realize the remarkable progress being made by American, Canadian and British capital in developing Mexico. Mr. Hepburn is confident that there will be no lack of money to carry out the various profitable enterprises that the country affords scope for. Additional transportation facilities are being provided by Harriman interests, who also are active in exploiting the vast oil supplies of the country—indeed, competition in this field has become so keen that the product is being sold at a ridiculously low figure. The advanced stage of civilization manifested in the principal courts and cities was an agreeable surprise to Mr. Hepburn. "Vera Cruz and Merida are among the cleanest cities of the world," said Mr. Hepburn, "and they are equipped with electric cars, asphalt paving and other modern adjuncts of a highly organized city. Mexico is also, of course, very up-to-date—it reminds one of Paris."

"Mexico could stand increased railroad facilities," said Mr. Hepburn, "and in due time these will be supplied. Mr. Harriman has attended to the west coast, and it is understood that he also contemplates important extensions in the East, while there is also room for a central line. The Mexican Government enjoys the confidence of banking interests in this country and in Europe, so that investments are becoming more and more attractive." "Everywhere one goes there are Americans, keen business men, fully alive to the country's possibilities," Mr. Hepburn went on enthusiastically. "The cultivation of the soil will by and by make land there much more valuable than it is to-day; why, you can obtain for $3 or $4 per acre land that in New England would command $250 an acre. The oil fields are also of great value."

While in Mexico Mr. Hepburn said: "Mexican securities stand well in the United States, and we are now the largest holders of them. Mexican railroad securities, particularly since the merger, are very popular. I know through the great amount that our bank handles something of the stream of American money that is constantly pouring into Mexico, not only for paying for properties, but for payrolls, improvements and development. I have been greatly impressed with the potential wealth of this country and I think more money will come every year for agriculture developments. Herefore, the greater part of American capital has been devoted to mining, but the richness of the soil and the attraction of the tropical and semi-tropical climate will, I am sure, attract more and more Americans to that branch of investment."

"The conveniences of a bank account are little understood by the people of Mexico.

Even those in professional or business life carry on their person the cash required for current uses, anywhere from $200 to $1,000. Funds not needed for business or personal expenses may be invested. Sometimes such funds are deposited but the use of the bank check, as in this country, is practically unknown, except for amounts over $1,000. They consider it easier to pay cash on small transactions and believe that the sight of cash facilitates, which would certainly be a justification when the rule is to put off till the morrow what can as well be done then as to-day in the land of Manana."

President W. G. Palmanteer Dead

William G. Palmanteer, the millionaire banker of Oakland, died of smallpox last week in Los Angeles, at the city pesthouse. Palmanteer and his daughter had been traveling in Mexico for pleasure, reaching Los Angeles ten days ago. Unconscious of the fatal disease that had fastened itself upon him in the lower republic and of which no symptom had revealed itself, they took apartments at a fashionable hotel and devoted their time to sight-seeing trips. Last Wednesday smallpox appeared and the next day he was isolated. Prominent physicians were summoned, but found themselves helpless, for the malady had made deep inroads when its nature was learned.

William G. Palmanteer was the founder of the Central Bank of Oakland. As a financier and business man he was one of the best-known men in the city. Until a year ago he acted as manager for the Central Bank. On the death of Thomas Crellin, president of that institution he succeeded to that position, which he continued to hold until his death. Besides holding the position of president of the Central bank he was an officer of the Livermore Bank, a stockholder of the California Nursery, and was interested in several other ventures. His estate is estimated at $750,000.

To Hear Bankers' Complaint April 26th

The Interstate Commerce Commission has decided to take up the complaint of the American Bankers Association against the express companies in Chicago on April 26th. At that time the commission will take testimony which the bankers are going to furnish in their effort to show that the express companies are discriminating against them in the transportation of money. The defendants are the following express companies; American, Adams, Wells-Fargo, Southern Pacific and United States Express companies. John H. Miller and George Packard will represent the bankers before the commission.

Originally, the complaint was brought by the bankers to try to force the express companies to cease their business of dealing in money orders, checks, domestic and foreign exchange, letters of credit, drafts and other conveniences of this sort. The commission, however, intimated that it was not likely to make any order compelling the express companies to cease dealing in evidences of credit.

Chicago Building Record for March

A great increase in Chicago building for March this year over the corresponding month last year is shown in the monthly report of the building department. The buildings for which permits were issued for March had an estimated valuation of $8,145,800, against $4,829,300 for March, 1908.

The increase appears chiefly in the cost of the buildings which are to be constructed, as the number and frontage represented are only slightly greater than last year.

Clifford B. Wright, president, and J. G. The board will also organize by re-electing the same officers. The annual report of President Wright will show the bank to be in excellent shape, and the board will probably add $500,000 to the surplus fund, making that fund $2,500,000. The capital is $500,000 and the surplus has all been earned.

J. A. Holmes Appointed Bank Examiner

B. B. Seymour, state superintendent of banks and banking, has announced the appointment of J. A. Holmes, of Weston, Wood county, as an additional examiner, the appointment to take effect Thursday. Mr. Holmes is well known in banking circles, having been for years cashier of the Bank at Weston.

The examiners this year will be busy men, as it will be the first time in which the department has had the money to make the examinations required by the Thomas law. A number of new banks are being organized, and this alone is keeping the department of banks quite busy. In addition, many of the smaller banks of the state with a capital of $25,000 and $50,000, which had but half their capital paid in, are now preparing to comply with the Thomas law by fully paying up their capital. In all these banks the stockholders were doubly liable, as they are responsible for the par value of their stock. It is believed that all of them will have complied with the law by a year from to-day, when the Thomas law will be in effect in all its provisions.

The Provident Savings Bank and Trust Company of Cincinnati has been notified of its successful bid for two bond issues. ### Signature of Clerk on Bonds

Judge A. M. J. Cochran, of the Federal Court, has handed down an opinion, which was filed in Covington, Ky., in the case of Albert Dietrich against the county of Bath. The opinion comes on a demurrer to the petition filed by the county, and involves the right of a County Clerk to have his lithographed signature affixed to coupons attached to county bonds. The contention was that the lithographed signature of the clerk in such instances is legal. This view was controverted by the plaintiff, who contended that the signature is not valid unless written with pen by the clerk personally. Judge Cochran says:

"If the signature attached to the coupons is made by another in the clerk's presence, and by his direction, they are legally signed by the clerk. It is not essential that his signature should have been affixed thereto with his own hand. The act of signing in such a case is the act of the person whose name is affixed. It is no more the act of the person actually signing it than the act of the pen itself. The pen and the person holding it and tracing the signature are but the instruments by which the party himself performs the act of signing. Such a signing complies with the statutes of fraud, and such a signature to a deed is sufficient to pass title to real estate."

Kansas Program

Secretary W. W. Bowman, of the Kansas Bankers Association, says in regard to the program for the annual meeting at Wichita, May 26th and 27th: Our convention this year will be rather characterized by a preponderance of "Floor Work" rather than to be made up in the main of set speeches. There will be the usual address of welcome and the response, the latter assigned to Senator L. S. Cambern of Erie. It is arranged for all the ex-presidents of the association during the last twenty-two years to be seated together upon the platform and in the opening session a short address from each under the head of "Messages of the president" and the usual reports of officers will be heard. The president, W. M. Peck of Concordia will deliver his annual address.

In the second session there will be under an appropriate heading an opportunity for what we shall call "Greetings, congratulations and condolences from visiting bankers." Hon. J. N. Dolley, Bank Commissioner, will speak on "New Banking Laws." Lucius Teter of Chicago will speak on the "Postal Savings Bank Situation," then follows reports of group officers, of the auditor and all special committees.

The banquet will occur on the evening of the second day session. The banquet speakers will be: Hon. E. F. Ware of Kansas City, subject, "Tendencies." Lynn H. Dinkins, New Orleans, La., and P. W. Goebel, Kansas City, Kansas, who will be the new president. Their subjects are not yet announced.

In the next session legal questions will be discussed by C. C. K. Scoville, Judge C. E. Lobdell of Larned will also give an address, the subject of which is not yet definitely fixed.

An ethical topic, the title perhaps, "The opportunity of the banker to serve his fellow-men" will be discussed by either a minister or college man. Then follow other committee reports and free parliament discussions. In the afternoon of the second day, Arthur Reynolds of Des Moines, Ia., will speak on the "Currency Problem" and Jas. T. Bradley of Kansas City, on "Bank Administration by Directors." The remainder of the session will be taken up by committee reports and election of officers and other business.

N. W. Tibbets

N. W. Tibbets, former state representative and vice-president of Union National Bank of Kewanee, Ill., was accidentally locked in the big vault after closing time Wednesday night. His plight was not discovered until the janitor arrived several hours later. The janitor heard muffled noises and thought the place was haunted. After getting a revolver he went for cashier Calhoun and brought him to the bank.

Then the vault was opened and Mr. Tibbets, pale from his trying experience, was released.

By J. IRVING COOPER

The Guarantee Trust and Safe Deposit Company of Philadelphia has leased the store at 1331 Chestnut Street, in the Mint Arcade Building, from Felix Isman, Inc. After extensive alterations to fit the store up as a banking room, it will be used by the company after next October as a branch office. The main office will continue to be at 316-18-20 Chestnut Street.

Girard Trust Company to Build

It is announced that the Girard Trust Co. of Philadelphia will build an 18-story office building at Nos. 1413-1423 Chestnut Street, to cost about $2,000,000. The structure will probably be erected by the Fuller Construction Co., of New York.

Commercial Paper Lower

Commercial paper of very choice grades has been bought by Philadelphia national banks on as low a basis as 3 per cent for both four and six months' maturities. Bankers said, however, that names which could obtain this rate were scarce, and most good grades sell on a 3½ per cent basis. When good accounts get off the books, there is difficulty in replacing them, it was said, and this keeps rates very low.

Philadelphia Company Meeting

The annual meeting of the Philadelphia Company will be held May 3d. Stockholders of record April 1st will be entitled to vote.

Philadelphia Stock Exchange Directory

The 1909 edition of the directory of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange is issued. It contains the rules revised to date, the changes made in regard to deliveries of assessable stocks and on selling bonds "and interest," making it necessary to add a couple of pages to the booklet. The publication has the names and addresses of all the members, together with the personnel and copartnerships which are connected with the Exchange.

At a price to yield about 7.45 per cent on the investment, C. D. Barney & Co. of Philadelphia offer to investors the balance of the 5 per cent first and general mortgage five-year bonds of the American Ice Company which remains from the recent offering to the stockholders. Earnings applicable to fixed charges have averaged for five years about three times the present interest charges.

Philadelphia Bank Clearings

Clearings of the Philadelphia banks for the month of March totaled $522,587,703, against $465,270,712 for the corresponding month of last year, a gain of $57,316,991, or 12 per cent.

Clearings for March were in excess of those of February, but were slightly under the January figures.

For the year to date the clearings are $1,569,011,211, a gain of $146,423,806 over the corresponding period of last year.

The Growth of Philadelphia Banks

Philadelphia banks have grown faster than the banks in either New York or Boston. In the past forty years the deposits of Boston's national banks taken together have increased 242 per cent and New York bank deposits have increased 428 per cent. But in the same forty years Philadelphia deposits have risen 556 per cent. This is all the more creditable showing for Philadelphia, inasmuch as trust companies here cut relatively a bigger figure than they do in either Boston or New York, and their growth in this city has been remarkably rapid.

Government Deposits Security

A reduction of $120,000,000 in state, city and railroad bonds as security for public moneys in national banks is the second the Treasury Department has made in less than one year. The policy was inaugurated by Secretary Cortelyou and so quietly carried out that it created no comment and caused no inconvenience.

Only $20,000,000 of this class of bonds is now up for public deposits, the $82,000,000 of government money being secured—$62,000,000 by U. S. bonds and $20,000,000 by state, city, and railroads.

Of the government money in banks $60,000,000 is subject to call by the Treasury Department and $12,000,000 in disbursing officers' funds. The "other bonds" behind government funds are taken only at 90 per cent of their market value, which accounts for the apparent discrepancy.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Twin City national bankers who have expressed themselves on the bill introduced in the United States senate by Knute Nelson of Minnesota permitting national banks to make loans on real estate favor it. The Minnesota Bankers Association has already favored the gist of the bill in a resolution.

F. M. Prince, president of the Minneapolis First National, says:

"The bill is a good one. Limitations should be put upon it in two directions—as to valuation of farm lands represented by the mortgage offered, and as to the amount that a bank might loan, of its total loanable funds, on such security. Properly safeguarded, it would be very beneficial."

F. A. Chamberlain's Views

F. A. Chamberlain, president of the Security National, said:

"It is a fine bill and will meet the approval of bankers generally, I believe. Of course, it would have to be surrounded with restrictions as to how much of its money a bank might loan on such security. As to the argument that a farm mortgage is not a quick asset, that is true only in part. Ordinarily, it is."

"There are times when it is very slow, but at such times even high-grade bonds do not turn into cash readily. The desirability of such paper for collateral is great. A farm mortgage, on a farm conservatively valued, makes a very fine asset. I think, however, there should be close restrictions. A bank should not be permitted to loan more than 20 or 25 per cent of its money on such security."

Joseph Chapman's Views

Joseph Chapman, Jr., vice-president of the Northwestern National, said:

"There should be, first of all, a restriction as to how much money a bank may loan on farm mortgages. If a bank were permitted to loan 20 per cent of capital, for instance, and had $25,000 capital, that would not help it very much. The limitation, I think, should be on deposits, so loanable, and not on capitalization. Farm mortgages are very good collateral, and if the valuation were placed low, should always be safe. It would not change the conditions under which the big national banks in the cities are prohibited from loaning on real estate, nor is it desirable that there should be any change in that respect. It would operate only to recognize the right of a farmer to mortgage his farm and take that mortgage to a national bank and have it taken as a good asset, without any legal discrimination against it."

A New Arrival in Financial Circles

The Northwestern National Bank Review is the latest arrival in financial circles in the Twin Cities. It is edited by W. F. McLane, assistant cashier. It is the intention of the bank to publish the paper monthly for circulation among northwestern correspondents to give in concise form items of general interest and benefit. The leading articles is one on present business conditions. Other topics considered are the cause of many business failures, the low price for United States bonds, Taft on the tariff. The Northwestern National thus has followed the lead of three banks in leading cities. The paper is not to publish news of internal interest in the bank, but a monthly bulletin of facts of general financial import.

Twin City Bankers Club

The final meeting of the season of the Twin City Bankers Club was a dinner Wednesday at the Minnesota club in St. Paul. It was the annual open meeting where banker members were expected to bring guests. Senator A. D. Stephens, president of the Merchants' National of Crookston, and Senator S. D. Works of Mankato were the speakers. Secretary George F. Orde of the Minneapolis First National was disappointed to learn at the last moment of the inability of Dr. Venable of the University of North Carolina at Chapel to make an address at the dinner. The affair was formal. President E. W. Decker was the toastmaster.

A St. Paul Visitor

August Blum of the Chicago First National has been visiting his son, Bernard Blum of the Northern Pacific Railway in St. Paul. He said while in St. Paul: "The business situation in Chicago may be described as an attitude of waiting. The outlook in the Middle West and in the Northwest is, I think, very promising, and when once the tariff problems have been solved and with a good crop, the country ought to enter upon its former course of prosperity."

J. L. Mitchell Elected Cashier

James L. Mitchell has been elected cashier of the Capital National Bank, succeeding H. Hallenbeck, who resigned with the intention of going into business. Mr. Hallenbeck came up from Chicago about three years ago and has become identified closely with Twin City banking. Mr. Mitchell is a brother of John R. Mitchell, president of the bank. He has been connected with the Mitchell banks in a business way since his graduation from Yale several years ago. The bank has just declared its 1½ per cent quarterly dividend.

E. W. Decker Back at Desk

E. W. Decker, vice-president managing the Northwestern National, has returned from a vacation of absolute ease. Mr. Decker neither played golf nor bridge while in Florida. He did not speak to anybody unless he had to, that is to persons outside his party composed of Mrs. Decker and himself. It is said that never before has Mr. Decker been so quiet. Previous vacations have been in search of grizzly bears, silver tip goats, and such game, but on this trip Mr. Decker just loafed after a horseback ride of one hour daily. Yet Mr. Decker couldn't resist the temptation to take a peek at finance on his way home, so he stopped in New York, Philadelphia and Chicago.

Personal Mention

Northwestern bankers have begun their spring pilgrimages to the Twin Cities. J. C. Bassett, president of the Aberdeen National, S. D., stopped on his way home from Battle Creek, Mich. C. E. McKinney, president of the Sioux Falls, S. D., National, and N. A. Patterson, cashier of the First National of Coopers-town, N. D. were visitors this week. James Nowell of Boston, with several other Boston bond men and bankers, chiefly of Lee, Higginson & Co., spent one day with Ernest C. Brown, assistant cashier of the Minneapolis First National, a cousin of Mr. Nowell. They were bound east from Seattle, Tacoma and Spokane.

The Farmers and Mechanics Savings Bank

John Crosby, attorney and capitalist, has been nominated to a trusteeship in the Farmers & Mechanics Savings Bank to succeed the late Thomas Lowry. His election is thereby practically assured. The Farmers & Mechanics bank is nearly completed and when it is good and finished the bank's chattels will be moved to the new old building. The bank is a beauty inside and is unique in its architectural union of the old and new type of banking architecture, both styles having its protagonists in new banking buildings.

An Important Investment Offering

Messrs. Fisk and Robinson of Chicago, New York and Boston have announced an important investment opportunity ranging from 5 to 6 per cent as the basis of income. The securities are 6 per cent secured gold notes of the St. Louis, Rocky Mountain and Pacific Company, the maturities coming April 1, 1910-11-12. The Bankers' Trust Company of New York is trustee. The notes are sold to provide the company with additional working capital owing to the greatly increased demand for coal and coke in the territory served by this company. The notes are secured by first mortgage amounting to 133 per cent of the loan. Any of the notes are redeemable at thirty days' notice.

New Banking Act for Virginia

The Virginia Bankers Association, one of the liveliest in a very live family, has a hard working, earnest committee at work to provide Virginia with a banking commissioner under a brand new banking statute of the latest and most efficient model. The association appointed the committee last June at the Hot Springs meeting and the result is that this year's convention will get a complete report in the shape of a drafted bill, for its consideration. The convention, if it can agree, will then ask the legislature to pass such a bill. W. B. Vest of Newport News, is the chairman. The bill is described as "a bill to establish a bureau of banking under the control of the state corporation commission, to provide for the appointment of a commissioner of banking, to regulate the business of banking in this state, to declare certain acts to be crimes and to provide penalties for the violation of the provisions herein contained."

It follows practically standard lines in the matter of supervision, examination, salaries for the examiners in lieu of fees, receiverships, capital, directors' duties, etc. Its most interesting sections come at the end and relate to the abolition of "private banking" although no such mention is made of the private snap enterprises in the text of the bill. Under the caption "Who Shall Do a Banking Business?" section 57 provides that "no person, copartnership or corporation, except those corporations duly chartered and already conducting the business of banking under authority of the laws of this state or of the United States or which shall hereafter be incorporated under the provisions of this act, or authorized to do business under the banking laws of the United States, shall engage in the business of banking in this state after the first day of July, 1911, and the business of banking shall be deemed and taken to mean the conduct of business as enumerated in section 28, clause 6, as the kind of business a bank may do, except that nothing in this act shall prevent any individual, firm or corporation from lending money on real estate and personal security, or collateral; or from guaranteeing the payment of bonds, notes, bills and other obligations or from purchasing or selling all stocks and bonds."

"Any individual, copartnership or corporation now doing a banking business in this state may incorporate as a state bank, as provided in this act for the organization of banks and the state corporation commission shall accept good assets of such individuals, copartnerships or corporations, at not less than par, in lieu of cash in payment for the capital stock of such state bank."

The unlawful use of term "bank," "banker" or "banking" is cared for in no uncertain language in section 58, which provides that "no person or corporation engaged in the business of banking in this state, not subject to the supervision of the Commissioner of Banking by the provisions of this act, shall make use of any office sign, having thereon any artificial or corporate name or other words indicating that any place or office is the place or office of a bank, savings bank or trust company, nor shall any person, copartnership or corporation make use of or circulate any letterheads, billheads, blank notes, bank receipts, certificates, circulars, or any written or printed paper whatever, having thereon any artificial or corporate name or word or words indicating that such business is the business of a bank, savings bank or trust company; nor shall any person, copartnership or corporation use the word 'bank,' 'savings bank,' 'banking,' or 'banker,' or the plural of any such word or words in any business, or in connection with any other business than that of the business of banking as defined under this act. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this or the preceding section, either individually, or as an interested party, in any copartnership or corporation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, not more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in jail not more than six months, or by both fine and imprisonment. The State Corporation Commission shall have authority to examine the accounts, books and papers of any person, copartnership or corporation whom it has reason to suspect is doing a banking business within the intent of this act, in order to ascertain whether such person, copartnership or corporation has violated, or is violating any provision of this act, and the refusal to submit such accounts, books and papers shall be prima facie evidence of such violation."

This is about as drastic as could be wished, but it is the sort of a statute which will rid Virginia of about the only kind of banking which is a menace to the business of banking in any state. No state which has eradicated wildcat banking from its system ever has taken it back. Every state which has abolished private banking has found that it was a wise move. Known capital, known stockholders, state or national inspection and supervision, publicity—these are the jewels in the banking profession. They provide safety and create confidence which their absence destroys.

Under the most respectable auspices the last but not least of periodicals useful to this great financial center makes its appearance. The monthly bulletin of the Chamber of Commerce is clad in a delicate green cover, indicative of spring and youth and hope. The contents are most creditable to the editor, and should open the eyes of the people of this city to the multifarious usefulness of its Chamber of Commerce.

Circulation is at present limited to members of that body, a number of kindred commercial organizations, and the leading newspapers. We venture the prediction that when the helpfulness of the publication is appreciated, its circulation will widely extend. The reproduction of one of the best portraits of Alexander Hamilton alone gives it a library value, and incidentally recalls to mind that the Chamber has perhaps the most valuable collection of portraits in America. Their reproduction from time to time would be a service of great public worth.—The Wall Street Journal.

"The United States, in my estimation, is up against about the toughest proposition on earth in digging the Panama Canal. We dig the canal and England and Germany get the results," said Ed. V. Wilbern, who has just returned from a tour of the South American countries with Jefferson Livingston, both of Cincinnati.

Increased Bank Currency

There was an increase of 10½ million dollars in the bond secured circulation of national banks last month and a decrease of 4½ millions in the amount secured by lawful money. The total outstanding national bank circulation is 684½ millions, of which 646¼ millions are secured by government bonds and 38¼ millions are offset by lawful money deposited in the treasury for their retirement.

The United States Treasury holds 651¼ millions in United States bonds as security for national bank notes and 82¼ millions to secure public deposits.

Connecticut Refuses to Guarantee Deposits

When the bill "to provide for the security of depositors in Connecticut state banks and trust companies" came up in the senate Senator Goodwin said the measure was similar to the law in force in Oklahoma, which was favored by Mr. Bryan. The committee on banks reported unfavorably on it and the report was accepted.

assistant cashier, is the presiding genius at the publicity fount.

R. L. RINAMAN, secretary, sends this out to Illinois Bankers and we all join in the hope that an end has been made of foolish, sentimental and religious holidays. Mr. Rinaman says: "The attention of our members is called to senate bill 9, making October 12th a legal holiday in honor of Christopher Columbus. The bill has passed the senate and is out of committee in the house. If you are opposed to another legal holiday in this state, write at once to your representative urging him to vote against the measure.

"With all due respect to the late Christopher Columbus, this office can hardly retain its self respect and close on each present legal holiday."

THERE are yet bankers in Illinois who buy the cheapest burglary and indemnity insurance offered, ignoring the standard policies and companies offered by the state association. This is not a bit smarter, nor any safer than would be the lending of money to him who would pay (or agree to pay) the highest interest rate. A bank that uses shady insurance isn't a good one for the depositor.

NO use to urge loyalty to such men. Raise their dues. Raise dues to all who do not reciprocate. Mr. Rinaman is urging Illinois banks to join the A. B. A. and wear a badge at the big Chicago convention this year. All of Illinois should attend.

THOSE privileged to know the kindly J. F. Allen of New York, who for five years was welcomed at bankers conventions by every one, will be glad to know that he has founded the house of J. F. Allen & Co., at 111 Broadway, N. Y. He is willing and able to be of great personal service to bankers visiting or having business in New York.

CASHIER.

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., April 8.—Indians of the Nez Perce tribe are organizing a company to establish a bank at Fort Lapwai, Idaho, south-east of Spokane, in which the bulk of the business will be with redmen, who are to receive approximately $150,000 from the federal government this year as interest on money due them on the sale of their lands. The institution will have a paid up capital of $15,000 of which $12,000 is held by Indian stockholders, and of this $2,000 is to be invested in a bank building. Five shares is the maximum amount of stock to be allotted to any subscriber. The directors of the company will be Indians and Corbett Lawyers, a graduate of Carlisle, who is promoting the enterprise, will be cashier. He is now chief clerk in the office of O. H. Lipp, Indian agent on the reservation. Others interested are Edward S. Riboy and Thomas Moore. It is announced that a practical banker will have charge of the loan department. It is expected to have deposits of $200,000 in a short time. Most of the Indians on the reserve, many of whom are wealthy, have accounts in the banks at Lewiston, Culdesac, Vollmer, Grangeville and Kamiah, Idaho, and in Portland and Spokane, while others have buried their gold in tin cans and pots, and it is expected that this will be deposited in the new bank, which will be ready for business the latter part of this month or early in May. This is the first bank of its kind in the Northwest and one of the few on the continent.

Spokane Visitors

De Forest Condee, New York, James Nowell, Boston, and J. W. Harper, representatives of Lee, Higginson & Co., brokers, Boston, were in Spokane recently inspecting the Washington

Water Power Company's property, most of which bonds were underwritten by the firm. They also made a trip over the Spokane & Inland Empire Electric Railway system, going thence to Seattle, where the company is underwriting a large bond issue. Mr. Nowell said the firm is highly impressed with the opportunities for investment in Spokane, though the present visit has no special significance in that direction.

Never Foreclosed a Mortgage

"Though we have been in business nearly 18 years and have been liberal with loans, we have never found it necessary to foreclose a mortgage," said T. Arthur Winter, vice-president of the bank of Colville, Colville, Wash., which moved into its new quarters, March 29th. The structure is one of the most pretentious in eastern Washington and is the best equipped outside of the large cities in the state. It was erected at a cost of $25,000 and is equipped with burglar-proof safes and mahogany and bronze fixtures. The floors are mosaic tile. The building is of Grecian architecture, two stories, 32x70 feet, the exterior finish being Stevens county terra cotta. The bank was organized as a private concern in October, 1891. Afterward it was incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000 and was for years the only bank in Stevens county. The capital stock was increased to $100,000 three years ago. It is fully paid up and is owned exclusively by business men of the county. The bank has been under the same management since its incorporation, the officers being: President, C. W. Winters; vice-president, T. A. Winters; cashier, W. R. Baker; assistant cashier, George Burdsal.

Will Go in Special Train

Bankers in Spokane believe that the attendance from eastern Washington and northern Idaho and Oregon will be large at the joint convention of the bankers association of Washington, Idaho and Oregon at Seattle, June 24th to 26th. The local contingent, joined by bankers from the panhandle of Idaho, will travel to the sound in special coaches, which will be parked near the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition grounds. Bankers in Spokane are also arranging for the reception of a number of prominent financiers who will be in Spokane on the way to or returning from the exposition.

The Mechanics and Farmers Association

Two-dollar bills issued in 1873 by the Mechanics and Farmers Building and Loan Association of Richland county, S. C., which closely resemble accepted bank currency, have made their appearance in Spokane and other parts in the Inland Empire. The bills are printed on regulation bank notes paper and would pass in many places. The bill is embellished with two engravings, one showing a negro plowing with a four-horse team, while the other depicts a dock scene with bales of cotton in the foreground. The scroll work and lettering is well done. Captain James Coverly, acting chief of police of Spokane, says the dates on the bill would indicate that the original plates have been secured by the counterfeiters and that the alterations are made with a modern numbering machine. The currency was originally issued under a law permitting building and loan associations to print certificates for their members in any form they should see fit.

Chicago-Seattle Transportation Committee Report

We are making arrangements for a few hours stop over in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and it is likely that we will make a stay of a couple of hours somewhere in the Rocky Mountains, also in the Cascade Mountains.

The rates from Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha, and Kansas City to Seattle, Washington, and return will be $50.00, permitting going out via the Northern Pacific Railway and returning via same route or via either of the other Northern lines, or via Salt Lake City and Denver. This same ticket from Chicago costing $62.00. Rate from St. Louis will be $57.50, and from Milwaukee, $59.75. These tickets returning via California will be about $15.25 higher.

The rates from territories east of Chicago will be approximately a (one and one-half) fare to Chicago added to the $62.00 and $77.25 rates. Announcement as to the exact fare from various eastern cities will be made in a few days.

These tickets are strictly first class and permit of stop overs in both directions and they bear final limit of October 31st. We are figuring on having a fine standard Pullman train from Chicago with a dining car for the entire trip, never taking the diner off the train. The probabilities are that the rates will be $2.50 per day for the three meals.

The rate for a double berth from Chicago to Seattle is $14.00. These berths are for one or two people, making only half of this amount for each if two occupy the same berth.

The present prospect of delegates from the east is very encouraging, and it is probable there will be enough from New York City to fill a special train, in which case this special train will be run from the East to Chicago over the New York Central and run from Chicago over the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and Northern Pacific Railway. If it should happen that there would not be enough to fill a special train, the cars they will fill will be attached at Chicago to the special train from Chicago.

For further information in regard to the New York Special write William M. Rosendale, Chairman of the Transportation Committee, New York Chapter, Market and Fulton National, New York City, New York.

The route selected is the scenic one to the Pacific coast, so the arrangements when fully completed will make this one the banner trip of the American Institute of Banking and it is hoped that everybody who possibly can will take advantage of this excursion.

The Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition will be a big added attraction and especially so, as it is to be held in the beautiful city on the Pacific (Seattle).

The next report will show full details as to the special features in the west bound trip, in addition to quoting rates from eastern territories.

Be sure and arrange to take this trip. The train leaves Chicago over the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul to St. Paul, thence over the Northern Pacific Railway, taking us through Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Washington.

We will have other good things to tell you very soon, so be sure and remember the time, place and date—Seattle, June, 1909. Respectfully, J. G. Maclean, Security National, Minneapolis; Chas. F. Minor, Knickerbocker Trust Co., New York City; Geo. A. Jackson, chairman, Continental National of Chicago.

Professor Scott Declares High Finance Nation's Peril

At the St. Paul Commercial club recently Prof. William A. Scott of the University of Wisconsin, student and teacher of finance, assigned the interests controlled by the Morgans and the Rockefellers and incidentally, without political bias and uninfluenced by public clamor, from the point of view solely of a man who has devoted years of study to the industrial and financial life of the country, in unequivocal terms put the mark of academic reasoning on the fight which Theodore Roosevelt has for the past four years been making against the "malefactors of great wealth."

Prof. Scott called his talk "A Decade of High Finance." He traced the history of national economics from the year 1837 down to the present day, analytically described the various channels into which the commercial and financial life of the nation has run at various times during the decade and then pictured the conditions which led up to the formation of the monster combinations of capital which to-day have a strangle hold on the purse of the people, and who are able, so he declared, to almost control the success or failure of any candidate for president, such as he hinted may have been part of the plan when the panic of October, 1907, was precipitated by the Morgan interests.

Deliberate Design

Describing the vast resources to which these combinations have access and the vengeance which they have the power to wreak upon any who attempt to cross their paths in the division of the spoils, Prof. Scott said:

The careers of the Heinze and the Thomas brothers and of J. P. Morse during the late '90s furnish excellent illustrations of the point I am attempting to make. The Heinze brothers first became prominent in the mining of copper in Montana. In the course of their operations they came into violent contact with interests controlled by the Standard Oil people and forced the latter to buy them out at a large figure, estimated at $10,000,000.

"With this fortune they came to New York, and in a short time formed what was known as the 'Heinze-Morse-Thomas group' of institutions, consisting of twelve banks, two trust companies, a consolidated steamship company, the Heinze United Copper company, and some other corporations. Their associates in the formation and administration of this group were adventurers like themselves.

Marked for Slaughter

"The Consolidated Steamship company controlled by these men became a competitor of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, controlled by Morgan interests. Having the temerity to run counter to the powers that be, these men were marked for slaughter. The time selected for dealing with them was October, 1907, when the banks of the group were heavily loaded with the securities of other members of the combination.

"The first move was an attack on United Copper on the curb. The sequel of events is fresh in the memories of all. The Heinze brokerage firm was forced to the wall, and then the trust companies. Ruin threatened all the group, but the final outcome was the forcing out of Heinze, Morse and their representatives and the substitution for them of people belonging to the Morgan and Standard Oil groups. In this process the United States Steel corporation of the Morgan group acquired control of the Tennessee Coal and Iron company, and the Standard Oil forced the Westinghouse company on the rocks in the interests of the General Electric, which it controlled.

Power a Menace

"The use of their power for political ends is a danger with which these Wall Street federations also threaten us. The suspicion is entertained in some quarters that this danger was realized in the late crisis. Whether or not this suspicion was well founded it is not my present purpose to inquire, but some of the facts upon which it is based so well illustrate the danger that I cannot forbear using them.

"The attitude of the masters of high finance towards President Roosevelt and his policies of law enforcement, federal control of great corporations, etc., are well known, especially to the readers of our great financial journals. In the execution of these policies, both the Morgan and Rockefeller group have been convicted of questionable practices and their standing with the public affected.

May have Planned

"What more natural than that they should conclude that it was their duty to prevent his nomination for a third term or the nomination for presidency of any man who thinks as he does or would act as president as he has acted. What more natural further than that they should consider the situation sufficiently serious to warrant drastic measures. Such measures were within their reach!

"As the chief sponsor for this view of the case puts it, by a precipitation of a panic in Wall Street, the way to which they clearly saw,

First National Bank Field Day

A movement is on foot for the holding of a big field day in connection with the annual First National, of this city, Receiving Tellers-Currency Pen baseball game, along the latter part of June or middle of July, and if the present plans carry through there is going to be a big time.

Among the many events that have been suggested are a hundred-yard hash, a half-mile run, fungo-hitting, long distance baseball throwing, time-around-the bases, golf driving contest for distance, obstacle race and relay race. These events will be open to all, including the officers, and the afternoon will wind up in a great game between the Receivers and the Currency boys. The relay race will be between teams from the different departments, and the possible entries in this event will be the City Books, Country Books, Receiving Tellers, Currency Pen, Auditing, Foreign Exchange, General Books and In Mail.

Chicago Chapter Debate Society

At the quarterly election of the Chicago Chapter Debate Society recently John Drummond of the Country Books department of the First National was unanimously elected president. This society deserves a larger attendance than it has been receiving recently.

The Des Moines Clearing House Association passed resolutions asking the Iowa legislature to make an appropriation for preliminary surveys to make the larger Iowa rivers navigable. Al Miller of the Home Savings, an enthusiast, was back of the resolution.

Philadelphia Chapter News

BY DAVID CRAIG.

The seventh yearly dinner of Philadelphia Chapter was held on Saturday evening, March 27th, at The Hotel Walton. Three hundred bank men attended, and the function was the most successful in the chapter's history.

At 6:50 P. M. the assembled bankers filed into the banquet hall, and upon the signal of President John G. Sonneborn were seated promptly at 7 o'clock.

Every detail of the dinner was carried out with precision, and each feature spoke well for the efficiency of the arrangements committee, with Eugene J. Morris, as chairman. Associated with him were J. Norman Ball, Wm. S. Evans, E. Leslie Allison, Frederick Butler and John C. Knox.

The menu was in itself unique. It was made up as a pocket check book, with checks for each course drawn to bearer on the Bank of Dyspepsia, and signed Gee. Indigestion.

A song sheet with popular airs was placed at each plate, and throughout the dinner the hall rang with the cheering melodies.

In introducing the toastmaster of the evening, Joseph Moore, Jr., President of the National Bank of Northern Liberties, Mr. Sonneborn, in his usual clever manner, welcomed the assembled members and their friends, and reviewed briefly the chapter's work of the past year.

Mr. Moore congratulated the chapter upon its growth and achievements, and expressing the pleasure it gave him to preside, gave a short discourse on banking. "We live in troublous times," said Mr. Moore. "There are demagogues who would destroy our peace and stability as a nation. The wide dissemination of their vicious heresies has brought a storm upon us that has nearly wrecked the industries of the nation. Education of the individual is the only solution of that problem. Let the people learn that such nihilistic turbulence as we have passed through can only lead to want and ruin. The elections and the recent panic have been a lesson to bankers. They have learned that they must consecrate their lives to insuring the deposits of the people which are left with them in trust."

The Rev. Dr. John R. Davies, speaking on

"The Ministry of Money," said "The banks teach us one great lesson. In these days when we are so prone to lackadaisical, easy-going ways, they show us we must come to time; that every man has responsibilities, and that here, at least, he must meet them. There is a growing power of socialism. As soon, however, as a working man puts a dollar in the bank he no longer will be a socialist. He will no longer hold by any theory or set of theories which would take from him what he has saved for a rainy day."

Dr. Francis H. Green, of the State Normal School, West Chester, in his toast, "Strive and Thrive," interspersed his scholarly address with numerous witticisms which undoubtedly aided the digestive organs of his hearers. The subject matter of his talk centered, as he called it, on three E's and two I's. To thrive, the speaker said one must strive with earnestness, enthusiasm and enjoyment, coupled with intelligence and integrity.

W. W. Porter, Esq., former Judge of the Superior Court, responding to the toast "Quick Assets," said, "No profession of the day has to cope with more difficult, newer problems than that of the banker. It is you who must solve this question that has grown out of the enormous power of corporate interests and the man of the day is the one who can meet the emergency."

Speaking of the general attitude of the American people toward established institutions and customs, Judge Porter said: "The Americans are not a reverent nation. We are too prone to criticize our government, and our judiciary. I will point to one who has recently left the presidential office. He performed many acts of wisdom and some acts of folly. The greatest act of folly, and the most unwise thing he ever did was to lay his executive hand upon the act of a judicial officer. To do this is to strike at the very foundation of the safety of our nation. The protection of our property, your banks, and your very life lies in the purity and safety of the state and federal bench."

A. L. Moise, of the law firm of Sharp, Alaman & Moise, was the next speaker on the program, and gave an interesting discussion on "Echoes from the South Land." Mr. Moise made full use of his supply of darky stories.

Before the beginning of the ceremonies President Sonneborn read a telegram of greeting from the New York chapter, whereupon three rousing cheers were given for New York

Mr. John Greiner, president of the Scranton chapter, occupied a chair at the guests' table.

The function ended, at the suggestion of toastmaster Moore, with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

Washington-Baltimore Chapter Debate

Washington and Baltimore chapters of the American Institute of Banking will meet in annual debate at the George Washington University building, this city, on Saturday evening, April 17th, to argue the question of whether or not express companies should be prohibited from selling exchange in the form of money orders, letters of credit, travelers' checks or drafts. Following the debate the two chapters will adjoin to the Shoreham Hotel for a buffet supper. In the debate with Baltimore, Washington will support the negative side of the argument, and will be represented by Samuel J. Henry, F. V. Devereaux and E. L. Fawcett.

At a meeting of the chapter held the other evening in the chapter rooms, 1214 F street, an interesting address was delivered by Prof. James Howard Gore of the faculty of the George Washington University on "Economics of Industrial Combinations." He declared that trusts should be encouraged because of the incentive they give to trade. Prof. A. P. Andrew also spoke, his subject being "Peculiarities of the American Banking Problem."

Pittsburgh Chapter Meeting

Prof. Joseph A. Beck, of the University of Pittsburgh, began the second half of his course of lectures on "Money and Banking" before Pittsburgh Chapter A. I. B. at the chapter rooms in the Wabash Building, Tuesday evening. It was an exceedingly interesting lecture and the class was the largest in attendance so far this year. In part Prof. Beck said:

"Modern banks as we know them were not established until the 17th century, when the Bank of England was organized in 1694. Previous to that there had been centuries of civilization, including that of Babylon, Greece and Rome, but in spite of their development only a crude form of banking was in existence.

"Banking was at first mere money changing, which gradually grew into the business of exchange, the gathering of savings for safe deposit only and later the use of these deposits for the extending of credit.

"The chief economic function of banks is to give steadiness of value to the medium of exchange and to preserve the value of the precious metals. A second function is the facilitating of exchange through clearing houses and a third is the gathering up of the small savings of many and making that capital effective by loaning it to others. Banks and bankers determine what course credit shall take and in that way assist the development of industries suited to the community in which they are located. This is a very important duty which bankers perform as to give credit to a business or an industry for which the community is unsuited economically is to invite disaster, while to extend credit wisely brings prosperity."

The present course of lectures is exciting considerable interest among bank men and five more lectures will be given this season. These are free to all members of Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking.

The educational committee is making preparations for standard examinations in practical banking, political economy and commercial law for which a certificate of proficiency is issued by the American Institute of Banking. To prepare members to take the examination a series of reviews are being conducted under the direction of Prof. Beck.

"Servitude" by Irene Osgood

Dana Estes & Co., publishers, of Boston, have sent out a thrilling new novel by Irene Osgood, writer of "To a Nun Confess'd." The tale is of the historical type, built on those troublous times following the war of 1812, when the Mediterranean was given over to the corsairs—the bloodthirsty pirates who scoured the sea for plunder and Christians to be sold into a slavery worse than death. The hero is one "William Brown," an English naval lieutenant on secret service, who is captured by an Algerian pirate ship and sold into slavery in the expectation of a handsome ransom. His love for a sweet Virginia girl alone sustains him through all the horror and degradation of those awful days that would have broken the body and soul of one less strong. Christian slavery in all its hideousness is portrayed with fidelity and detail that at times is almost heart-rending. The capture of Miss Betty, her brief experience in the Dey's harem, her rescue—made possible through Brown's heroism—by a detail from Commodore Decatur's Guerriere, are thrilling incidents in a story of absorbing interest, which ends with Brown's escape and the bombardment of Algiers by the British squadron under Lord Exmouth.

Michigan Banking News

By W. T. FOSTER.

Senator Collins has introduced a bill creating a department of public accounting, with one $3,500 chief and $5,000 worth of assistants, and as many examiners as are needed at $5 per. It is to be the duty of the department to formulate a uniform system of accounts and audit for all state institutions, officers, counties, cities, municipal corporations, school districts and townships.

Some other bills introduced were:

By Senator Ming: Providing that the purchaser of tax title land is dispossessed of land that he has occupied for five years because of some irregularity in the records of the transaction in which the land was acquired, he shall be reimbursed for improvements he has made on the land during his occupancy.

By Senator Bates: Increasing the annual limit of township contingent funds for the payment of salaries and expenses of supervisors, clerks, drain and highway commissioners from $1,000 to $1,500.

By Senator Watkins: Authorizing the establishing in school districts having less than 5,000 population of special courses in agriculture, domestic science and manual training. The bill comes from the agricultural college.

By Senator White: Providing that city, county and township treasurers shall not be personally liable under their bonds for any funds lost through bank failures or other causes over which they have no control.

Changes to a State Institution

One of the first changes of a private banking institution to a state bank since the Michigan Bankers Association framed the proposed legislation prohibiting a private banker from using any name that would convey the impression that the bank was a state institution, is recorded in the reorganization of the A. Hill & Sons' Exchange Bank of Colon, Mich. The bank is now a state institution under the name of the A. Hill & Sons' State Bank, and it began business under the state supervision the first of this month. The new law does not prohibit the use of the individual's name in the state bank. Under the old name, as a private institution, one had no way of knowing whether it was a private or state institution. While Hill retains his name in the new institution, there is no doubt left of its incorporation under state laws.

Detroit Bankers Interested

Detroit bankers will be interested in two bills introduced in the national legislature by Rep. De Armond, of Missouri. One bill requires all banks controlled by the United States to pay annually into the government treasury an amount equal to one-eighth of 1 per cent of the total of their deposits, to be used by the secretary of the treasury to protect depositors. Generally, the bankers of Michigan are opposed to all bank deposit guaranty schemes. The other bill provides a fine of not less than $100, imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, for any officer or any employee of a bank who may furnish to any authorized government officer or any employee of a bank who may furnish to any authorized government officer a statement of the bank's balances which is not clearly given or is in a confused condition, with the intent to conceal the true condition of the bank.

The Kalamazoo Commercial Club

The Kalamazoo Commercial Club held its second annual banquet recently. Col. E. M. Irish was the principal speaker. Speeches were made by several out-of-town guests.

The City Trust and Savings Bank

Hugh Blair has resigned as cashier of the City Trust and Savings Bank of Grand Rapids, to take effect not later than April 30th, and will May 1st have charge of the stock and bond department of Child, Hulswit & Co., and be a member of the directorate. Mr. Blair has been with the City Trust and Savings Bank since its organization, May 1, 1905, and was formerly with the Kent Savings Bank.

Kline's Banking Bill Doomed

Those claiming to be on the inside say that Senator Kline's banking bill is doomed, in so far as the salary of the bank commissioner is concerned, at least.

Real Estate Transfers

Real estate transfers reached a new record mark in Wayne county, in the first quarter of the year 1909. The total number of deeds recorded in January, February and March was 3,728, the nearest approach to this high mark being that of the first three months of the year 1906, when 3,662 transfers were recorded.

Kansas City

Kansas national banks will not be allowed to participate in the state guaranty fund. This is settled definitely in a decision by Attorney-General Wickersham, given in Washington Monday. This is believed to do away with all possibility of a special session of the legislature, as it is declared state legislation would be useless.

The Bankers Trust Company

The stockholders of the Bankers Trust Company of St. Louis will vote at a meeting April 15th, to increase the capital stock from $500,000 to $1,000,000. The new stock to be issued will be sold at $200 per share. This will give a capital of $1,000,000 and surplus to the amount of $700,000. The present surplus is $200,000. The usual quarterly dividends of 4 per cent will be continued.

The Bankers Trust Company is one of the few trust companies in St. Louis which does not receive deposits. It was organized six years ago at Fredericktown, Mo., under the name of the Fredericktown Trust Company, but owing to the inconvenience of doing a large business in a small town, the bank was moved to St. Louis at the end of the second year and a new charter was taken out. The officers of the company are: J. E. Franklin, president; B. F. Edwards, vice-president; C. S. Marsh, secretary; L. S. Parker, treasurer, and F. E. Williams, assistant secretary.

The St. Louis Money Market

Rates for call money in St. Louis are about on a 4 per cent basis, with funds for such loans available in unusually heavy volume. Call and short-term loans are favored by bankers, owing to the general belief that ruling rates are not likely to prevail for more than a few weeks. National bank reserve agents of interior institutions are not being drawn upon to any appreciable extent.

The Farmers State Bank

The Farmers State Bank of Chappell Hill, Tex., has elected the following directors: W. B. Raysor, J. S. Smith, J. J. Shaver, H. P. Perkins, Henry Schaer, F. W. Wood, J. E. Routt and R. K. Felder. A 4 per cent dividend was declared and 3 per cent transferred to the surplus fund. The officers are: J. J. Shaver, president; R. K. Felder, vice-president; H. P. Perkins, cashier.

St. Louis Bank Clearings

While clearings by the associated banks and trust companies of St. Louis do not reflect any material improvement in general business in the recent past, they do emphasize substantial progress toward normal condition in contrast with a year ago. For March, the aggregate of clearings was $294,417,535, whereas for the corresponding month in 1908 the total was $254,210,971. Wednesday's clearings were $9,966,268, while the total last Wednesday was $10,893,875, a decrease of $927,607. Balances: Wednesday, $1,189,842; last Wednesday, $915,- 595; for the month, $28,560,679; corresponding month last year, $26,169,682.

A somewhat improved inquiry for time funds is reported by several of the larger banks, and deposits are also being more largely drawn upon, two symptoms of a broadening general business. Discount rates are steady.

St. Joseph Bank Clearings

Three bank clearing records in St. Joseph were broken in the three months that ended with March. They are the heaviest month, the heaviest quarter and the heaviest day. Bank clearings in March were the largest in the history of local banking. They were $33,664,616.62. That is an increase of $5,921,325.69 over the best previous month. March 4th was the largest single day in the history of local banking. The clearings that day were $2,236,829.30.

Kansas City Bank Clearings

Bank clearings in Kansas City last month were larger than for any previous month. They amounted to $208,967,426, and were nearly 63 millions larger than in March, 1908, showing the remarkable increase of 43 per cent.

New Clearing House Rules Meet Protest

The new rules of the St. Joseph Clearing House Association, which went into effect last Monday, are meeting with criticism and opposition in some quarters. The big banks of the eight which form the association are abiding by them, but a number of the smaller members have not signed up and declare they will not.

The rules provide, for one thing, that the association shall have its own examiner. Some of the banks object to this on the ground that they do not wish their condition given to their competitors in the association, while there is no such danger under federal and state inspection.

Another new rule provides that the rate of interest on savings accounts shall not exceed 3

The strongest opponents of the rules make the charge that the Swift Packing Co. interests, having secured control of the clearing house, are responsible for the new rules, but this is denied by the officers of the clearing house and has not been proved to be the case.

Put Me Down—Dr. Woods

Dr. W. S. Woods, president of the National Bank of Commerce, of Kansas City, has returned from a two weeks' stay in California, where he visited Mrs. Woods at her country place near Redlands.

"What's going on in Kansas City," Dr. Woods asked at the Hotel Baltimore. "I've been away from the world for about fifteen days and all I can hear since I returned is river. Looks like an attempt to put one over on me. I haven't quite got next to just what the plan is, but I will say that anything that will lead to the navigation of the river I am for, and no matter how big the scheme is I'll do my part."

"I've been away soaking up a heavenly climate and now I'm back on the job ready to help push Kansas City. That's why I say I'm for river navigation—when I haven't even had time to get a thorough knowledge of what the proposition is."

To Exploit St. Louis

A publicity bureau to exploit St. Louis as the greatest distributing center in the world, and to otherwise boom the city, will be established by Merchants' Exchange. The financial resources of the organization are to be drawn on to an unlimited extent and the bureau will advertise everything worth while about the industrial, mercantile achievements, plans and prospects of St. Louis.

St. Louis Postal Receipts

That St. Louis is entering on a period of unusual business prosperity is indicated by the St. Louis postoffice receipts last month, compared with those of the same month last year. March, 1909, shows receipts amounting to $385,814.23; March, 1908, shows $347,364.96. This is an increase of $38,449.27, or 11.06 per cent. Postal receipts are held to be as much an index of a city's prosperity as its bank clearings.

Golden City Bank Reopens

The Golden City (Mo.) Banking Company, after having been suspended for three weeks, was reopened last week with a clean bill of health from the examiners. The bank has been reorganized with increased capital stock. Special Agent Wade will remain in charge a few days awaiting perfecting of reorganization.

J. J. Newton Dies in Fort Worth Fire

To boys and a carelessly thrown cigarette stub is generally credited the fire which destroyed property in South Fort Worth valued at $2,000,000, caused the death of J. J. Newton, a bank employee, and the serious injury of six persons.

Kansas City Livestock

More livestock was marketed in Kansas City last month than in any previous March. The total receipts were 11,829 carloads, nearly 12 per cent larger than a year ago. Kansas City gained in cattle, while Chicago lost, and Kansas City's gain in hogs was greater than Chicago's.

Bankers Ask New Laws

Those New York interests which a short time ago were in conference with western bankers to consider means which could be generally applied to prevent misrepresentations by mercantile borrowers of money as to their condition and responsibility in the matter of commercial loans have by no means dropped the subject. They are just now strongly urging legislation that will render it dangerous for merchants and others to obtain credit, money and other property by false statements of financial condition. The Chamber of Commerce of the state of New York is now strongly urging that assembly bill No. 1186 and senate bill No. 702, which are pending in the New York legislature, be passed and approved by the governor. These bills make it a penal offense for one to issue any false financial statement in the negotiation of commercial paper.

Competition has carried the rate below  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent for exceptional names, while  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent has been the usual rate in this city. Country banks prefer bills affording a higher yield; the supply of these has been fairly large, but not sufficient to meet the demand so that at out-of-town centers also discounts have not infrequently been shaded. One of the most acceptable innovations that have taken place under the administration of the new secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, S. S. Pratt, is the publication by the chamber of a monthly bulletin, a volume of 32

If the directors act favorably, the question will be put up to the stockholders at a special meeting to be held June 14th. The new stock will be offered to stockholders pro rata at par, the privilege accruing to stockholders of record June 30th.

The committee has also recommended that in case its plan is approved, an extra dividend on the present capital stock of 50 per cent be declared payable August 16th to stock of record June 30th.

The Equitable Trust Company

The stockholders of the Equitable Trust Co. and the Bowling Green Trust Co. on Wednesday ratified the agreement of merger entered into by the directors of the two companies and approved by state superintendent of banks, Clark Williams. The name of the new company will be the Equitable Trust Co.

Savings Banks Gain Many New Accounts

That the banks have plenty of money at their disposal at the present time is probably no more a sign of returning confidence and increased commercial activity than is the fact that within the last few months the savings banks of Greater New York have gained hundreds of depositors who never before placed their surplus earnings in safe keeping.

The leading savings banks state that the marked increase in deposits likewise applies to people who have had accounts for years, and whose savings during the period of industrial depression were drawn upon extensively until the better conditions of the present permitted of replenishment. In the majority of cases where lack of work compelled taking money from the banks, however, the depositors left sufficient of a nucleus on which to build anew.

Maiden Lane Savings Bank Gains New Accounts

"We have found a noticeable increase of new depositors here," said an official of the Maiden Lane Savings Bank to THE CHICAGO BANKER correspondent. "Located as we are in the office district, much of our patronage comes from young people of both sexes. It is remarkable what a lesson the recent depression has been to them. It appears as if with returned prosperity all are anxious to make their little weekly savings accumulate with the utmost regularity from pay day to pay day. This is a phase characteristic of present day savings bank transactions. The lesson goes home that in time of peace be prepared for war, and those who were fortunate enough to have a surplus fund when dull times were around, have evidently inspired many of their friends to follow their example and put something by. No matter if the great prosperity predicted is still a little backward, there is sufficient evidence that people have work when they can put money in bank regularly."

South Dakota Deposit Law

South Dakota banks are preparing to operate under a new deposit guaranty law, which makes participation in the measure voluntary, in contrast with that of Oklahoma, which is compulsory.

The law provides for a state association of incorporated banks to be managed by a board of commissioners consisting of the state auditor, the treasurer, and the public bank examiner. The minimum membership is one hundred banks or more, admission to which is on approval of the public examiner. The incorporation must have an aggregate capitalization of $1,000,000 among the banks represented, so that a hundred banks of $10,000 capital each on the average will be sufficient to comprise such an association, according to the commercial West. Capitalization is the basis of membership fees ranging from $10 to $170.

The annual premium payable into the insurance fund is derived from a one mill levy on deposits, which may be reduced whenever the condition of the funds permits or advanced to meet deficiencies to a maximum of four mills a year. The premium thus provided for is based on the average daily deposits of the last three months previous to the payment of premium. In the event of a bank's insolvency the public examiner certifies the names of the claimants and amounts to the state auditor who issues warrants upon the fund provided. The law goes into effect July 1, 1909.

Banking News, Milwaukee—Wisconsin District

W. E. Cole, president and founder of the Cole Savings Bank of Fond du Lac, treasurer of the Eastern Wisconsin Railway and Light Company, president of the Title & Abstract Company, died at 9:30 o'clock Sunday night at his home on Hoyt Street after a short illness. Mr. Cole was taken ill with pneumonia about a week ago but attended to his business until the latter part of the week when his illness became so serious that he was compelled to remain at home.

Mr. Cole was born at Big Island, Orange county, N. Y., September 19, 1844. He spent his early boyhood in Middletown, N. Y. and in New York City, coming here in 1868. For a short time he was engaged in the hat and cap business and later became general city ticket agent. About twenty-five years ago he established a safe depository here and in 1890 the company was incorporated as the Cole Savings Bank.

Mr. Cole was closely associated with H. F. Whitcomb of Milwaukee, who is one of the large stockholders in the Eastern Wisconsin Railway & Light Company. He was also heavily interested in many important real estate deals which have been consummated since the removal of the Wisconsin Central car shops to this city nine years ago.

Wisconsin Bankers Association News

A party by the name of Paul S. Weil, height 5 feet 10 inches, slight build, age 24, smooth face, blond complexion, blue eyes, is making fraudulent drafts on Mrs. F. S. Weil, and the Port Washington State Bank, Port Washington, Wis. He generally has some one endorse the draft, gets the cash, and then disappears to turn up in some other locality. If he is located, kindly advise this office.—M. A. Graettinger, Secretary.

Customs Receipts Fall Off

While the receipts at the Milwaukee customs house show an increase for the month of March as compared with March, 1908, those for the first nine months of the fiscal year, ending March 31st, show a decrease.

The decrease is ascribed to the financial panic by customs officials, and the increase to the return of prosperity.

Receipts during the month of March amounted to $73,699.89. Those for March, 1908, were $63,883.64, the increase amounting to $9,816.25. Receipts for the nine months ending March 31st, were $540,121.60, a decrease from the receipts for the corresponding months of the previous fiscal year of $85,837.55, or 14 per cent.

In and Around Pittsburgh

By

LATIMER T. LAWTON

The Second National of Pittsburgh moved Saturday afternoon from its old home, at Liberty Avenue and Ninth Street, to the Westinghouse Building on Penn Avenue, where it will remain until the bank's handsome new home is completed. The new quarters for the Continental Trust Company in the Columbia National Building are rapidly nearing completion.

First National of Birmingham

The First National of Birmingham has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 4 per cent.

The Washington National

The Washington National of Pittsburgh will erect a new bank building.

The Columbia National

The directors of the Columbia National of Pittsburgh have elected John A. Bell as vice-president, succeeding F. A. Griffen, who resigned. Mr. Bell is vice-president of the Colonial Trust Company and Pittsburgh Coal Company, and is president of half a dozen suburban banks.

The Keystone Bank of Scranton

The Keystone Bank, of Scranton, of which Col. R. A. Phillips is president and W. B. Layton cashier, has moved into a handsome new home at Maine Avenue and Jackson Street.

Trust Company's Big Check

The Commonwealth Trust Company of Pittsburgh, through its real estate department, delivered to the city treasurer a check for $308,000, covering city taxes for the year on properties managed or owned by the Commonwealth Company. This is the largest check for a year's taxes ever paid the city by a trust company.

Second National of Meyersdale

A new bank building is to be erected for the Second National of Meyersdale.

West Chester Bank Merger

Stockholders of the Farmers National of West Chester have voted to sell their stock to the Farmers & Mechanics Trust Company, of the same place. Within the next sixty days the Farmers & Mechanics Trust Company will take over all the assets of the Farmers National, assume all the liabilities and retire the bank stock at $115 per share. Phillip M. Sharpless is president of the trust company. David Sharpless, president of the bank, will remain with the trust company as a member of the board of directors.

J. E. Rovensky Elected Assistant Manager

John E. Rovensky has been elected by the directors of the First National of Pittsburgh as assistant manager of the foreign department. Mr. Rovensky has been connected with the bank for eight years, and is familiar with the duties of his office. He is a popular member of the educational committee of Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking, and is deeply interested in the work of that institution.

Want to Amend Law

A bill is before the state legislature providing for an amendment in the Pennsylvania building laws permitting the erection of non-fireproof buildings four stories high. The present law stipulates that all buildings over three stories must be of fireproof construction.

H. P. Taylor & Co. Moves

H. P. Taylor & Co. has moved to their remodeled quarters on the fourth floor of the Columbia Bank Building. A number of changes have been made which facilitate the transaction of business. The operating force has been enlarged and reorganized under the direction of President Taylor.

First National of Hagerstown

Whether the First National of Hagerstown, will continue to do business in its present building, or whether it will tear down the old structure and replace it with a modern six-story building, with every up-to-date convenience, are questions that will be decided next Wednesday by Judge Morris in the United States District Court in Baltimore.

The bank's troubles began when the board of directors decided that the present home of the institution is antiquated, lacking in the necessary facilities and behind the times generally, and that the old building should be succeeded by a new one, as described.

All was going well with the project when Lewis P. Wingert, a stockholder, applied for an injunction restraining the board of directors and officials from tearing down the old three-story structure.

Although the new building is to cost about $65,000, it is contended that the expenditure will in no wise injure the interests of Wingert or any other stockholder.

Safe Deposit Box not Immune

Judge Frazer has established a precedent in Common Pleas Court No. 2 affecting safe deposit boxes. His decision, which is unique, was forced by the action of Attorney Herman F. Ruoff, representing the Western Savings and Deposit Bank, which held a judgment against C. O. Lappe.

The judge holds that the sheriff can take charge of the contents of any safe deposit box any time a creditor can learn where there are goods or money to attach. It is the first action of its kind ever taken in Allegheny County, and while the order was vacated later in the day, a settlement having been effected between the parties to the action, and no Supreme Court decision is available in this instance, lawyers who heard of the decision say they believe it will stand a test in the higher courts.

Many New Oklahoma Banks

Thirty new state banks have organized in Oklahoma since February 5th, exceeding all former records in the state, and 137 since the guaranty deposit law went into effect a year ago, a total now of 607.

The rush to organize now with small capital stock is great because of the new law that goes into effect June 12th establishing a sliding scale of capital in proportion to the population of towns and cities, and more than double the amount of capital required under the present law.

The Bank of De Smet

O. P. Williams, of Mitchell, has been appointed as cashier of the Bank of De Smet (S. D.).

Des Moines, April 8.—The three bills for revision of the Iowa banking laws as proposed by the house of representatives of the Iowa legislative committee on banking passed the house without serious opposition. The statute which completely revises the laws provides among other things for two important changes from the statute as it has been on the statute books. One is that no bank may hereafter accept deposits in excess of twelve times its capital stock. The other is that hereafter Iowa savings and state banks may invest in real estate outside of Iowa up to 40 per cent of its appraised value. By the terms of the second of bank revision acts, there will be six bank examiners in Iowa instead of five and the salary remains at $1,800 although efforts were made to increase this salary to $2,000. The amount that shall be paid by banks for the support of the examiners ranges from $15 for banks of $25,000 and under up to $50 for banks with a capital stock of over $150,000.

House Defeats Grier Bill

The House defeated the Grier bill to transfer the state banking department from the auditor of state to the treasurer. The bill to abolish school treasurer was also defeated. Bankers from all parts of Iowa opposed this bill and without a doubt their influence resulted in its defeat. The Ward bill providing for a 4 mill tax on moneys and credits was the third to be defeated. The house passed the Harding bill for a tax revision commission of five to spend the next two years in revising the Iowa tax statutes. The bill to authorize state and savings banks and loan and trust companies to act in a fiduciary capacity was recommended for passage. The senate and house passed the Fitchpatrick bill requiring corporations to make annual reports and pay $2 filing fee yearly.

The McDonald Bill

One of the most important bills of the session of the legislature passed the house of representatives in the McDonald bill which exempts municipal and school bonds from taxation. But the bill was amended before it passed to provide that the stock of banks, invested in these bonds, cannot be exempted from taxation on that account and it was further amended so that the exemption applies only to those bonds issued in the future.

To Have Three National Bank Examiners

Coincident with the announcement of the appointment of John L. Large of the First National at Rock Valley as national bank examiner, it is announced from Washington that Iowa is to have three national bank examiners hereafter in place of two. Mott Bostwick and N. E. Haugen, together with Mr. Large, formerly president of the state association, will be on the job hereafter. The comptroller of the currency has given it out that political patronage and congressional recommendation will count for naught in these appointments and the office of national bank examiner is thus taken out of politics.

County Funds

The question of the county treasurer's right to deposit county funds in a bank without the consent of the board of supervisors has been raised in the adjudication of the affairs of the First National of Carroll, recently closed by the comptroller of the currency. The Illinois

Surety Company, and the Empire Surety Company have sued Carroll county, receiver Fowler and others for some $25,000. They are on the bonds of County Treasurer McAllister who had deposited county funds in the state bank and declare that the treasurer was without authority in depositing the money without consent of the supervisors. Also that the bank had no right to accept the money. They file their suit in federal court and ask an adjudication.

The Dow City Bank

Assistant Cashier Wiggins of the Dow City Bank arrived at the institution just in time to prevent the destruction of the building by fire. The bank had closed at the usual time and was left in an apparently safe condition. The assistant cashier, opening the door that evening, was astonished to discover a bonfire in the middle of the room near the bookkeeper's desk. He gave the alarm but before assistance arrived, the incipient conflagration had been "doused" by him without serious damage. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Municipal Government Plan

The Des Moines plan of municipal government which has attracted attention every place has rounded up its first year. The results from a financial standpoint have justified all expectations for the city is $128,000 richer than a year ago when the old mayor-city council gave way to the new commission plan of government which places Des Moines in the hands of five commissioners elected at large. The amount on hand when the old council retired was $205,141.83 as against $333,000 now on hand. But not only has the new plan saved the city money but the affairs of the city have been better conducted than ever before while the improvements have been far ahead in a municipal way in any previous period in the city's growth.

Iver Iverson, Jr., Elected Cashier

Iver Iverson, Jr., has been elected cashier of the First National at Northwood, to succeed N. E. Haugen, who resigned to become national bank examiner. Mr. Iverson has been county auditor of Worth county but will resign to accept the position offered him by the bank. Before he was elected county auditor eight years ago, Mr. Iverson was in the Emmons National. He is well known among Iowa athletes as "Silent Iver," captain of one of the best football teams that Iowa University ever had, some ten or twelve years ago.

The Security Savings Bank of Cedar Rapids

The Security Savings Bank of Cedar Rapids shows how steady has been its growth since it was established in 1889, in that to-day it is occupying a substantial home of its own. ### Sends His Own Messages

A. C. Miller, cashier of the Home Savings of Des Moines, and one of the best known bankers of Iowa, is probably the only bank cashier in the country who sits at his desk and talks to all parts of the country on a telegraph instrument. Before he went into the banking business, Miller was telegraph operator. He soon grew disgusted with having to wait on slow messenger boys, so he installed a telegraph instrument at his private desk, connected it with the Western Union and now when he wants to send a telegram or a cablegram, there is no delay. He sends it himself.

New Book by Warwick Deeping

"Bertrand of Brittany" was a fine novel and made Warwick Deeping famous. His new book, "Mad Barbara," far surpasses it in human interest if not in style and diction. It is the real thing in blood and thunder, with a suave and graceful ending after wild tempests and sanguinary encounters. Barbara is the daughter of a woman whose lover has murdered Barbara's father. The girl finds a clue to the murderer; and thereafter, besides cherishing her grief for her father, she becomes "Mad Barbara"—silent, sullen and a source of danger to the two who share the secret. Among a party of revelers John Gore, son of the murderer, comes to Barbara's rescue, fighting a duel with a hot-headed young lord who has attempted to kiss her. Eventually the elder Gore hides the girl in a lonely country house in charge of two brutal servants, who cruelly mistreat her, and Captain John, who has been told a lying tale by his father, sets out on the road to seek his missing sweetheart. Then the furies wake, terror stalks abroad, adventure runs riot and gore splashes everywhere. Yet in the end all is well.

Published by the Harper Brothers, New York, at $1.50.

J. L. Butin, president, and F. E. Osterhaut, cashier, of the First National of Madera, Cal., recently purchased the building which the bank now occupies and are going to remodel it about August 1st and make an up-to-date building out of it.

C. C. Cuyler

The Chicago daily papers must have been misinformed when they repeatedly stated that N. W. Harris & Co. of this city had purchased the United States Mortgage & Trust Co., of New York, for the official announcement reads that "The Mutual Life Insurance Company has agreed to sell 4,536 shares of stock of the United States Mortgage & Trust Company to Cornelius C. Cuyler, the head of the firm of Cuyler, Morgan & Co., and Mr. Cuyler was to-day elected president of the company."

"While the sale is made to Mr. Cuyler, and we know only him in the matter, we understand that he has associated with him a number of friends, who will take an active part in the affairs of the company. Among them are T. De Witt Cuyler of Philadelphia, Mortimer L. Schiff, E. B. Thomas, president of the Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., William A. Jamison of Arbuckle Bros., and Clarence H. Mackay. Arthur Turnbull has been elected vice-president of the company."

The United States Mortgage & Trust Company has a capital of $2,000,000. It is reported that a little over $400 per share was paid for the stock disposed of as against a cost price of $150 per share.

Jap Bank Closed

The Kimon Ginko, a San Francisco Japanese bank, known as the Golden Gate Bank, failed to open its doors Monday morning and a panic followed in the Japanese quarter. A big crowd of Japanese were on hand at the opening hour waiting patiently to draw their money, and when the doors did not open they grew restless and excited. The police were called to the scene to preserve order.

Kentucky Court of Appeals Decision

The Kentucky Court of Appeals held, in the case of Ripy vs. Cronan, that a real estate broker could not be held liable for representing to an intending purchaser that the owner would not accept less than the sum named by the broker for the premises, though the owner had in fact consented with him to sell at a lower figure, in the absence of any confidential relation between the broker and the intending purchaser, or fraud to prevent inquiry or investigation by such purchaser.

Signs Checks with Thumbs

Out in Cheyenne, Wyo., there is a bank which has depositors of so many different nationalities that it has found it necessary to require identification by some means other than a written signature. The bank officials have, therefore, made it a rule that its foreign depositors must sign their checks with the imprint of their right thumb, in addition to their written signatures. Railroads in Wyoming have brought in, as laborers, hundreds of Asiatics, including Japanese, Chinese, Koreans, etc., while big coal mines around Cheyenne have imported many thousands of workmen from Southern Europe. Hundreds of these have made deposits with this bank, but are mostly unknown to the bank officials. Writing English but poorly, these depositors could scarcely ever duplicate their own signatures, and for the protection of the bank the officials were obliged to demand an additional identification. When a would-be depositor asks to open an account with that bank he places on file his written signature, and at the same time the impress of his right thumb is filed. Afterward when a check from this man is received at the bank it must have the thumb print attached as well as the written signature, and this thumb print must, of course, correspond with that on file in the bank's records. The thumb-print system, it may be added, is the old Chinese method of identification.

Modern Woodmen of America Sanitarium

Involving a total expenditure of more than $500,000, extensive improvements for the Modern Woodmen of America sanitarium at Colorado Springs, Colo., were sanctioned at a meeting of the national board of directors, held in Colorado Springs after an inspection of the institution last week. The second colony of 60 tents is to be erected immediately; 15 tents have already been donated by camps throughout the country. The plans include an administration building, library, amusement hall and other buildings, and a beautiful landscape scheme for the 1,000 acre tract. Work begins at once on a second reservoir. The sanitarium is to have its own milk supply, for which dairy buildings are to be erected. A tract of 100 acres is to be reserved for agriculture on a small scale for patients able to do light work. Plans are being made for a national conference of state deputy head consuls and national and state lecturers, to be held in Colorado Springs in June.

"A Gentleman of Quality"

A small army of acceptable writers has used the mistaken identity key in plots for novels. It always has the semblance of truth and every day life confirms it as easily likely to happen. In the hands of a master such as Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey it expands into a tale of wondrous beauty and infatuation. In "A Gentleman of Quality" Mr. Dey has written an absorbing tale of mystery. Although events follow so rapidly upon one another, the reader is now and then compelled to draw breath and trace back the reason underlying every trial. It is this quality of depth—a something that we feel—which makes the book the most intimately interesting mystery story of the year. It is a case of an unwilling masquerader who unknowingly follows the lead of Justice away from the bitter of crime and the sweet of love, on to a new shore and through the mazes of English aristocratic life, until he rests at last where no man can foresee who has not been with love a pioneer.

Mr. Dey's book is destined to stand out upon the literary horizon from sheer superiority of style, correctness of technique and from his complete mastery of the detail which goes to make up the successful story of to-day.

"The Man in Lower Ten"

If you were entrained and mystified by "The Circular Staircase" you ought to waste no time in jumping for "The Man in Lower Ten." Mary Roberts Rinehart's newest novel beats her old, and that's going some. The murder takes place in "lower ten" in a sleeping car in which, like the guests at an English country house, few passengers slept in their own berths. There is not any doubt but that Miss Rinehart has written a worthy successor to her thrilling novel of last season. As in her former story, in this case the crime is brought about under the most peculiar circumstances. Naturally, an innocent man is suspected and the actual facts are kept out of the reader's mind until the very end by a species of skill akin to that shown in the weird tales of Wilkie Collins, or Mrs. Anna Katherine Green.

How the murder mystery is cleared up, and with what strange and shrewd device the hero fights for liberty and his lady love—to disclose this would be unfair to expectant readers.

The story is dramatic in incident and bright in colloquy, with no little fine invention in plot and situations.

Published by Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis. Illustrations by Howard Chandler Christy.

"The King of Arcadia"

Francis Lynde who gave us "A Romance in Transit" and "The Quickening" has come out in a complete new field with "The King of Arcadia," a lively Colorado romance of the plains. The difficulty of civil engineering and successful love-making under early day difficulties in the wild furnish the theme. Breckenridge Ballard was the man to build the irrigation works under trying conditions. Stories of civil engineering are popular at present, perhaps because of the wonderful things accomplished by the quiet men who are literally moving mountains. Add to the element of vigorous, perpetual action the relieving tenderness of romance, and—there you have it! This is the secret of the quick and absorbing interest of Mr. Lynde's novel.

The Maryland Trust Co.

L. S. Zimmerman, acting president of the Maryland Trust Company, of Baltimore, and Henry J. Bowdoin, of the reorganization committee of the Houston Oil Company, have returned from St. Louis, Mo., where at a meeting of the various interests identified with the latter corporation it was determined to lift the receivership on or before April 15th, and restore the property to the stockholders.

This action practically ends litigation of one kind or another that has lasted over four years, and at the same time enhances the value of the stocks, which are largely held in Baltimore, the Maryland Trust Company being one of the largest holders. It was the interest of the Maryland Trust Company in Houston oil which contributed to the receivership of the former institution.

State Bank Chicago

The growth of the State Bank of Chicago is one of the signs of the times. Under a wise policy the bank is to advance its capital responsibility as its deposits grow. At a meeting of the directors on Tuesday it was decided to recommend to the stockholders an increase in the capital stock of the institution from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. A special meeting of the stockholders has been called for May 8th to vote on the proposed increase.

The new stock will be issued at par. Holders of the present stock will be entitled to subscribe for one share of the new for each two shares of the old standing in their names when the transfer books are closed. It is stated officially that the present dividend of 12 per cent a year will be continued on the increased amount of capital.

Deposits of the state bank are now in excess of $20,000,000. The surplus and undivided profits are about $1,400,000. The addition of $500,000 of capital at par will make the book value of the stock after the increase about $1,900,000. Shares sell at from $350 to $375.

Michigan Rich in Water Power

The report of the special legislative committee appointed to investigate water power in Michigan, is ready for submission to the house. The report says, on the authority of Professor Haydon of the national geological survey, that 21,000 horse power has already been developed in Michigan and there remains the possibility of the development of an additional 300,000 horse power. At the present rate of development, says the report, it will be possible in ten years to convert 75 per cent of the steam power of the state to water power. This, it is estimated, would save 1,200,000 tons of coal annually.

Charles L. Farrell

Creditors Lose a Million

ST. LOUIS

The first important announcement which Cashier Calfee of the Mechanics-American National, St. Louis, sent out, after donning the toga, was the purchase of a new, permanent home for this growing institution. The bank has secured the fine corner at Broadway and Locust, and will improve the building known as the Mercantile Library building, one of the finest in St. Louis.

On account of the growth of the bank, its present quarters have become entirely inadequate, and its officers have been quietly in search of a new location for over a year. President Walker Hill and the officers and directors of the bank are highly pleased in being able to secure this very desirable location. Work will begin at once on improvements, and it is expected that the bank will be able to move into its new quarters some time during the latter part of the year.

Death of Ernest C. Brown

Ernest C. Brown, assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Minneapolis, died early Wednesday, after an operation on Sunday which was one of a series made necessary by an undiagnosed attack of appendicitis years ago. Mr. Brown was a heroic, sunny soul and he was accorded several hours of consciousness for calm conference with his family before death. Mr. Brown felt that there was another chance for health and he would take it. He said he was ready for either alternative. In a long career as banker in Minneapolis, and as secretary of the Minnesota Bankers Association, Mr. Brown became well acquainted with bankers East and West. He was highly respected for his integrity.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

NELSON CHESNEY, of down by both ends of the big bridge, has a new automobile—rather he had. Parts of it he cannot accurately locate. It happened in Forest Park when he met young VanBlarcom who from long practice can hit an on-coming car on either side of the street. Charles Pasche, who was riding at first with Chesney and later rough the air, started as he supposed, by fireless for St. Joe. In reality he only went a couple of hundred feet. Chesney said he felt minded of the "Boy on the Burning Deck," or "far around him strewed the wreck." No one was hurt seriously, but the cars—well that is another story.

DURING the bankers convention in St. Louis the young Mr. VanBlarcom added several pages of scare heads to the dailies with his daring exploits at the wheel. Bankers wishing to tour safely in the St. Louis parks will do well to consult some one who may know just which part of the boulevard the young man may be using at the time.

LIVER C. FULLER, president of the Wisconsin Trust Co., Milwaukee, was in Chicago last week and believes his state will break all records but one in its attendance at the A. B. A. convention. The other time was when they met in Milwaukee in a most successful convention.

RACY & CO., Chicago, point out the second preferred of the National Railways of Mexico as likely to have a future. Looks good, and might be worth your getting the literature and lining up. Mexican government guarantees bonds and fixed charges.

PAPER published in Cleveland, in a recent article on the possibilities that lie in every for the ambitious man, referred to William Burroughs as follows:

Ever since there have been bookkeepers' additions to make errors in, trial balances have made them all sigh for some way of adding without making a mistake. Ninety-nine percent of all these bookkeepers since the year have been looking for an opportunity. But William Burroughs, a tired overworked bookkeeper, realized that right at his side, if he could only find the way, was the opportunity of a lifetime."

BANK tellers and bank bookkeepers should keep in view any new labor saving, safety insuring device. The world wants them and will pay millions to save other millions. To keep in mind the man who, to avoid the necessity of threading his shoes, invented the lacing hook, now used by millions, will help. How would a bank clock which would run slow in the mornings and fast in the afternoons do? It would be popular.

IF a labor saving device is good enough it can be sold even in backward England which hesitated so long over type-writers. The Bankers Clearing House of London has just put in 30 Burroughs' adders, and thus it goes.

WE notice by the lumber papers (since Friday last) that "Uncle Joe" is a Simon pure statesman without wrinkle. At least one glove manufacturer believes the same thing. The North American of Philadelphia, and a few other misguided publications, kindly see front page of American Lumberman for April 10th for a real portrait of Joseph Gurney Cannon, king of the (stand-pat) reformers.

LOOK Out Notice!! To Joseph Chapman, Jr., and others in the Northwest. It has come to our knowledge that one going under the name of E. J. Weiser of Dakota, Iowa and Chicago is attempting to sell stock in a "goose farm," a plan which has been worked successfully in many localities. Weiser puts up a good front, etc. Send information to G. B. C., care of the American Trust, Chicago.

THERE was a family named Knapp down at Binghamton, N. Y., with two private banks and a big publishing house on hands at the same time, and all leaning upon the depositors' money. Natural result! Worst of it is they dragged a decent enough trust company, except for association, down with them.

YES, we have one Vreeland national currency association at last. The nationals of Kansas sought the protection of this act as against the Kansas state banks which are expected to get strength from the new guaranty law. Another refuge is a proposed deposit insurance company to help hold trade.

THE Council Club's first banquet at Chicago is to be quite out of the usual course dinner affair. J. M. Hurst, fides achates to W. T. Fenton, the chairman, was the genius who designed the Illinois association banquet last fall. It was a hit of the highest kind. "Shall we bring our ladies to the banquet?" write several eligibles. "That depends," says the committeemen, "upon how many will agree to do so." To have ladies will change the whole rough draft of the banquet from a man's night of it to something more mild. This will be done if enough ladies will come. Notice the accent on the "enough."

SECRETARY INGWERSEN is busy and is being backed up by President-of-the-Club Hamilton. Mr. Fenton is chairman of the banquet committee and takes the whole matter seriously. He does his end of all association work in the same, sober, effective way. He doesn't like even to have the young-old fellows called the down-and-outers. He doesn't believe they are, or are likely to be. No man knows the exes better than Mr. Fenton, and his choice as banquet chairman was an inspiration. Let Mr. Fenton know if you want "ladies admitted."

THE inherent strength of municipal bonds lies in the imperative duty of the municipality to levy a tax upon all of the property within its limits to provide for the payment of interest and principal as they become due. This virtually amounts to a prior lien against taxes which takes precedence against all other obligations whether contracted in advance or subsequent to the issuance of the bonds.—N. W. Halsey & Co.

WHEN you get one of those beautiful peagreen $20 A. B. A. travelers' checks from Fred I. Kent make sure whether or not it is a birthday gift or only a "specimen." The specimens are like the breakfast foods which sell on their good looks.

RALPH C. WILSON, the Demosthenes of the Chicago Chapter, will in all probability be elected chairman of the national executive council A. I. E. at the Seattle convention. Already he is being congratulated.

English Banks as Executors and Trustees

By W. R. Lawson

London, April 5.—It is a matter of common knowledge that, of late years particularly, large sums of money have been misappropriated annually by private trustees, and that this malversation has resulted in great loss and suffering to those least able to bear it. On the other hand the duties and liabilities of executors and trustees have become so onerous that it has been found increasingly difficult to find private persons willing to undertake these offices. Many are lacking in the knowledge and experience necessary to enable them to efficiently discharge the obligations entailed, whilst others are deterred by the numerous risks involved.

It does not seem to have been generally known that, although in the early history of trusts it was considered that a corporate body, whilst fictionally a person, could not act as trustee (how, it was thought, could that confidence which was essentially implied be reposed in a soulless entity?), this technical rule had long ceased to exist, provided the artificial powers with which such a corporation had clothed itself permitted it to undertake duties of this kind. The public trustee act of 1906, however, concentrated attention on the possession of this function, or on the power of acquiring it, as the case might be, and on the advantages, in certain cases, of a trustee being a corporation rather than an individual. These advantages had, in fact, already been recognized by certain institutions, and in the debate on the second reading of the bill in the House of Lords, Lord Avebury pointed out that as some of our most important banks and insurance companies were prepared to act as trustees, the pressing necessity for such a bill had disappeared.

A novel feature of the public trustee act, and one directly affecting banks, is the creation of the new office of custodian trustee, an office suggested by the incorporated law society for the purpose of providing a custodian for the property and securities, leaving the management of the trust to the other trustees. The provisions of this section of the act apply to banking and insurance companies and other bodies corporate entitled to act as custodian trustees and empower them to charge fees not exceeding those approved by the public trustee as custodian trustee. The rules provide that the bodies corporate entitled to act as custodian trustees shall be any such incorporated banking or insurance or guarantee or trust company or friendly society, and any such body corporate established for charitable or philanthropic purposes as may be approved by the public trustee and the treasury. This approval may be granted subject to such conditions as the rendering by the body corporate and certification of periodical returns of business transacted and fees and other emoluments received and otherwise as the treasury may from time to time require, either generally or in any particular case.

It would appear that there was no antecedent disability with regard to an appointment of a trustee for purposes of custody only, but prior to the granting of specific privileges by this act such an office would have had to be hedged round with conditions and with limitations respecting the liabilities it carried with it, and this could have entailed lengthy and cumbersome phraseology even if a satisfactory position could have been evolved. Now, though the act itself does not fully define the position of a custodian trustee, the omission is rather in regard to the duties appertaining to the office than to its privileges.

There would seem to be at least some reason to doubt whether the term "custodian trustee," if used without any amplification in appointing a corporation which had not brought itself within the provisions of the act, would have the same legal significance and carry with it the same safeguards as when employed in respect of an institution acting under official authority. It seems likely, therefore, that most of those institutions that decide to engage in this comparatively new departure of banking will take the necessary steps to obtain official approval. Still, it is possible that in some quarters the avoidance of the regulations laid down by the treasury may be considered of sufficient importance to outweigh all arguments in favor of such a course.

It should be noticed that the limitation imposed by the public trustee act with regard to the fees of corporate bodies officially licensed to act as custodian trustees is in regard to charges in that respect only. At the same time the official fees generally have so far been adopted with slight alteration by the banks at present undertaking trusteeships. The chief point of divergence where it has been adopted is a modification of the acceptance fee of 15s. per cent on the first £1,000 of the capital value of the estate, in some instances no differentiation being made where the gross value does not exceed £20,000, and the rate in regard to such estates being fixed at 5s. per cent.

In the first annual report of the public trustee, issued in February, it is stated that applications for licenses had been made by eight banking companies. The license had been granted in six cases and two applications had been withdrawn. It would be interesting to know what led to the withdrawal in these two instances, but apparently it was either thought not necessary or not desirable to enlarge on the matter.

The following may be mentioned as some of the leading London and provincial banks which, we understand, have already announced that they are prepared to undertake this class of business or which have the matter under consideration—Lloyds, London and County, London and South Western, Parr's, Union of London and Smiths, Bank of Liverpool, Halifax Joint Stock, Lancashire and Yorkshire, Manchester and Liverpool District, Stamford, Spalding and Boston, Union Bank of Manchester, United Counties, Williams Deacon's, Wilts and Dorset. Probably these do not exhaust the list, which is steadily being extended.

Let us now consider some of the advantages to the public of the new duties they can thus find bankers willing to undertake; the difficulties with which banks will be faced; the precautions it would be well for them to adopt; and attempt to look a little into the future.

The main advantages of the appointment as trustee of a corporate body, and especially of a bank, rather than of a private individual, are:—

Readiness of access.—Tenure of office by a private person often leads to difficulties in administration from such causes as absence abroad, ill health, or mental incapacity, or, in the case of joint trustees, through their residing, from force of circumstances, in widely separated localities.

Continuity.—There is an avoidance of any necessity for new trustees on account of death or from other causes, and thus in addition to the considerable saving in connection with new deeds and transfers which would otherwise be necessary, there is an obvious benefit to the estate from continuity of management.

Experience.—The exceptional knowledge which bank officials gain in matters relating to real estate and its management, their capacity for dealing with general business, and, above all, their judgment and experience in financial affairs, render them especially fitted to deal with the intricacies and difficulties almost inseparable from the administration of a trust.

Reliability.—The periodical audit of a bank's accounts reduces the danger of fraud to a minimum, and the bank's funds being liable for any act or omission in the administration of the trust, risk of loss to the beneficiaries is removed.

Against these must be set some slight disadvantages. After all, a bank though not bound with red tape as we are afraid it is commonly supposed to be, cannot from its very nature adequately fulfil all the functions of a private individual, and wherever personal knowledge and sympathy are demanded, as, for example, in dealing with questions of maintenance and advancement, it is evident that in most cases the interests of the beneficiaries would be better looked after by a private person. The opinion has been expressed that the impersonal character of a corporation would make for more satisfactory administration, and the public trustee in the report already alluded to states that the human aspects of a case dealt with by his department are not lost sight of, but with all deference we cannot but feel that this is rather in the nature of special pleading, and that where interests of the kind instanced are involved most people will try to find a personal friend willing to undertake the duties. Similar remarks apply to the watching of investments with a view to benefiting the trust property. The daily routine of a bank is already so complex and strenuous that it seems scarcely likely that, with new duties added, and where the direct gain would be so slight, attention in this direction would be as thorough as where personal ties are the incentive, and opportunities of improving the estate or preventing loss might frequently be lost.

Looked at from the point of view of the public the case seems obvious and fairly well defined, but the effects as regards the banker are not quite clear. Of course the first thing to engage attention will be the question of organization. In the introduction of new ideas, problems requiring careful thought are always bound to be encountered, but this new kind of business is sure to accrue gradually and any shortcomings of a departmental nature will be adjusted almost imperceptibly as they arise. Unfortunately these are not the only, or even the chief, difficulties with which banks will have to be prepared to deal.

It is unnecessary to do more than state a few of the more obvious safeguards to be adopted, as these will always be fully considered in the first instance. Thus, in accordance with the judgment in In the goods of J. Martin (Times Law Reports, No. 15, vol. xx. (1904), page 257), it is not competent for a corporate body to act as co-executor; in any case in which the bank is not sole trustee, the name of the bank should come first in the appointment of trustees and be placed first in any register or book in which any stocks, shares or other investments, subject to the trust, are registered; and, save in exceptional cases, trusts should not be accepted where shares on which there is a liability would have to be held as part of the investments.

One of the first difficulties to be met will probably be the attitude of solicitors, stockbrokers and accountants towards the new departure. Notwithstanding the statements that banks have been careful to make that they will always endeavor to employ the solicitor or stockbroker nominated by the testator or settlor, or, failing such nomination, the family solicitor, it cannot well be otherwise than that business to some extent will be diverted from those who have benefited in the past, and already in some quarters expressions of resentment are heard. It will be for the banks concerned to dispel this feeling and to show that they are guided by a policy of "live and let live." It may be that in their eagerness to obtain business some unduly pushful institutions will be tempted to overstep the boundary, and, in the endeavor to save expense to their clients or for other reasons, to encroach on the legitimate field of professional men. Should any such policy be entered on, doubtless those concerned will soon be overtaken by retribution in the shape of loss of that professional support which no bank can afford to ignore.

Another problem which it will not always be easy to solve is that of discrimination in respect to acceptance of the business offered. For a considerable time banks will, of necessity, be working more or less in the dark, and it cannot but happen that cases will arise where, from the nature of the estate, it must be largely a matter of speculation as to whether its administration could, under the bank's scale of fees, be carried out profitably. However, experience is the best of schools, and the lesson of what to accept and what to reject will soon be learned.

Mention must also be made of the new responsibilities which the undertaking of executorships and of trusteeships will place upon branch managers, for it is apparently on them that the administration will largely fall. Familiarity often causes the varied knowledge demanded of them to be overlooked. Trained gradually in the numerous branches of their business from the time of their apprenticeship, they are rarely found wanting, but, thus called upon to deal with business with which many of them will be quite unfamiliar, they may not be so successful in avoiding pitfalls. It does not require a great effort of imagination, also, to conjure up visions of clamorous beneficiaries seeking to obtain concessions outside the power or the judgment of the trustee to grant, using their every means of persuasion to that end, and unrighteously indignant on failure. Altogether this new field for the branch manager will probably be found to be not exactly strewn with roses.

To what extent will banks be in request for the offices which, for good or ill, those which so lect will be prepared to accept? It is too early yet to speak at all confidently, but it must be borne in mind that there are powerful forces at work in opposition to them. First of these is, of course, the public trustee. His department will be expected to pay its way at least, and every effort will naturally be exerted to make it successful. With officials specially trained to administer trust estates and with no other duties to occupy their attention, it will have a distinct advantage over institutions whose officers are not able to thus specialize. Probably also, should there prove to be any need, means could be found to advertise the public department in ways that would not be available to a bank, and, lastly, it would seem likely that with its amount of business and with nothing else to engage its attention, it will be able to reduce its fees to a point at which banks could not profitably compete with it. Possibly, provincial institutions, especially the smaller ones where there is no necessity for reference to a distant head office, may possess a partially counterbalancing advantage, but if local assistant public trustees should be appointed, as has been suggested, even this would disappear.

Insurance companies will be other active competitors. As well equipped as banks to undertake trusteeships, their general method of acquiring business places them in a much more favorable position in this respect, at least so far as testamentary appointments are concerned. With their agents in every district actively engaged in canvassing in a way that bank managers could not adopt, they will be likely to get into touch with people to whom the equal facilities to be obtained at their bankers could not be so forcibly brought home.

Though it is notoriously unsafe to prophesy, it seems to be rather doubtful if the innovation will prove a source of any considerable profit to banks; but apparently they have been driven into it nolens volens and it will probably be found that force of circumstances will compel the more conservative institutions to follow the enterprising lead given them, for it will scarcely do for them to offer the public fewer facilities than do their competitors. For some time, no doubt, numbers will avail themselves of the opportunity held out to them by this new feature of banking, but it must not be forgotten that in many cases the conditions are such as to prohibit any bank from agreeing to act, as, for example, where a business has to be carried on. We are inclined to think that these difficulties will occur oftener than is generally expected and that the tendency, as the outcome of experience, will be for private persons to be still preferred for purposes of management and to act as executors; and, although the public trustee reports that the office of custodian trustee has not so far met with general popular acceptance, we shall not be surprised to see banks' appointments confined more and more to this sphere and to that of trustees for debenture holders and public institutions. If the question should resolve itself in this way, it would, in the opinion of many, be a result not to be deplored, since it is mainly on these lines that business of this new character can be reconciled with what has in the past been generally regarded as the legitimate scope of banking. Still, it is only the ultra-conservative who would object to the enlargement of this field if it can be achieved safely and profitably, and, as for those who have taken the step there can be no turning back the experiment will be watched with no little interest.

Great Power of French Banks in the World's Money Markets

What is the secret of the exceptional power of French banks in the international money market? It cannot be their number, for there are less than a dozen of them in the highest class. Nor can it be their vast resources, for though they excel the London banks in the amount of their paid-up capital, they are far behind them in deposits and current balances. Their financial operations may be very profitable on the whole, but occasionally they are very much the reverse. It cannot be their big profits, therefore, that they depend upon.

Their secret may be a rather complex one with a variety of factors. Financial skill, hereditary as well as personal, may count for a good deal in it. Financial organization, improving and extending all the time, is another likely factor. Enormous holdings of foreign bills, English, German, Italian and American, are powerful levers to work with on other monetary centres. The very limited demands of home industry and the relatively small amount of capital thus locked up allow a free hand for international finance.

Above all is the immense protective power of the Bank of France, with its 5,000,000,000 francs—200,000,000 sterling—of notes in circulation, and 85 per cent of metallic cover for it in the bank vaults. The value of that ubiquitous and universally trusted currency to the French people, and particularly to the French banks, is only beginning to dawn on the financial world. It is the outstanding and predominant factor in the monetary situation of France at the present day. It relieves the banks from all anxiety about domestic currency, and to that extent about domestic trade. Imagine what a load would be taken off the minds of New York bankers if national bank notes were as stable and steady as the note issues of the Bank of France.

Americans and Englishmen alike may vainly envy the French banks that unique bulwark which renders possible to them the greatest variety of credit operations, national and international.—W. R. Lawson, in Bankers' Magazine, New York.

The Express Company Hearing

John S. Miller and George Packard of Chicago will represent the bankers in their case against the express companies, April 26th, when the Interstate Commerce Commission will take testimony from the former bearing on their charge of discrimination in the transportation of money.

The commission has intimated that it will not interfere with the business of dealing in money orders, domestic and foreign exchange, letters of credit, drafts, etc., but it claims jurisdiction in the actual shipment of money.

Express companies named in the original complaint of the American Bankers Association are the American, Adams, United States, Pacific, Southern and Wells-Fargo. Bankers still hope the commission will take the broad view that what they term a banking business is conducted by these companies in violation of their legal functions as common carriers. F. I. Kent of the Bankers Trust, New York, E. D. Durham of Illinois and others who have led in the fight will be in Chicago when the hearing occurs on April 26th.

Chicago Visitors

A. H. Waite, president of the Joplin National, Joplin, Mo., visited Chicago last Tuesday. Mr. Waite is active in the affairs of the Missouri Bankers Association, and was a delegate to the Denver convention of the A. B. A. last year.

J. M. Freeman, vice-president of the Olivia State Bank, Olivia, Minn., visited Chicago last week. Mr. Freeman was accompanied by Mrs. Freeman, also by Mrs. M. J. Dowling, wife of the president, and Miss H. S. Bordewick, cashier of the State Bank.

Senator Burton on Illinois

Senator Burton of Ohio studied statistics before he made his speech on Illinois at Peoria, and there are undoubtedly many people in Illinois who do not realize, as he does, how great the state is and how promising is its future. It is not only pre-eminent in agriculture but stands second among the states as a coal producer and third as a petroleum producer. It is "far away in the lead" in the manufacture of agricultural implements, has first rank in the manufacture of railroad cars, has the greatest railroad mileage of all the states, enjoys the advantage of water transportation by way of the great lakes from the iron ore beds of the North and splendid opportunities for the development of water power.

It should be able to hold its own where it is already first, and there can be no doubt that its manufacturing industries will show a remarkable increase within a few years. Prophecies concerning Chicago to which we have referred recently apply to the state. It has fuel in enormous quantities, it can get the raw materials used in our principal manufactures with comparatively little trouble and expense, it is centrally located and enjoys extraordinary facilities for distribution. The conditions indicate that it will gain steadily on Pennsylvania and New York because it has only just started, we may say, while they are much nearer the limit of their productiveness. In the combination of agricultural and manufacturing wealth it should be able to defy competition, and while it is growing there need be no fear that its chief city will fail to keep up with the procession. —Chicago Tribune.

"Woodmen of the West"

Mr. Allerdale Grainger has produced a work—"Woodmen of the West"—which is the result of life among the lumber jacks by a talented, well educated man who is a philosopher besides. It is one of the best books of its kind ever issued and the stories center about Vancouver and dealt with the Canadian lumber question ably. The dedication line probably accounts for Mr. Grainger's refuge in the lumber camps. It reads "To my creditors affectionately"—and there is no other foreword or introduction. The illustrations are many and very fine. The characters in the camp life stories are not caricatures but from real life. Published by Edward Arnold, London.

Teter Meets the Opposition

Lucius Teter, president of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company, unexpectedly was confronted with an audience of hearty supporters of the proposed postal savings bank system on Monday night when in an address before the Fellowship Men's Club of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Sixty-fourth Street and Harvard Avenue, he expressed his objections to the institution of savings banks by the government.

Mr. Teter, who is chairman of the postal savings bank committee of the American Bankers Association, had progressed perhaps half-way through his address before he discovered the attitude of his hearers. Then he was compelled to drop the line of his address and devote more than an hour to answering questions which his remarks had brought to the minds of the audience.

Practically every bank failure in the past generation was put up to the speaker for explanation, and when the Walsh failure was mentioned a lively debate ensued. Mr. Teter asserted that the banks of Chicago effected a self-sacrifice in taking over the defunct bank. He was asked if the act was not rather one of self-preservation on the part of the bankers. Mr. Teter referred to J. Pierpont Morgan as a much abused and ill used man and praised his work during the recent financial stringency. Some of the members of the audience wanted to know if what Morgan did at that time was not another instance of self-preservation rather than the act of a philanthropist.

Mr. Teter said that the postal savings plank in the Republican platform in the last national campaign was put in very hurriedly and by men who knew nothing about it. He said that its purpose was merely to offset the advocacy of the guaranty bank system by Mr. Bryan. He declared that the "popular sound" of the postal savings bank is the cause of its support by the people.

Ohio Banking News

The Garfield Savings Bank has leased the quarters formerly occupied by the Cleveland Trust Company in the Garfield building and will make these handsome quarters the home of their main office, now located in the Colonial Arcade Building on Prospect Street. The moving of the Garfield Bank, one of Cleveland's most successful savings banks, into the Garfield Building, is very appropriate. The quarters they have secured are very fine for the purpose. Directly under the main banking room is located a very fine safety deposit vault, formerly used by the Cleveland Trust Company. This vault will be used by the Garfield Bank, which will conduct a safety deposit business.

Col. Sullivan in Oil

The Central National Bank of Cleveland has placed in its banking rooms a very handsome life-size oil painting of Colonel J. J. Sullivan, who has been president of the institution since its organization. The portrait is an excellent one and was painted by F. A. Werner, of Akron, who has done much creditable work. The hanging of the picture in the banking rooms of the Central National is a graceful and well deserved compliment to its popular chief.

Union Savings Elects

At the annual election of the officers of the Union Savings Bank and Trust Company of Cincinnati, William Cooper Procter was elected a director, succeeding Milton A. McRae, who resigned because of his frequent absence from the city. The remaining directors were re-elected. J. G. Schmidlapp was re-elected chairman of the board; Clifford B. Wright, president; A. B. Voorheis, Louis E. Miller, E. P. Stout, and Edward Senior, vice-president; R. A. Koehler, secretary-treasurer; Edgar L. Stark, trust officer. The directors are J. G. Schmidlapp, Thomas W. Allen, William H. Alms, R. A. Koehler, Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., William Cooper Procter, Louis E. Miller, W. S. Rowe, Michael Ryan, Lewis Seasongood, Edward Senior, E. P. Stout, A. B. Voorheis, M. M. White, and Clifford B. Wright. The board declared the regular quarterly dividend of 8 per cent payable at once, and declared a dividend of 35 per cent on the annual salary of each employee who had been with the bank for three years or more.

President Cincinnati Clearing House

George Guckenberger, President of the Atlas National Bank, was elected president of the Cincinnati Clearing House Association at the annual meeting. He succeeds Casper H. Rowe, of the Market National Bank. The other officers elected are W. W. Brown, of the Merchants' National, vice-president; George W. Williams, of the Second National; W. A. Lemon, of the Fifth-Third National; Thomas J. Davis, of the First National; Charles E. Wilson, of the Fourth National, and Louis Kuhn, of S. Kuhn & Sons, Committee of Management. W. D. Doble was re-elected manager.

The clearings for the fiscal year ending March 31st were $1,261,354,150, which is a decrease of 4.2 per cent under the clearings for the last fiscal year.

The first casualty company ever set afloat in Cincinnati and by Cincinnatians principally has been organized, with a capital stock of $300,000, with officers in the Second National Bank Building. Harry K. Shockley is president; Edward J. Tousey, Secretary and Treasurer; Carroll Brookfield, general manager. The company will carry liability risks in line with the big Eastern companies. The company expects to do a big local and Middle West business.

Among the directors are Charles H. Davis, president of the Second National Bank; Edward J. Tousey, Carroll Brookfield, Sumner E. Warner, Indianapolis; W. D. Henderson, Louis J. Hauck, Harry K. Shockley, John Pitman, M. E. Moch, Thomas P. Strack, and George Zehler, of Cincinnati, and Dr. David L. Kahn, of Indianapolis.

Toledo Stock Exchange

The annual meeting of the Toledo Stock Exchange elected a board of trustees consisting of E. H. Close, J. C. Bonner, L. B. Beckwith, C. L. Stacy, and Lyman Spitzer. The annual report shows that the total stocks dealt in this year amounted to 8,867 shares, as against 4,797 shares during 1908. The total sales of bonds, were $331,700, as against $126,100 during the year previous.

Cincinnati Trust not Concerned

Officials of the Cincinnati Trust Company disclaim any knowledge of a liability to them, contained in the schedule of assets and liabilities of Lamprecht Bros. & Co., the failed Cleveland concern. Louis A. Ireton, representing the bank, in a statement says that Lamprecht does not owe the Cincinnati Trust Company a cent. "One of the Lamprechts, who was interested in the canal transportation proposition out of which the Miami and Erie Transportation Company was formed, is one of eleven defendants in a mortgage foreclosure suit brought by Rudolph Kleybolte and the Cincinnati Trust Company is the mortgage trustee. That is the only possible connection. The trust company is not involved in the Lamprecht failure in any degree."

Senator Bristow Champions Nebraska Guaranty Law

Washington, D. C., April 12.—The West has grown accustomed to the sneers of the effect East in vagaries financial. Democratic vagaries especially are referred to. In this case it happens to be the new insurance of deposits law of Kansas that has been railed at by the Wall Street Journal, and has provoked a reply by Senator Joseph L. Bristow who champions the new law and the new republican doctrine. Senator Bristow has written as follows:

To the Editor of The Wall Street Journal:

In your morning edition of April 5th you have an editorial on the "National Banks and Deposit Guarantees," in which you severely criticize the legislation in a number of states, and in the last paragraph declare that "it is either a humbug or a premium on bad banking. They must wait for fools to learn by experience." I take it for granted that the writer of the article has never read the Kansas bank guarantee law, or he would not have used such language. I am not familiar with the laws of the other states, but the Kansas bank guarantee law is in substance a provision for the organization of an insurance company by the banks of Kansas for the purpose of guaranteeing their depositors, and it is organized upon the same principle of mutual insurance.

First, a bank must have been in operation one year before it is eligible for membership. Second, it must pass an examination and be certified by a bank examiner to be in first-class condition. If accepted as a member, it is assessed one-twentieth of one per cent per annum of its deposits, or so much thereof as may be necessary to maintain one-half million dollars in the state treasury as a guarantee fund for depositors in the banks that belong to the association. In addition to this, it must put up a bond of $500 for every $100,000 deposits as a pledge that it will promptly pay assessments when made. The interest on these bonds go to the bank. No deposits are guaranteed that draw more than three per cent interest. If a bank belonging to this association fails, a receiver is appointed by the state bank commissioner. He issues to each depositor a certificate of indebtedness bearing the legal rate of interest in Kansas, and proceeds to wind up the affairs of the bank. After the proceeds of the bank have been exhausted and payment made to its depositors, then the difference between the assets of the bank and its liabilities is paid by the state bank commissioner from the guarantee fund.

At any time that a bank violates any of the state banking laws, or departs from sound banking principle, the state bank commissioner is authorized to take charge of the bank and wind up its affairs. To avoid danger from a panic, assessments on the banks are limited to not more than five in any one year, making the maximum assessment one-fourth of one per cent per annum. Carefully compiled statistics in our state show that such assessments are ample to meet the losses, from the record of those that have heretofore occurred in Kansas banking institutions. It can not be justly said, therefore, that this is a visionary, impracticable, or unjust law. It is the same as any other kind of mutual insurance, only it is much safer than life insurance. If a life insurance company accepts an applicant, he must pass an examination by a competent physician, showing him to be in first-class physical condition, with no organic weaknesses. But thirty days after he has been accepted he may, by careless exposure, take a cold, resulting in pneumonia, or ultimately bring on pulmonary trouble, or he may invite disease by other careless habits, yet he cannot be put out of the company; while the banker, if he departs from the strict and proper rules of banking, may be put out of business. So this kind of insurance is not so precarious as life insurance.

The necessity for the insurance of deposits is the same as the necessity for all other kinds of insurance. We insure our houses, stocks of merchandise, etc., because we think it good business policy to pay so much per annum rather than run the risk of suffering the great loss which fire would bring to us. A bank failure in a small community is a great calamity to that community, and when the community can be protected against such a calamity at very small expense, isn't it good judgment to give it such protection? The state, in the Kansas law, assumes no responsibility except the administering of this trust through its banking department. Under the circumstances, it seems to me that the closing paragraph in your editorial was unjust as far as it applies to the bank guarantee law of Kansas.

JOSEPH L. BRISTOW.

Washington, April 6, 1909.

It is believed here that Kansas is very much in earnest and that her new law will so be amended that not even a clever U. S. attorney-general can find plausible objections to permitting national banks to participate. It is a matter of principle with many bankers in Kansas, and of meeting the competition of neighboring states with the rest. Senator Bristow is considered an able advocate and quite loyal to the cause of guaranty.

New York Banking and News Letter

By J. R. MORGAN

The committee appointed by Governor Hughes to investigate methods of stock and commodities trading in the New York financial district has finished its inquiry and will hold no more hearings of any kind. Its report will be ready for submission about April 24th.

The document will not contain any sensational recommendations. Some of the members of the governing committee of the stock exchange said to-day that the disclosures of the investigation would not be adverse to the exchange.

New York State Banks Report

A decrease of $13,295,484 in deposits and $38,078,867 in resources of the state banks of the state of New York at the close of business March 24th last, as compared with their reported condition on November 27th, last, is shown in a statement made public by Clark Williams, superintendent of banks. The decrease may be attributed to some extent, to the fact that in November two hundred banks reported, while 198 submitted figures in March.

The total deposits on March 24th were $458,390,046, as against $471,685,530 on November 27th. The resources on March 24th were $614,707,421, as against $576,628,554 on November 27th.

The loans and discounts on March 24th are given as $321,510,986, an increase of $3,278,224.

The Knapp Banks Fail

The Binghamton Trust Company, capitalized

at $300,000, and Knapp Bros., private bankers, having offices in Deposit and Callicoon, N. Y., have suspended.

In a statement President Chas. J. Knapp, of the Binghamton Trust Company, said that the suspension of the Binghamton company followed a meeting of the board of directors, at which time it was decided to place the institution in the hands of the state banking department.

Chief Examiner M. W. Hutchins took charge of the trust company. Mr. Knapp said that this action was taken owing to the prospective suspension of business by the firm of Knapp Bros., in Deposit and Callicoon, in which Mr. Knapp is heavily interested.

Mr. Hollister was born in Brattleboro, Vt., and came to New York as a young man. He was a member of the Seventh Regiment at the time of the Civil War. Making an early success as a banker and railroad operator, he joined the stock exchange in the days of the old open board, in 1869.

An important change on La Salle Street last week was the election of Howard F. Gillette to the position of president of Merrill, Cox & Co., succeeding Fred G. Merrill, who retires. Mr. Gillette for some time past has been Western manager of W. O. Gay & Co. The policy remains the same, and the company will continue to deal in high-class commercial paper, making a specialty of packers' notes.

E. B. Tomlinson was re-elected secretary, and Averill Tilden was elected treasurer.

Michigan Banking News

By W. T. FOSTER.

J. H. Johnson, president of the Peninsular Savings Bank, is back at his desk to-day, after four weeks' vacation in South Carolina and her southern points.

Mr. Johnson took advantage of the opportunity afforded by the southern trip to investigate conditions affecting state savings banks and savings banks deposits in the South. Mr. Johnson is president of the savings bank section of the American Bankers Association and at division of the organization is at present concerned with the question of uniform laws, governing state savings banks, and also the question of the segregation of savings bank deposits.

"There was some doubt in my mind as to whether the South was ready for such uniform measures, but I find after thorough investigation, that it is," said Mr. Johnson this morning. Conditions in that section of the country are vastly different from what they are in the North and West. In some of the southern states for instance, the savings banks do not do a dollar on real estate. Cotton forms the backbone of the business generally. Many southern cities, however, are progressing rapidly along northern ideas."

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Who is to be the new bank examiner for Minnesota is a debated question among the bankers of the state as well as among business men interested in the promotion of sound banking. As soon as the bill passed the legislature creating the department rumor picked up the name of Albert L. Roth, teller of the Second National, as the man for the place. Whoever he is will get a salary of $5,000. Governor Johnson is said, however, to have given it out that the man will come from the country.

By the new Senator Thorpe bill, taking effect at the end of the fiscal year, the examiner will have nine assistants to be paid $2,500 each, and a contingent fund of $15,000. The salary appropriation in total is $36,000. Public Examiner A. Schaefer is supposed to be opposed to the change, which will result in a reduction of the regular examiner's force.

Examination fees will be paid under the law as follows: Banks of the first class, with $10,000 to $15,000 capital stock, will pay $25 a year; banks of the second class, with $15,000 to $25,000, will pay $30; banks of the third class, with $25,000 to $50,000, will pay $40. Those with $50,000 to $75,000 capital are to pay $50, and those with over $75,000 will pay $75 a year. There are 307 banks of the first class in the state, 150 of the second, and 75 of the third.

Better Bank Examination

The passage of the Thorpe bill is considered a long step toward better bank examination in Minnesota. It takes from a department that is already overworked and handicapped by insufficient appropriation a most important work of supervision. It will divide the examinations according to congressional districts, confining the work in certain lines and putting it in charge of men especially qualified to examine banks, both by experience in banking and through acquaintance with conditions local to the districts.

The Weis bill authoring state banks to maintain savings banks along prescribed lines has passed the house. The G. W. Buck bill providing that no bank may be organized with less than $50,000 capital in cities of 50,000 population has passed. Another Thorpe bill providing that when banks are insolvent their affairs shall be administered by the state banking department and not by the courts was passed. Senator W. H. Putnam's measure covering deposits of state, county and city money and the security for it was passed. It provides that, in place of a surety bond with heavy rates therefore banks holding public moneys may deposit state, county or city bonds which they hold as investments, with the treasurers as security.

F. E. Holton, cashier of the Northwestern National, had calculated that with a fixed bond of $200,000 required in cases, and with the amount of money carried on deposit, which is varying, and with interest rates on the decline and surety bond rates going up, the banks, instead of profiting by public deposits, were losing on them.

One of the reasons for the passage of the bill was that in calling for surety bonds no allowance was made for the reliability of the banks. In the discussion of the bill by the state, county and city officials with the bankers, the bankers finally said that they would have to cut the rates of interest they were paying on public moneys, or refuse to accept the deposits.

F. M. Prince Quoted

F. M. Prince, president of the First National of Minneapolis, says that there is evidence of firmness in the money market that is quite noticeable and indicative of an improvement in local conditions. He added that it is true that it is unusually quiet at the present time, but good signs of spring activity are to be seen in every direction in the northwest.

C. S. Hulbert, vice-president of the Swedish American National, who is at Santa Monica, Calif., has resigned as city treasurer of Minneapolis.

J. F. Rosenwald's bill punishing for "burglary with explosives" with imprisonment of from 25 to 40 years, a measure backed by the bankers, was voted down in the house at St. Paul. It was resurrected, however, and amended so as to make the imprisonment ten years. With this change the bill was passed.

Ivor Chambers has been made assistant treasurer of the Minnesota Loan and Trust company. He has been connected with the company for twenty years or more and has paid especially attention to the mortgage loan business.

C. T. Jaffray Honored

C. T. Jaffray, vice-president of the First National of Minneapolis, has been elected director in the Wisconsin Central railway, which has been absorbed by the Soo line, property and name, through long lease. J. S. Pillsbury, one of the famous Pillsbury flour family, and man of capital, has been elected director also.

Assessing Hamline State Bank Stock

The receiver for the Hamline State Bank, the Northwestern Trust Company of St. Paul, has applied to the district court to levy an assessment of 100 per cent on all holding stock within a year of the insolvency proceedings. The same company filed reports on claims against the State Bank of St. Paul and the Citizen's Savings bank. The report for the former institution shows claims aggregating $112,196 of which $101,634 have been allowed, and claims against the latter bank of $103,866. The minimum assets are $70,000 for the state bank. Through assessment and appreciation of the estimate of assets it is expected to pay 11.

The Group Meetings

The annual convention of Minnesota Group No. One and Wisconsin Group No. Seven will be held June 3d and 4th at Winona. A banquet will be a feature of the occasion. "Guarantee of Bank Deposits" will be the subject of an address to be made by a leading banker of Wisconsin, to be invited. The arrangements committees of the two groups held their preliminary meeting last week in Winona.

J. A. Latta, vice-president of the Northwestern National, addressed the Minneapolis chapter of bank clerks Tuesday night. His subject was "How to Invest the Funds of a Bank." B. F. Meurling of the Northwestern National gave a reading. Officers were placed in nomination and delegates to the Seattle convention were selected.

Orde Off on Eastern Trip

George F. Orde, cashier of the First National of Minneapolis, has started for a Southern and Eastern trip. He went direct to Virginia. Mr. Orde will return by way of New York early in May.

A. A. Crane, vice-president of the Northwestern National, has returned to his desk after a period of parotid inflammation.

New Northwest Banks

New Northwestern banks have been formed as follows: Bank of Delavan, Minn., capital

$10,000; incorporators, David L. Evans, Thomas J. Lien, and others.

First State of Hill City, Minn., incorporators, Thomas Brusegaard of St. Paul; R. L. Abramson of Hill City, Julius Rosholt and J. S. McLain of Minneapolis.

First State of New England, North Dakota, capital $10,000; incorporators, C. L. Merrick, J. J. Murphy and A. L. Murphy of Napoleon.

The First State of St. Joseph, Minn., and the Granite Falls Bank, Minn., have amended their articles of incorporation increasing directors from three to five in number.

The Security State of Brainerd, Minn., which closed its doors two months ago, has reopened for business. An assessment of $100 a share has been paid by George Storck of Earlham, Iowa, father of the cashier. The reorganized bank is officered as follows: President, George Storck; vice-president, H. J. Hage of Deadwood, S. D.; cashier, E. A. Storck.

The attorney-general of North Dakota will start suit against the sureties of the First National of Rugby and the Barton State Bank to obtain refund of the state's money. The banks are closed because of alleged defalcation.

Wisconsin Convention on Boat

Secretary M. A. Graettinger of the Wisconsin Bankers announces that "owing to the overwhelmingly favorable expressions of opinion on the excursion ideas for the convention, it was found that the Steamer "Carolina" would not be able to accommodate all those who desire to participate. We have therefore engaged the Steamer "Virginia" and will advise you full particulars later."

"We are in receipt of advice from La Crosse that a party representing himself to be C. M. Barrett, recently cashed a draft drawn on Barrett & Zimmermann, South St. Paul, which proved to be a forgery. He is described as follows: Age 30 years, weight about 150 pounds, height about five feet seven inches, sandy complexion, clean shaven."

New Wisconsin Legislation

Another bill, known as 521 S. has been introduced in the Wisconsin state legislature by the committee on banks and insurance, which adds a new section to the statutes providing that when a deposit has been made in the names of two persons, payable to either party, or the survivor, such deposit, or any part thereof, or any interest or dividend thereon, may be paid to either of said persons, whether the other be living or not, and the receipt of the person so paid shall be sufficient release to the bank for any payment so made.

New Bank Elects Officers

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Central Bank, of Eureka Springs, Ark., Cleo Lynn, of Pierce City, Mo., was elected cashier, succeeding L. L. Bland, who has held that position since the opening of the bank. Mr. Lynn has taken stock in the institution. Mr. Bland will remain as assistant cashier.

Opportunity in Illinois

There is a present opportunity in Illinois to make banking and business more secure in placing on the statute books at Springfield the proposed new law to punish adequately the obtaining of credit by making false statements. The Booth case is the only "horrible example" which might be quoted, but every bank closet in the state could trot out a skeleton if needed. New York is pushing such a bill and the subject is up in other state legislatures. The bill which ought to pass is one which would make the obtaining of credit by false pretenses a criminal act, and punishable as such, equally with obtaining money or other property directly by false pretenses, and the session ought not to end without its enactment in the penal code.

A large amount of loaning is done by banks, directly or through note brokers, upon commercial paper, much of it bearing a single signature, and with no security but the general credit of the borrower based upon the business he is doing. There has been a highly developed credit system built up to meet this important branch of loaning. Borrowers are required to sign a statement regarding their assets and liabilities, the extent and condition of their business, etc., on forms provided by the loaning institution in every reputable Illinois bank.

Such statements are often verified or supplemented by information or testimony from other sources, but much reliance must be placed upon their accuracy and truthfulness. To obtain credit from a bank or from any lender by false statements regarding one's property or business is no better in morals or business ethics than obtaining money or getting possession of property by false pretenses, for the sole use of the credit is to obtain money or the possession of property. It is only a means to that end. As the law stands, making false statements in these applications for loans upon personal or firm or corporation notes is not criminal, and the obtaining of actual property by what are technically false pretenses directed to that purpose, or what can be construed as larceny, must be proved in order to inflict any penalty. Banks in Chicago have had many losses owing to the looseness of the present statutes.

The proposed bill is a simple one, and is not only desired by banks and loaning institutions for their own safety, but it has the formal approval of the Credit Men's Association which supervised its preparation for the protection of the business community generally against the evil of obtaining credit by false pretenses and thus weakening the system of confidence upon which business must be so largely carried on. It declares the making of false statements by any individual for himself, his firm or a corporation for which he acts, regarding his or its business or financial condition, to a banking or lending concern, for the purpose of procuring a loan or credit or the extension of credit to be a felony punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both. The language is made explicitly to cover the offense in its various forms, but this is the substance of it; and there can be no doubt that the fraudulent obtaining of credit in the manner that it is proposed to make criminal is a serious offense for which an adequate penalty should be provided. It will be no worse morally than it is now, but it will be placed in a category that will stamp it with the ignominy it deserves and deter the tempted from being guilty of it.

This legislation is being aided by the law committee of the A. B. A., and all bills in every state, nearly, have had the approval of Thomas B. Paton, the chief counsel of the association. Illinois has an opportunity which should not be lost.

Influence of Republican Papers

If the senate pay no more attention to the united and oft repeated demands of the republican party press for a sane tariff reduction—a downward reduction—than did the house, its influence, except upon the voter, will be gravely questioned. Time was when great editors were called in council before each important party event. Now they are ignored, not by a rambunctious president, as may have been, but by a calmly deliberative body of the people's representatives. Tariff framing is always a delicate and thankless task, and the most difficult piece of work in this field which was even performed by any congress is that which Mr. Payne and his associates have just passed along to the other chamber. Mr. Aldrich has said the senate committee will report a bill which will meet the popular demand. The house is where popular demand ought to get a hearing but this time the tables are completely reversed.

It will be interesting to compare a photograph of the Payne Tariff bill before it runs the gauntlet of the Senate with one taken after that thrilling adventure.—Chicago "Daily News."

Perhaps if the "proof" does not satisfy President Taft he may demand a new "sitting." If the present "kind treatment" methods of the President are to continue the senate as well as the house must reciprocate. Congress seems to get on better without too much advice from the executive, and the people like to be able to say we have congress, the courts, and the executive departments of government all in working order with no domination from either.

If the senate inflicts a tariff bill upon congress which Mr. Taft thinks is breaking faith with his and his party's pledges to the public, it is a safe guess that a veto will be the result. The big, quiet man who rules rather than bullies at the White House is a man of courage—real courage—not bluster. This is pleasing to the people who like dignity and strength as well as honesty and ability. The right kind of tariff bill or none is the Taft plan.

One large New York bank is reported in the daily dispatches as having employed "a special staff of experts to furnish the government currency commission with information, etc." The Payne tariff bill was almost swamped by this same crowd and the above idea will kill any banking and currency bill. The country does not mind New York or New England advices in legislation unless it is the old, offensive, pipe-line, wireless brand. This they do not want.

They will have state supervision over private banks, yet, in New York, if present plans of Governor Hughes and of the legislative committee carry out. The commission recommends that where private banks give a bond for $100,000, with a suitable penalty to guarantee compliance with the law to receive only deposits of more than $500 each, they shall be exempt from the proposed regulations, which would make all other private banks subject to supervision by the state banking department. The giving of a bond by the "big" privateers would also put them under supervision if their compliance with the guaranty bond ever came in question. This was not the intent in the campaign to protect "ignorant foreigners," but looks like the only possible outcome, with better protection to all ignorant depositors whether foreign or American.

It is the largest of its kind in the world. I have spent thirty years of constant effort and search in bringing it to its present state of perfection. I can truthfully say it has no equal in any private or public museum, not even excepting the United States Government Museums. I offer it by publicly advertising it, hoping some American will purchase it for an American Museum. For this reason I will make a lesser price to an American purchaser than to a foreign purchaser. I can easily sell it abroad, as representatives of several foreign museums have inspected it with a view to purchasing. It, however, is of greater value to the United States, as it is a complete history of American paper moneys from the year 1756 onward through the Colonial periods, thence throughout the period of wild cat and broken banks, following in perfect detail through the United Confederacy and Confederate States. It is also an illustrated record of railroading and steamboating, as well as of the art in steel engraving.

I will accept less than it is worth, and will make it a investment to an American, as it seems a shame to have it pass into a foreign museum when there is nothing in the United States, either national or private that can be compared with it. It can never be REPRODUCED or DUPLICATED, as an inspection will prove. IT SHOULD be presented to the National Museum at Washington, as what little they have is of little value as history and is very poorly classified. I should like to present it to the Museum, but am not financially able to make so munificent a gift, but I must sell it even if it goes abroad.

I shall be pleased to make an appointment to exhibit it for inspection to anyone interested, upon receipt of a request addressed to Spokane, April 15.—Bank clearings in Spokane for the first quarter in 1909 amounted to $86,810,598, against $64,003,331 for the same period in 1908, a gain of 35 per cent. Clearings in March totaled $31,549,362, breaking all previous record, a gain of 37 per cent over March, 1908, when the total was $23,052,488. The clearings for March, 1907, the banner year in the history of the country, were $23,278,696; in March, 1906, $16,667,706, while March, 1899, yielded $4,616,002. The total for 1896 was $25,061,225. The building permits for March totaled 515, involving an estimated expenditure of $1,177,205, against 346 permits, value $587,880, a gain of 49 per cent in permits and 100 per cent in expenditure. For the first three months 824 permits, of a total value of $1,969,575, against 680 permits, value $1,190,957, in 1908 showing gains of 21 per cent in permits and 65 per cent in expenditures. The feature of the permits issued in March is that none was for more than $50,000. There was an average of $2,286, showing that most of the building was for homes. Post-office receipts show a gain of 12.4 per cent for March, over 1908. The total for the month was $33,937.83, against $30,170.97. For the quarter ended March 31st the receipts were $94,818.15, against $84,043.96 for the same period in 1908. For the year ended March 31st the total receipts were $366,886.05, against $332,232.36, a gain of $34,653.69.

Spokane of Solid Growth

Darwin P. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance Company, who was in Spokane a few days this week the guest of David T. Ham, of the firm of Ham, Yearsley & Ryrie, said in the course of an interview that he believes Spokane is one of the most solid cities, financially, in the Pacific Northwest. His visit was for the purpose of investigating business conditions with the intention of extending the loan department in other cities than those already covered, and it is likely, he said, that the company will do considerable business in Spokane. Speaking of the New York state law limiting the company's business to $150,000,000 a year Mr. Kingsley said he believes the lower courts which held it constitutional, will be reversed and that the law will be repealed at the close of Governor Hughes' term, adding:

"We shall be compelled to close our Spokane offices, although we shall continue to do business in the city. The law passed by the New York legislature limiting our business to $150,000,000 a year is responsible for this move in a large number of cities in every part of the world in which we operate. It has taken a generation to build up the business we now have. The organization which we have developed will be torn asunder to comply with the law. We could easily do $300,000,000 worth of business every year were it not for this measure backed by Governor Hughes. Few people in the West have any idea of the general tendency and effect of the insurance laws enacted by the legislature of the state of New York."

Mr. Kingsley is accompanied by Mrs. Kingsley, Edward I. Devlin, real estate expert and head of the company's realty department, and Seton Lindsay, manager of the Spokane and Seattle offices.

A Real Indian Banker

Corbett Lawyers, a full-blooded Nez Perce Indian, who will be manager and cashier of the Indian bank at Lapwai, Idaho, has entered the Old National Bank in Spokane to familiarize himself with modern methods of commercial banking. He is a splendid type of the Indian of the present day after education has stripped him of his blankets and traditions. He has been employed as a clerk at the agency, but has practically been private secretary to Superintendent O. H. Lipps. He has been compiling statistics of much value to the government in the settlement of heirship squabbles. He has delved into the family history of most of the old Indians so that his knowledge of the Indians is so extensive that he will be equipped with information which will be of great benefit to him in the banking business.

Many Will Travel the Northwest

Aaron Kuhn, president of the Traders' National Bank, who has just returned from a trip of two months in the east, says that thousands of people in the middle western and eastern states are interested in the northwest and he believes that hundreds will come to the Spokane country this year. Most of these, he adds, are farmers and business men with some capital. He said: "Prosperity has returned to the middle western states and the attention of many is strongly attracted to the Inland Empire. There have been good crops in Minnesota and the Dakotas, while prices have been high and the farmers are prosperous as a result."

New Washington Bank

Fifty thousand dollars is the capital stock of the Broughton National Bank of Dayton, Wash., to be incorporated next month. Charles J. Broughton, one of the wealthiest men in southeastern Washington, will be the principal stockholder and president, and A. P. Cahill of Longs will be cashier. Others interested are Walla Walla and Dayton men. The Broughton bank will be Dayton's second banking institution.

Educational Section British Institute of Banking

London, April 5.—Within a few weeks candidates for the examinations of the Institute of Bankers will have the thoroughness of their studies during the past months put to the test. By the end of March, every student should have practically completed his preparation, the remaining time at his disposal being devoted to a rapid survey of the work he has accomplished, in order to refresh his memory on the many matters he has been dealing with in the course of his studies. We would impress upon every candidate the necessity of completing his work some days before the examination, thus enabling him to devote the last few days to recreation, with the result that he will enter the examination room feeling fit and confident instead of tired and despondent.

Preliminary Candidates

Assuming that a candidate has completed the course of studies, he would be well advised to utilize one hour or so daily to a perusal of his notes on the various subjects. In addition we would recommend him to read through the chief text books he has been using on political economy and practical banking, say ten to twenty pages of each daily. He should also read a few sections of the bills of exchange act daily. As regards commercial arithmetic and bookkeeping, an attempt to answer the questions set in these subjects in previous years would be found highly beneficial. The same benefit would accrue as regards the other subject, though perhaps not to so great an extent.

Final Candidates

Final candidates also should now be nearing the completion of their studies. Their task is, of course, much more serious than that before preliminary candidates, and they should not set too much store on the ease with which they passed the preliminary examination. In economics, for instance, a fairly wide reading is necessary to pass merely, and the same may be said of commercial law. In this latter subject, we would remind candidates that Sir John Paget is the examiner. Hence they should read, without fail, the Gilbert lectures. In addition, they should read carefully through the examiner's book on banking law. Now that the nature of the paper set in composition and banking correspondence is known, the results should be better in this subject than was the case a year ago.

American Banking and Currency

At a meeting of the Institute of Bankers, held on Wednesday, March 10th, at the London Institution, Finsbury Circus, Sir Felix Schuster presiding, Mr. D. M. Mason read a paper on "Our Money Market and American Banking and Currency Reform." He said that the most serious defect in the present currency system of the United States was its lack of elasticity. It did not naturally respond to the expansion and contraction of the needs of commerce, but adjusted itself to those needs through a series of spasmodic jerks and jolts, sometimes ending in panic which entailed as a result great loss to many innocent persons. After discussing sundry proposals of improvement he suggested that the remedy lay in greater freedom of trade gradually introduced, and that the same principle should apply to American banking. Industrial activity was throttled by the restrictions and safety-guaranteeing conditions of the present system of banking. The bond secured currency should be gradually done away with by reducing the percentage of bonds to be deposited, which at present the banks required to maintain against their issue of notes. This percentage might be reduced from year to year until it finally disappeared, and the entire power of issuing bank notes would then be handed over to the banks themselves. These institutions should have full powers, with as few restrictions as possible commensurate with safety, to issue their own notes repayable in gold on demand. This would compel each bank to maintain its own gold reserve. The currency would thus acquire a stability and elasticity which it lacked at present, and would naturally expand and contract with the needs of the country. Branch banking should be developed.

Quoting Sir Felix

Sir Felix Schuster said that, as had been shown within the last two years, the monetary conditions in the United States necessarily had a serious effect upon those of this country. Therefore the sounder the American currency system was, the easier and the freer the movements in our own money market might be. So far no satisfactory solution had been found for the drawbacks which our own monetary system presented. He believed it was a mistake for one nation to try to follow too closely the methods of another nation, and particularly was this the case with the United States, whose commercial and industrial development was so entirely different from the conditions which prevailed in Europe. The people there must find out and devise a system of their own and adapted to their own needs. He agreed with the lecturer that the great fault of the present system was lack of elasticity, which had prevented crises being dealt with in an efficient manner. The banking system of the United States was not by any means responsible for these crises, but an adequate banking system should enable the people to deal with a crisis in such a manner as to ensure that solvent concerns should not be dragged down with the insolvent. He thought a central bank would provide a suitable remedy for many of the evils from which the United States suffered. He wondered how much longer that country was going to remain the debtor nation that it was now. He believed that long before half-a-century had elapsed it would become a creditor nation, and the importance to our banking interests of such a condition of affairs would be enormous. He had recently heard of American farmers who fifteen or twenty years ago had heavy mortgages on their land at 6 and 8 per cent (some of which interest came over to Europe), but who had now liquidated these liabilities and had become investors in European securities. That was a very significant and important fact, and one which in any commercial and banking system would have to be taken into account. The changing conditions of the United States presented a most interesting problem. They looked upon that country as one of the chief exporters of food stuffs. That position would not last for many years. With the enormous growth of population the time was not far away when the United States would require its production of food stuffs for home consumption. That would again present a very difficult problem.

Pittsburgh Chapter News

Pittsburgh Chapter just now is deeply interested in the minstrel show which is scheduled to take place April 22d. The chapter has been doing some strenuous work the past few months, having been engaged in a debate and various other serious matters.

New Orleans Chapter News

The political economy class, of the New Orleans Chapter, under the tutorship of Prof. Aldrich, of Tulane University, held its initial meeting in March, 1908. With the exception of about three summer months, classes were held weekly on Wednesday night three times a month, the fourth Wednesday constituting the chapter's regular monthly meeting. This was a study quite new to most of the boys, and a bank clerk, after a hard day's toil, deserves credit for secluding himself in his room to study while others make merry. The fruits of that toil at last came to hand, for on Sunday morning, March 14th, final examinations were held, when nine bank men, with knitted brows and ruffled locks, wrestled with a set of questions that they vowed such they had never seen more difficult. All nine passed and too much cannot be said for Prof. Aldrich, for his patient coaching and lucid explanations went far toward insuring ultimate success.

The commercial law class, led by Prof. Lemann, of Tulane University, held its initial meeting Tuesday, March 16th, and was started with quite a large quota. The object of these courses is to obtain certificates from the national body, the American Institute of Banking, to the effect that the party obtaining same has done this work and passed the examinations.

Much praise is due Tulane University, which has been so lenient, and which, through its professors, has been the primary cause of making these courses a thorough success.

San Francisco Chapter Debate

The second annual debate between San Francisco Chapter, American Institute of Banking, and Oakland Chapter will be held on Thursday evening, April 22d, in Oakland. The subject will be, "Resolved, that the establishment of the postal savings depositaries system, as described in the Carter bill, No. 6484, would be beneficial to the banking institutions of the United States."

To Double Size of Banking Offices

The National Bank of the Republic of this city has taken enough additional space on the banking floor of the New York Life building to about double the size of its banking offices. The new space will be ready for use about June 1st.

Hibernias' Announcement

The bankers conventions of the states of Mississippi, Alabama and Texas will be held on the 11th and 12th of May, and the Louisiana convention will be held on the 13th and 14th of May. This convention will assemble in the city of New Orleans and it, therefore, occurred to the local bankers that, as the other conventions would adjourn on the day preceding the opening of their convention, they could very probably prolong the yearly outing by coming to New Orleans. Invitations were issued accordingly and a large assemblage of the banking fraternity is expected in our midst.

We most earnestly desire that this meeting be very largely attended. We believe that much good will be gotten out of this convention by all of the members assembled. It is an undeniable fact that we can all transact business much more satisfactorily when we know personally the people with whom we are dealing. It is also irrefutable that, no matter how perfect we may think our way of doing things, it does us good to meet someone who does things in a different way and possibly a better one.

We sincerely hope that every banker who will read these few words will endeavor to prolong his vacation by two or three days in order to meet the bankers of the South in convention assembled at New Orleans.

This invitation is particularly and most cordially extended to the banking fraternity by the Hibernia Bank and Trust Company and the New Hibernia National Bank.

Entertainment for Oklahoma Convention

Among the other interesting features of the meeting of the Oklahoma Bankers Association at Enid, May 19th and 20th, there will be the following lines of entertainment:

First Day.—Reception for the ladies by the Enid ladies at the Elks' Hall, and auto ride around the town. Smoker at the Elks' Club at night.

Second day.—After the close of the session, "Jack-rabbit shoot" at Spalding's stock farm, all invited. (All the bankers west of the Mississippi River barred from this "shoot," as we do not want the rabbits killed.) Dance and refreshments at the park pavilion at night.

Third day.—Reception by the Enid ladies at their homes for the visiting bankers and their ladies and auto ride.

A National Clearing House Proposed

By E. A. Grant, of Cleveland

A commission has been appointed to investigate the currency of foreign countries, and has several years of time in which to report a currency measure. Congress has passed a temporary currency bill of which the bankers are afraid to avail themselves. Congress is asked to pass a postal bank law, which will result in closing up every savings bank in the country, and impairing the state banks unless some changes are made in it. Two or three states have passed laws supposed to guarantee the deposits in their banks, and other are threatening to pass similar laws. One political party is committed to the postal bank idea; the other party is committed to the guaranty of deposits—both believed to be a cure for the same trouble. A number of bankers favor a Central Bank with power to rediscount paper, etc.

All of these different ideas mean a disturbed financial condition, an uncertainty more depressing to commerce than tariff agitation. Restoration of public confidence and consequent resumption of business is absolutely in the hands of the bankers:

First: Deposits must be secure.

Second: Currency must be flexible enough to meet unexpected contingencies without impairing its own stability.

Third: The rectitude of banks and bankers must be beyond question.

Fourth: No bank should have deposits more than equal to eight or ten times its capital.

Fifth: No bank should be permitted to fail, if it is conducting its business honestly; and no bank should be permitted to continue in business, receiving deposits, that is not so conducting its business.

It is proposed to organize a company to be called the National Clearing House Association; to secure a perpetual national charter as the results accruing from it will be of national benefit; to so incorporate it that no man, or set of men, can ever get control of it, to the detriment of its good purposes.

The authorized capital stock should be five hundred million dollars, but so issued and sold that it will draw very little money from natural channels. The association should be located at Washington, D. C., and should have none of the functions of a bank except to loan money to banks in distress, as provided herein.

In addition to the executive officers necessary to conduct the business of the association, there should be a "Board of Control." This board should consist of twenty-one members, twenty of whom should be chosen from among the directors of subscribing banks in the various cities, not more than one from any one city. They should be men of highest character, and unquestioned integrity. There should be a salary or compensation for these gentlemen, to justify them in giving of their time and advice, and to make it attractive to the right men. The secretary of the treasury of the United States should be an ex officio member of this board. These gentlemen should be chosen from those banks who show the most interest in organizing the association; they should be among the incorporators of the association, and should hold their offices for five years, after that three should be replaced each year by election. By having these members in the various cities, the association would be in actual touch with the different parts of the country, and no part could be favored or discriminated against.

Their duties would be to represent their respective communities, to advise with their fellow members, and with the executive officers of the association, attend meeting when necessary, pass on offending banks, and look after financial legislation. The honor and responsibility of a membership on this board will be very great, and for that reason only worthy men should be on it.

To make the currency more flexible, the charter should permit the association to issue money or certificates to the extent of one thousand million dollars, only in times of actual need, to be loaned to member banks at high rates, and on good collateral, and cancelled as fast as they are not needed. They should be a first lien on the entire capital of $500,000,000, and each member should agree to be held liable in this event for double his subscription and no more. This would give these certificates a value unquestioned. The interest on these certificates should be so high as to be prohibitive in normal times, thus driving them out of circulation.

An American bank with capital of $100,000 or more, and surplus of at least $25,000, whose methods and condition are approved, may subscribe for stock to the extent of 5 per cent of the amount of the bank's capital and surplus, and no more. Of this it must pay for one-fifth of the amount subscribed (equal 1 per cent of its capital and surplus) at 1.10. The association will then open an account in the subscribing bank and deposit an amount of money equal to par value of stock, this to remain at 2 per cent interest, subject to check when the emergency arises that it is needed to protect members or their depositors. The surplus, together with the interest received, is to be the working capital of the association. The balance of subscribed stock is always to be subject to call, but it is not contemplated that any emergency will arise that will require this call.

Each bank, when it becomes a member should subscribe for its allotted shares of the capital of the company and contribute to the insurance funds, once only, an amount equal to one-tenth of 1 per cent of its average deposits for past calendar year. This guaranty or insurance fund is to be used specifically to help banks in trouble and pay depositors if the bank fails. It is hardly possible for a bank to fail when it is a member of this association, because it will always receive the necessary help when in distress. But, in event of a final failure, this association will take charge of the bank, in connection with state or national authorities, run it or liquidate it as is deemed best, and reimburse itself for all moneys advanced, interest and expenses, before restoring it to, or declaring any dividends to stockholders. Thus the insurance fund will always be reimbursed.

Each bank applying for membership should submit a complete statement in detail of its condition on that day, answering all the questions on the blank supplied for that purpose, the whole duly sworn to by two of its officers. It should also pay an examination fee to cover proper examination by the association's auditor at the time of application, and be required to conform to rules of the association.

On recommendation of one of the association's auditors, the association should lend money to a member bank, before it became publicly known that the bank was embarrassed, and in this way save the bank and its reputation. These loans to bear high rate of interest in order that they will be paid as promptly as possible, and to prevent abuse of this privilege. There will be no more failures when this plan is working.

When a bank's deposits amount to more than eight or ten times its capital and surplus, it should increase its capital in proportion to its deposits, in order to retain its membership, or else pay a penalty.

When a bank is guilty of indiscretions or unsound business methods, other banks are quick to see it. Under the existing conditions no one bank feels called on to criticize or call attention to such a condition; but, when organized, members of this association will report to the manager any such indiscretion, and thus give the association, through its auditors, an opportunity to examine the bank and caution its officers, before affairs have reached a dangerous point.

The right to enter and examine the books of any member bank should be conceded at all times in business hours, and the expense of such examination be borne by the association.

The association should have the right to annul membership of a bank that persists in conducting its business in an unsatisfactory manner and upon such discontinuance the offending bank should remove from its literature and stationery all references to being a member and sell its stock back to the company, and cancel its subscription for balance.

No final action should be taken against any bank without the full knowledge and approval of a majority of the "Board of Control." The articles of incorporation should forbid any kind of speculation with funds of this association. To guard against this, it should not be lawful for any one bank, or group of banks, to own or control any more of the stock of the association than their original purchase. Stock should not be transferable, except it could be sold back to the association at par, as provided herein, or, if the stockholder bank goes into liquidation.

Each member bank should have its officers, and employees bonded by a fidelity bond, issued by an incorporated company and approved by the association. List of member banks to be published for use of each, and the information of the public. Member banks should have the right to publish on their literature and stationery, that they are members of National Clearing House Association and certificate of membership could be framed and hung in the bank.

We would have in this association, the strength of a central bank or a postal bank without the politics of one, or competition of the other. We would have the guaranty of deposits in actual effect without the expense, or danger of political interference, or disturbance at every presidential election. We would have the flexibility to our currency that is so much to be desired, without bond issues, central bank, or government intervention. We would have an association that is not, and cannot be, controlled by a few large banks, to the detriment of the public welfare.

We would have the currency question permanently settled, and have the confidence of the people restored.

This is offered to the bankers of the United States, not as a perfect plan, but as the one foundation on which a perfect plan can be builded; viz., the community of interests. The idea being the preservation of the integrity of the entire financial scheme of our country conserving the general integrity of our banks; and placing financial legislation under the guidance of the united banks of the country, where it properly belongs.

To those who believe in the principle, but object to some items of this plan, we can only say, "come along with us and give us the benefit of your ideas in drawing the articles of incorporation." We are all striving for the same end; viz., the restoration of confidence in our banks and our currency, which will mean return of prosperity to our nation. National banks will perhaps require some legislation to permit them to become members. This could probably be provided for in the charter granted to the association by congress.

An individual vessel, be it a cruiser, gun-boat, torpedo boat, or battleship, is not alone invincible, or safe against danger. But think of the strength of a battle fleet including all the different ships of various sizes, each fulfilling its mission.

There are twenty thousand banks in this country, probably eight thousand of them eligible to membership in such an association as proposed. Think of the strength of an association of even one thousand of these banks. What would be the strength of any one bank as compared to it? No class of people in this country need the protection afforded by union, more than the bankers do.

To answer all correspondence on the subject will take more time than I can spare from my business, but if enough interest is shown by the bankers another step in the matter will be taken.

I am sending this out to the bankers of the United States at my own expense, and on my own responsibility, to get the plan before them quickly. The future of it will be largely governed by the heartiness of the response. Nothing can be accomplished if each waits to see what others are going to do. All communications received by me will be treated as confidential, unless otherwise authorized.

Mr. Grant is very much in earnest and hopes bankers everywhere will carefully read what he has to say and that they will indicate by mail whether or not they would be willing to go into such a plan as he proposes to give it a try-out.—Editor's note.

National vs. State Banking Laws

By John Schuette

It is unfortunate that single states are attempting, and some have succeeded, to enact laws for the insuring of deposits in state banks. If this continues, we will soon have as many laws on this subject as there are states, and, as all may not be the best or strictly enforced, doubt will be created, and if but a single state insurance fails, it will discredit the whole system.

The people have had experience with bank notes issued under state laws, which experience proved very disastrous. They also have had 45 years' experience with bank notes issued under national laws, which experience proved most satisfactory and successful. Hence the confidence of the people in their deposits under national control would far exceed that under state control. Since the lack of confidence is the only disturbing element in our banking system, therefore national control will more surely inspire the requisite confidence.

Besides this, the most important advantage the national system has over a state system is that we will have a uniform law under which the deposits will be as secure in one state as in another, and with which all will soon become familiar.

The diversified territory and the large number of banks would at once give an ideal general average, the most important safeguard in every kind of insurance.

The larger national reserve fund, which would soon amount to over one hundred million dollars, would inspire far more confidence than a state reserve fund, which in some states would probably not exceed one million dollars.

Then too, all banks of deposit operating under one and the same law, they could be easier regulated, the law more strictly enforced, and the expense of operation reduced.

It is perhaps superfluous to show why national deposit insurance is far superior to state, for everyone will admit it, but it will not be so easy to overcome the obstacles in the way of making it into law.

First, we run up against those large, influential banks, who do not want to be paternalized, others want no interference with their sacred state rights, others fear centralization, etc.

If I had the power of a Czar, I would abolish all state governments and legislatures, believing that national, county and municipal government would be sufficient. But as this would legislate half a million men out of office, I would, before giving out my proclamation, want to join Roosevelt in the dark jungles of Africa, until the army of officers had exhausted their rage.

Second. Some hope that the monetary commission appointed by Congress will formulate a satisfactory plan, but we will know it is only trying to devise a plan under which money can be issued easier, and in larger amounts, which will only weaken confidence.

Who is there that will claim that our national bank notes have ever caused a panic! Although we have many kinds of bank notes (as some derisively say, like unto Joseph's coat), yet one kind is as good as the other, and no one stops to look what kind he has.

Neither have we any lack of currency, as long as it is not withdrawn from banks and hoarded for fear of the safety of the banks wherein it is deposited.

Third. Others propose better banking laws, stricter enforcement, and more severe penalties, and claim that if so reformed bank failures will be infinitesimal, and no insurance of deposits will be necessary. But failures among 26,000 banks can no more be prevented than fire can be prevented.

Even under the best of regulations no one will feel absolutely secure. We have seen a single bank failure precipitate a general panic, as a single spark has kindled the greatest conflagration. Better laws and strict enforcement of the same will undoubtedly lessen bank failures, but these will naturally be sooner adopted and better enforced under a deposit insurance act than without it.

In addition to all possible safeguards, insurance is carried on nearly every kind of risk. No one feels safe without it, and we will have no peace of mind until the people can also insure their money. Insurance of bank deposits is in the air. It is surely coming. Why then, not have it the simplest and best form now! By doing so we may yet prevent postal savings banks, and the government from launching further into the banking business.

In order to disarm all possible criticism of compulsory deposit insurance, I would propose a national enabling act, under which no one would be compelled to operate, but only giving those who desire to insure their deposits an opportunity to do so.

It seems impossible that anybody can fairly object to this, or that the Congress would not gladly pass a measure so beneficial to the public welfare.

The act, in brief, should be about as follows: Create a depositors' insurance department, under the supervision of the Comptroller, who shall keep a reserve and premium account and an account with each bank.

Every bank organized under national or state law, and receiving deposits, and subjecting itself to the rules and regulations of the Comptroller, shall be entitled to become a member of the Insurance Department.

On the acceptance of the bank's application for membership, it shall pay and maintain 1 per cent of its average deposits in the reserve fund, the amount of which shall be remitted by a certificate of deposit of such bank to the Comptroller, made payable to him on demand, and credited to such bank. If at any time the bank should discontinue its share of the reserve fund is to be returned.

This reserve fund would be treated the same as stock in any other insurance company. The total of this would soon exceed one hundred million dollars, of which each bank would own its proportionate share.

This would be the limit of a bank's liability, except the annual premium to be paid.

The government would assume no liability except the supervision and control of the same, as it now has over national bank notes.

The annual insurance premium should not exceed one dollar on each one thousand dollars of the average deposits, and to be reduced at the beginning of each fiscal year, if the losses allow it. If they exceed the premium fund, the reserve fund should be drawn on for temporary advances.

No bank's deposits shall exceed ten times its capital.

All deposits drawing not more than 2 per cent interest should be insured in full; those drawing not over 3 per cent shall be insured at 95 per cent; those not over 4 per cent, at 90 per cent; those not over 5 per cent, at 70 per cent; and those over 5 per cent should not be insured at all.

Penalties for violation should be provided.

Fifty per cent of government bonds, and 50 per cent of approved municipal bonds should be accepted to secure circulation.

Real estate loans should be permitted up to 20 per cent of the bank's total loans.

When a bank's total loans exceed five times its capital, the 10 per cent loan limit to any one borrower may be increased, but not to exceed 2 per cent of its total loans.

This is but a brief outline of the act, which would carry many more safeguards, after it has been properly perfected.

There is no question but that a national and uniform law would far more effectually accomplish the desired banking reform than the many and varied state laws. The only compensating feature of the state movement for deposit insurance is that they will act like a skirmish line and eventually draw Uncle Sam into action.

Ohio Convention

It is expected that the Ohio convention will be called this year for Toledo, about June 15th. The usual boat feature will be included which, this year, is to be a trip to Mackinac Island in a brand new boat. The announcement is not made officially, but remains only to be confirmed by the council.

Texas will Hold Three-day Convention

Oscar Wells, chairman of the Houston bankers who will entertain the Texas Bankers Association, has sent out notice that by consent of the executive committee of the Texas Bankers Association, the time for holding the next convention has been extended to three days, beginning on May 10th and continuing through the 11th and 12th. This was done at the request of the entertainment committee, who felt that if only two days were consumed in the convention, and the full program was carried out, there would be too little time left to afford the Houston bankers an opportunity to properly entertain their guests. Inasmuch as the financial papers have already announced the date to be May 11th and 12th, the association and the local committee thought it advisable to give considerable publicity to this change in the length of time, by prefixing May 10th.

Chicago Stock Exchange Ticket

Frederick D. Countiss was chosen as the candidate for president of the Chicago Stock Exchange and David R. Forgan was named as treasurer on the regular ticket made up by the nominating committee at a meeting Monday afternoon. The annual election will be held the first Monday in June. Usually on the Chicago exchange nomination on the regular ticket is equivalent to election.

Since the election a year ago, when Mr. Countiss withdrew from a contest into which some of his friends forced him, it has been the general understanding that he would be the regular nominee for the presidency this year. It is considered by many that his active interest in and his work for the exchange entitle him to the position.

Mr. Forgan was named as the regular candidate for treasurer of the exchange a year ago. He withdrew later in favor of Orson Smith on account of the objection raised by some of the members that he had been in the exchange only a very short time.

D. R. Forgan

D. R. Forgan, president of the National City Bank of Chicago, is quoted as saying: "The money market is no better, and there is no special improvement in sight. For this very reason bankers should be very careful about credits they might regret when conditions improve."

Seventy-five clerks and employees of the local banks and trust companies will participate in the third annual minstrel show of the St. Louis Chapter of the American Institute of Banking, which will be staged at the Odeon, Friday evening, April 23d. The past performances of the bank clerks' organization were decided hits, but the coming show is claimed to be the best in the history of the chapter. Rehearsals have been in progress for some time.

The musical end of the show is in the hands of Edwin J. Novy, a young St. Louis composer, who has been making a bid for fame through the musical comedy stage, collaborating with local newspaper men.

Louis W. Fricke, of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, is business manager of the show. He has looked after the past performances in such acceptable manner that he was selected again.

The show this year will open with an original sketch, written for the bank clerks and adapted particularly to their uses. Prominent figures in local banking and financial circles will be shown in a new light. The boxes have all been sold for the occasion to the officers of the banks and trust companies, each of whom wants to know what their clerks have to say about them.

The solo numbers and the choruses will be entrusted to the best voices available, while the olio will abound in acts written and staged by the men appearing in them.

Walter Greenwald, Arthur Beyer, and E. C. Collins will be among the end men, of whom there will be eight. They will also come on in the olio in a sketch. Vincent Boisaubin, of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, is the interlocutor. Henry Aehle, of the Mercantile Trust Company, has a German monologue, which will add an unusual flavor to the otherwise straight black-face turns of the show.

Harry Philipps and J. M. Reid, both of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, in the first part of the show, will sing "O You Coon," Philipps appearing as a dusky maiden. Leo Terry, of the Bank of Commerce, has a prominent part in the curtain-raiser. A. P. Buckley, of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, and Arthur Beyer, of the Bank of Commerce, have something to do in the olio.

Webster Groves Trust Company

The Webster Groves Trust Company will erect on the east side of Gore Street, just north of Lockwood Street, in Webster Groves, a handsome new home to cost $27,000. The contracts have been let. The building will be ready for occupancy on September 1st. The building is to have a ground area of 40 x 80 feet and will be two stories high. It will be constructed of iron-spot brick with terra cotta trimmings to match,

The entrance will be of white marble, and the interior finish will be in marble, mahogany, and verd antique bronze. The structure will be fireproof and will be as modern in appointment as any banking house in the country. The plans have been made by Montrose P. McArdle and the contract has been let to the Selden-Breck Construction Company of St. Louis. It will be the handsomest business structure in Webster Groves.

Stock Exchange Elects

The St. Louis Stock Exchange has held its annual meeting, at which the following directors and officers, nominated several weeks ago, were elected without opposition for the ensuing year: H. F. Knight, president; Louis Barklage, vice-president; B. C. Jenkins, treasurer; A. D. Grant, secretary; Charles McL. Clark, J. D. P. Francis, M. Kotany, H. B. Collins, and Clarkson Potter, directors to 1911; A. H. Bauer, director to 1910, for the unexpired term of L. Barklage, resigned.

The New Broadway National

The first national bank in St. Louis to be located outside the business center is to open its doors to the public about June 1st. It is to be known as the Broadway National Bank, and an application for its charter was approved by the Comptroller of the Currency recently. The applicants were: F. Ernest Cramer, vice-president of the Cramer Dry Plate Company; C. L. Gray, president of the C. L. Gray Construction Company; D. A. Siegfried and Snelson Chesney. The capital is to be $200,000, and although subscriptions for stock will not be formally opened until next week, more than half the amount has been subscribed. The stock is to be sold at par in shares of $100.

Organizers Well Known

Among the organizers of the bank are Harry and Eugene A. Freund, president and secretary, respectively, of the S. E. Freund's Sons Clothing Company; Julius Peterson, president of the Julius Peterson Commission Company, and Charles F. Steiner, a South Side merchant. F. Ernest Cramer is slated for the presidency and D. A. Siegfried, who was formerly connected with the First National of Council Bluffs, Iowa, cashier. Henry C. Menne, who ran for auditor on the Democratic ticket last election, will probably be teller.

Plan of Operation

A feature of the bank will be its foreign exchange department to accommodate the foreign population of South St. Louis, and a savings department, which will be open nights for the accommodation of the working classes. None of the South St. Louis banks now has such a department.

"We have the advice of leading financiers of the city that no section of St. Louis offers a better field for a national bank than South St. Louis," said F. Ernest Cramer. "The Lafayette, Manchester, and South Side banks, all state banks, now located there, average annual dividends of 21 per cent, and their surpluses and undivided profits amount to 330 per cent over their capital, or $1,320,000. The average dividend of the other city banks is about 14 per cent. The plan is to make the institution a South St. Louis affair essentially, and the stock is being disposed of in small blocks to business men of the section. The organization meeting has been called for April 20th.

New Trust Company Organizes

The organization of the new Federal Trust Company, 1002-1006 Wright Building, was completed on Monday, when W. D. Vandiver, former insurance superintendent of Missouri, who has been considering the proposition of accepting its presidency, agreed to do so, and was elected. W. H. Garaflo, cashier of the Commercial Bank, New Madrid, Mo., was elected vice-president; M. R. Smith, former congressman, of Farmington, Mo., secretary; Judge Charles B. Thomas, McLeansboro, Ill., treasurer.

Seven additional directors were also elected. They are: Peter H. Huck, member of the Missouri general assembly, Ste. Genevieve, Mo.; J. W. Smith, president of the State Bank of Oklahoma, Enid, Okla.; C. C. Smith, cashier of the State Bank of Oklahoma, Enid, Okla.; Silas Cook, mayor of East St. Louis, Ill.; S. W. Jurden, president First National Bank, Wellston, Mo.; Murray Phillips, Jr., capitalist, New Madrid, Mo.; and Joseph McCoy, St. Louis. The seven new directors constitute a majority of the board.

Has Half Million Capital

Mr. Vandiver considered two or three other propositions to become the head of bonding companies before accepting the presidency of the Federal Trust Company. He said yesterday the company would be ready for business within a month.

"Our first work will be that of handling securities," he said, "especially industrial securities. We will then take up in order foreign loans, surety, and bonding. We do not wish to and will not do a banking business. The field for such a company seemed to be practically unoccupied here. The trust feature will be managed as a country trust company, with headquarters in this city."

The company was organized last November, with an authorized capital stock of $500,000. More than half of this has already been subscribed and an additional $100,000 will be placed in the next month or two. It has also been determined to have two branch offices of the company. One will be at East St. Louis, in charge of Mayor Silas Cook, and the other at Enid, Okla., in charge of J. W. Smith, president of the State Bank of Oklahoma. The company will operate mainly in Illinois, Missouri, and Oklahoma, where it has already about 200 local stockholders and representatives.

Low Interest Rates the Cause

It is not the dear public, not the investor come to life, but cheap money which is under the present boom in stock market prices. One wishes it might be believed that signs of returning prosperity were the real cause. The employment of idle funds by loaning banks at almost any rate has encouraged speculation which by the wildest deductions cannot be attributed to any other cause. Remember that interest charges throughout the world are at the lowest level in twelve years. London has experienced a rate of three-fourths of 1 per cent, Paris 1 per cent, New York 1½ per cent, and Berlin 2 per cent. At each of these European centers the supplies of gold have mounted to epoch-making records, while in the United States total circulation is expanding, despite the urgent need of contraction. To give figures, the great foreign banks hold $2,935,000,000 specie, against $2,590,000,000 last year; circulation in New York began April at $3,087,000,000, an increase of $6,000,000 for the month and including an expansion of $10,500,000 in bond-secured circulation, while bank loans have expanded $22,000,000 in two weeks. The railroads and other needy corporations are the legitimate borrowers of cheap money now. They have been kept out of the market with new issues by the high rates of the past few years. Their needs and not stock speculation should be the Mecca for low-priced loans.

Small Banks Making Money

Inquiry in banking circles as to the condition of the smaller banks in the South and West, at this time, after a year and a half of depression, indicates that these institutions have prospered meanwhile, and have stood the strain much better than similar institutions in probably any earlier period of the country's history.

The cashier of a leading national bank in New York City, speaking of the smaller banks in the South and West, says: "The banks included in this class have made money steadily, because their rates of loans are from 7 to 10 per cent, and they had ample funds in their vaults for reserve purposes when the trouble began in the latter part of 1907. Meanwhile they have used their funds as local loans, and general investment appealed to them. They have also precipitated in the advance in values of good investment securities. Some of them had as much as 40 per cent reserve during the time when New York banks were running close to the legal limit."

Two years ago there had come into existence a large number of rural and village banks throughout the southern states, whose officers were rather inexperienced in meeting financial difficulties. Among older bankers there was some concern as to how, in case of a crisis, these institutions might affect the central banks of the larger cities with whom they had correspondent relations. The factor which probably did most to avert trouble was the high price of farm products, by which the deposits of rural and village banks, both West and South, were swelled steadily during the period of severest strain, as well as subsequently.

This resulted in a somewhat plethoric condition of funds. Meanwhile there has been no little exercise of investment activity on the part of the depositors, a fact which has directly or indirectly had a clear relation to the recovery of the security market. Until quite recently, this was apparent in the rapidity with which bonds were taken when offered, and still later in the buoyancy of stock values.

Cartridges Used as Money in Abyssinia

The French government having determined to support the completion of the railway from Djibouti to Adis Abeba, the capital of Abyssinia, the Economiste Europeen publishes a recent report of the French Minister at the court of Emperor Menelek on the circulating medium. The monetary unit is the thaler or "thalari." They have the head of either Maria Theresa or Menelek. Its value varies with the price of silver and local demand. It is divided into quarters, (roub;) eighths, (tomoun;) and sixteenths, (piaster.) But cartridges also circulate as a subsidiary currency, provided they are duly stamped "S. F. M." by the French Society of Munitions of War. The Abyssinian thalaris have a circulation restricted to the capital and large centers of trade. The foreign thalaris are struck in France or in Italy. The quarters are struck in France or at the Abyssinian mint, but the foreign coins are preferred.

In Abyssinia four quarters do not make a whole. Three quarters and one or two cartridges, according to their exchange value, are equal to a thalari. This is due to the shutting down of the Abyssinian mint for the coinage of quarters. The Maria Theresa thalari, which comes from Trieste, where it is still coined, circulates everywhere, provided that the pieces are not so abraded that the ornament of the Empress on the right shoulder is invisible.

As for cartridges, they can always be discharged if not passed for currency. Every man in Abyssinia carries a gun, from the richest to the poorest; and the French Minister remarks that this double use will not cease until the country has undergone substantial change of habit. On account of the uncertainty in value and delay in getting back silver, the merchants remit in gold, ivory, and skins, even when there is only a trifling profit in the consignment.

For Uniform Bank Notes

Washington, D. C. — Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Coolidge has approved a plan for systematizing designs for United States notes and coin certificates, thus carrying into effect a scheme of uniformity in portrait and general design for notes of the same denomination of each class. The plan adopted will embody the ideas of officials of the Treasury Department, bankers, business men and currency experts.

It is believed that the new notes when put in circulation will be welcomed by the public on account of their simplicity and the readiness with which different denominations may be fixed in mind.

To Be Only Nine Different Designs

At present there are nineteen different designs for United States notes and coin certificates, of various denominations, leading to confusion and uncertainty. Under the new plan there will be but nine. Under the plan adopted all classes of notes of each denomination will carry the same portrait, and no portrait will appear on the notes of more than one denomination, nor will any portrait be used which will not be immediately recognizable by every person who handles money.

The $1 silver certificate will carry the portrait of Washington; the $2 silver certificate the portrait of Jefferson; the $5 note, whether silver certificate or greenback, will carry the portrait of Lincoln; the $10 gold and silver certificate and United States note that of Cleveland; the $20 that of Jackson; the $50 that of Grant; the $100 that of Franklin; the $500 that of Salmon P. Chase; the $1,000 that of Alexander Hamilton.

First Banking in Japan

The special Japanese envoy at the Chicago Chamber of Commerce banquet told his hearers that the first bank in England was established somewhere near the middle of the eighteenth century, but they had banks in Japan in the seventeenth century. They had certified checks and bank clearing house checks. In the year 1600 there was a great department store in a city in Japan with branches in all the provincial towns. In Tokio alone this department store had a thousand clerks.

In and Around Pittsburgh

By
LATIMER T. LAWTON

The Second National Bank is now very nicely located in its temporary quarters in the Westinghouse Building at the corner of Ninth Street and Penn Avenue, removed but a few doors from its old location. The large rooms needed but a small amount of adjustment to suit the temporary needs of this large bank, where it will be located for a year while its old building is razed and a much finer one is erected in its stead. The bank has the ground floor for the banking business and Pittsburgh space on the second floor where President Bughman will have his office, and for other purposes. The contract for the wrecking of the old building has been awarded and work on that task will start at once. The contract for the new building has not yet been placed.

Lyon Paying Dividends

Receiver Robert Lyon of the Allegheny National has sent checks amounting to about $125,000 to the Comptroller of the Currency in order that they may be signed and the amount distributed among the depositors of the institution. The checks represent a dividend of 5 per cent, and when it has been paid will be 55 per cent of the bank's indebtedness to depositors.

It is believed that the affairs of the institution will be closed in a comparatively short time, as the Comptroller is anxious to have all receiverships ended with the least possible delay.

It is known that the Allegheny National still has a considerable amount of valuable securities which, when marketed, will add to the amount finally realized for the depositors. The building has not yet been sold.

Financial Conditions in Good Shape

"As I looked over the situation in this place I am more than ever convinced that Pittsburgh grit is the real kind," remarked a financier in discussing the financial status of a number of institutions. "When it is recalled that a number of very heavy failures took place here within a year and we understand the manner in which these spots are being cleared up it looks to me as though Pittsburgh had put its shoulder to the wheel in the right way. Take the Allegheny National. Who would have thought that its affairs would be as they are now when the failure was announced? It seems to me that all the troubles from these sources are being taken care of in a way which reflects great credit on that portion of the community directly affected."

Insurance Revenue to State Increased

After repeated assurances had been given that the insurance bills to regulate all insurance companies had been amended so as not to discriminate against the mutual companies, the house passed finally the departmental measures. Representative Gabriel H. Moyer, who called one of the bills, said that it would mean $100,000 a year extra in the state's receipts.

Boards of Trade Active

The Pittsburgh Board of Trade entertained the members of the Allied Boards of Trade and other civic bodies at a mass meeting and smoker last Tuesday evening in the Highland Auditorium, South Highland Avenue.

The Allied Boards of Trade of Allegheny County is an organization consisting of representatives from the various civic bodies in and about Pittsburgh. It has a council body known as the executive organization, composed of two representatives from each Board of Trade or similar body.

To Help Allegheny National Bondsmen

Peculiar legislation for the benefit of Secretary of the Commonwealth Robert McAfee and other state bondsmen for the Allegheny National, the Pittsburgh concern looted by its political cashier, William Montgomery, was launched in the senate last week and given the approval of that body by a divided vote.

It was in the form of a concurrent resolution introduced by Senator Crawford, of Allegheny, to cut two-thirds off the interest rate charged up against McAfee and his fellow-bondsmen on the judgment for state deposits not yet repaid to the state treasury.

New Scranton Bank Building

The Keystone Bank has moved into its new bank building, which is one of the handsomest and most modern structures in the city. It is of French Renaissance style with a granite base, and a superstructure of Indian lime stone. The building is absolutely fireproof in construction, and no wood has been used except in the doors and window trimmings. The vestibule floor is a marble mosaic in green and white, and rubber tiling of the same colors covers the main floor.

The Keystone Bank has been in existence only four years, and its new home is one of the finest banking buildings in the city. Col. R. A. Phillips is president of the institution and W. B. Layton is cashier.

Banking Items

The directors of the Manayunk Trust Company of Philadelphia increased the dividend rate. They declared a semiannual dividend of 4 per cent as compared with 3½ per cent for the last semiannual period.

The new Archbald Bank incorporated with $50,000 capital and with $10,000 surplus paid in has opened at Archbald. E. B. Jermyn, of this city, is president, while John J. Kearney, of Archbald, is vice-president. John J. Maxwell is cashier.

The First National Bank of Bally opened for business Monday with the following officers: President, George W. Melchoir; vice-presidents, Dr. I. B. Yeakel and B. Latshaw; treasurer, Charles Gensler; secretary, Charles Taggart.

An Absent-minded Country Banker

Washington, Pa., April 15.—The insertion of an advertisement in a local paper to-day that there had been found in the collection plate of the Roscoe Methodist Episcopal Church here after the services last Sunday night a $1,000 bill developed the fact that the church officers think the donor made a mistake and must have been some absent-minded country banker.

1,000 Lumber Mills to Close

Kansas City, Mo., April 12.—Following a conference held in Kansas City to-day it was stated that nearly a thousand lumber mills in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida will be shut down for an indefinite period.

The efforts to shut down one of the biggest industries of the South is the result of business depression, according to the men engineering the deal. The combine members say they will force up prices and will remain closed for twelve months if necessary.

PEOPLES TRUST & SAVINGS BANK

CLINTON, IOWA

Capital - $300,000.00
Surplus - 235,000.00

An Up-to-date, Conservative, Commercial and Savings Bank that Makes a Specialty of Collections and Bank Accounts

Largest Bank in Clinton County

Des Moines, April 15.—Despite the splurge as to what was to be enacted in the way of bank legislation, the Iowa legislature has adjourned without passing a single bill of vital importance to the bankers of Iowa.

There are but four new laws on the statute books as the result of the deliberations directly affecting Iowa banks. They are the following:

Defining the manner in which a state bank may dissolve, which will be the same manner as savings banks heretofore.

Limiting the liability of a bank to its depositor for payment of forged or raised checks to notification within six months.

Definition of securities in which savings banks may invest.

Adding a sixth state bank inspector.

Legislative Difficulties

Something of a feud arose between the senate and house in the final week over bank bills due to the killing by the senate of the bill revising the state and savings bank laws which the house passed and the slaughter by the senate of the house bill providing for assessment of state and savings bank stock against the individual. Both bills were backed by bankers in the house. When the news of their demise in senate committee came back to the house, the bankers were mad. And as the bankers were leaders in the house, their anger counted for something.

The first result of the indignation in the house was the recall of the Seeley senate bill exempting from taxation in Iowa, stock in foreign corporations. This bill had passed both houses but the bankers in the house got it back and the sifting committee smothered it. Then the senate killed the house bill compelling corporations to put up a $25,000 guaranty fee before they could do business in Iowa and followed it by killing the bill permitting Iowa banks to deposit in real estate outside of Iowa. And finally the bill permitting savings banks and loan and trust companies to act in a fiduciary capacity died somewhere, no one knows where.

Bankers in the house felt worse about the killing of the revised bank law than any other, for it was drawn by E. R. Moore of Linn, and George Grier of Poweshiek, leading bankers in the house and by chief clerk Frank Roberts of the state banking department.

Iowa Bankers Honored

Three bankers were named by Governor Carroll on the new state board of educational control which will have complete control over the three state educational institutions. There are nine on the board. The three bankers named are Roger Leavitt of Cedar Falls, P. K. Holbrook of Onawa and C. R. Brenton of Dallas Center. Their appointment and subsequent confirmation by the senate is ample evidence that bankers are regarded as men of worth and judgment since the board is a new institution, and to that extent an experiment in Iowa. The board takes charge of the three schools at Cedar Falls, Ames and Iowa City on July 1st. The governor also sought to appoint F. F. Jones, a Villisca banker, as one of the three on the board of control of the state penal institutions to succeed John Cownie, but the senate did not confirm him because the custom has been established that this particular member should be a farmer.

Bank Expansion at Cedar Rapids

Before he left for Cedar Rapids, representative E. R. Moore announced that the American Trust and Savings of Cedar Rapids has purchased the old city hall site in that city and will erect a new six story building at a cost of $100,000. The American Trust and Savings has deposits of $1,550,000 and is rapidly growing. Mr. Moore is president; W. F. Severa and S. G. Armstrong are vice-presidents and Louis Wokoun is cashier. President Moore was chairman of the house appropriations committee and was voted the best "watchdog of the state treasury" any legislature ever had.

Receiver I. W. Fowler, of the defunct First National at Carroll, raised a new question before the board of supervisors of Carroll county, when he requested that the supervisors remit the taxes on the institution for the year 1908 on the ground that at the time of taxation in January, the stock of the bank was without value and should not therefore be taxed. It was a new question but the members of the board refused to take it seriously and turned down the request with the remark that the bank was reported as solvent and in good condition at that time and that it continued to run and do business for many months thereafter.

How About C. B. Mills?

Cashier C. L. Isbell, of the State Savings at Logan, is disposed to dispute the fact that A. Miller of the Home Savings in Des Moines is the only banker in Iowa who can operate a telegraph instrument successfully. Mr. Isbell is an old hand at the business and his friends say that even yet, when he hears someone tapping a lead pencil on the bank window, he reaches out to answer the train dispatcher. However, Mr. Isbell has no telegraph instrument on his bank desk and in that respect Cashier Miller has the edge on him.

H. Burton Craddick, who since 1902 has been cashier of the People's Savings at Nevada and prior to that time was connected with the First National for a couple of years, has resigned to join the staff of a financial paper at Minneapolis. Mr. Craddick has been turning his attention to bank advertising and so successful was he in writing advertisements for financial institutions that he has published several sets of bank advertising books. His work in this direction attracted attention from other cities and eventually led to his acceptance of a flattering offer from the Minneapolis Journal.

Vice-President MacKinnon of the Mechanics Savings of Des Moines, has come to the conclusion that patrons of the Mechanics should have a personal acquaintance with the men with whom they do business. Accordingly he has introduced the eastern custom of putting a brass name plate at the window of each of the clerks in the bank and on the plate is the name of the clerk within.

Des Moines bank clearings for the week ending April 10th totaled $2,778,202.13, a gain over the corresponding week of last year of $888,275.30.

New Iowa Banks

A new bank has been organized at Stratford, although it has not as yet filed articles. Edward Peterson, who recently retired from the State Bank at that place is the moving spirit in the organization which is capitalized at $20,000.

Des Moines school children saved $448.34 in pennies during the month of March, so the report of the Penny Provident Association shows. This money is deposited each month with Des Moines banks to the credit of the child and earns a yearly interest. Those behind the movement believe it is a valuable method of teaching children to save.

The Farmers Savings Bank at Dike has filed articles with the secretary of state. C. E. Thomas is president; M. W. Roadman, vice-president and Jeppe J. Refshauge, cashier. The capital stock is $30,000.

Mrs. J. M. Alexander, mother of E. A. Alexander, assistant cashier of the Bank of Clarion, died at her home in that city after an illness of several weeks.

Visiting Old Friends in Des Moines

George M. Reynolds, of the Continental National of Chicago, was in Des Moines last week shaking hands with old friends and visiting his brother, Arthur Reynolds of the Des Moines National. The latter has just returned from a visit of two months in California, and together the two men went to Panora to visit their mother. Arthur Reynolds states that the new building of the Des Moines National will be ready for the occupancy by the bank about the first of May.

M. M. Reynolds, president of the Guthrie County National, was in Des Moines to accompany his two brothers to their old home for a reunion.

The German Savings at Remsen has let the contract to a Sioux City architect for a new brick bank building. A new $25,000 bank building is to be erected at Sutherland.

The Iowa Savings has just been incorporated at Radcliffe, Hardin county. The new institution starts out with $25,000 paid up capital stock. William Weimer and other directors of the First National at Radcliffe are backing the new institution. Hardin claims twenty-five first-class banking institution.

Personal Mention

George Humphreys, assistant cashier of the Waterloo Central, is dead at his home in that city. He was only 30 years old and recently removed to Waterloo from Thornton where he had been conducting a general store.

F. H. Alexander, cashier of the Hamilton County State at Webster City, has the western fever and will remove soon to Boise, Idaho. Assistant Cashier B. F. Paine has been elected to take his place as cashier and B. L. Britson, formerly of Jewell, becomes assistant cashier.

The people of Traer have voted $30,000 for bonds for a new school house.

S. H. Butler, vice-president of the Iowa National, of Des Moines, has returned from Texas and Oklahoma. While in Waunika, Mr. Butler visited with Gus Nelson, formerly assistant cashier of the Iowa National, who is doing well in the south land.

President R. A. Crawford, of the Valley National of Des Moines, has so far recovered from a serious attack of rheumatism as to be able to resume his duties in the bank.

D. A. Boyer has been elected vice-president of the First National at Richland, succeeding George R. Horn. R. E. McCarty has been made assistant cashier in place of G. V. Danous.

Among out of the city bankers who have been in Des Moines the past week are D. H. McKee, vice-president of the German Savings of Davenport; Cashier G. E. Knaack of the German Savings at Hartley; Cashier A. E. Weber of the Clarion Savings; vice-president J. L. Burgess of the Milo State; president S. McKlveen of the Lucas County National at Chariton; president I. S. Large of the First National at Rock Valley; cashier M. F. Palmer of the Dexter Savings; C. E. Varey of the First National at Spirit Lake; cashier C. A. Allen of the State Bank of Laurens.

Texas Program

Secretary J. W. Hoopes, of the Texas Bankers, reports arrangements nearly completed for the annual convention, to be held this year at Houston, May 10th, 11th and 12th. He says: Judge O. E. Dunlap will introduce the subject of "Bank Taxation: Do Banks in Texas Pay Their Just Proportion of Taxes?" Other important questions will be: "Legislation: Its Tendency and Effect on Development of the State"; and "Railroads and Their Relation to Capital."

S. W. Fisher of Austin, general-counsel of the association, will deliver an address on some topic of practical interest.

Amongst other distinguished visitors the convention will have the pleasure of welcoming Festus J. Wade, President of the Mercantile Trust Company, and the Mercantile National of St. Louis, who will make an address on "Texas." Col. H. P. Hilliard, president of the Central National of St. Louis, will also make an address, but has not yet indicated the subject.

The convention will be honored by the presence of Geo. M. Reynolds, President of the American Bankers Association, who is also president of the Commercial National of Chicago. This will be the first time our state convention has been honored with a visit from the executive head of the A. B. A., and will be duly appreciated by the membership.

A large attendance is already assured, and the bankers of Houston can be relied upon to be hospitable hosts.

The executive committee have approved the general plans proposed by President T. C. Yantis, which contemplate a Pacific coast tour and a visit to the Alaska-Yukon Exposition. The arrangement of details and management has been delegated to the secretary. The cost not including meals will be about $200. July 3d to 23d is time planned on for the trip to the coast.

Row Over Loan to China

Paris, April 11.—A conference of German French and British bankers was held here Friday and Saturday to discuss the question of making a $15,000,000 loan to China for the extension of the Pekin-Hankow Railway to Canton.

German bankers have already practically engaged themselves to supply this loan, but British and French bankers consider that this engagement violates the agreement made in Berlin in February last, when the British, German and French bankers agreed not to advance money to China without having a European agent in that country to check expenditures and insure that the money was devoted to the purpose for which it was intended.

The Germans not having executed this precaution in the case in question, the British and French bankers refused to participate in the loan, and if the Germans persist in concluding it the others intend to protest to Pekin on the ground that it violates the convention made with China in 1905.

The capital of the First National of Toyah, Tex., has been increased from $25,000 to $40,000.

Secretary Keyser Gives Data Concerning the Protective Work Accomplished During the Past Year by the Missouri Association

During the last few weeks an unusual number of forgery cases have been referred to us for attention. In each case an appropriate reward has been offered by the association, but we have thought best to conduct the search for these criminals privately, by personal correspondence with sheriffs and police officers, whose efforts would be the most likely to be effective. Our experience in such matters indicates that, as a rule, a "still hunt" brings better results than are attained by general publicity, except, perhaps, in such cases as relate to criminals whose work bears the ear marks of professionals, and, therefore, justify a general warning to members.

Hence, a large part of the association's protective work has been conducted in a private way. The recent frequency of successful bank crimes, however, seems to render it advisable to warn our members again with reference to the danger of extending accommodations without first exercising due care in ascertaining the genuineness of every transaction, being especially cautious in dealing with strangers and persons of doubtful integrity.

We realize that the operations of bank criminals are sometimes so well planned as to render it almost impossible to detect their criminal nature. On the other hand, cases are frequently referred to us which we cannot help believing could have been prevented by the use of a reasonable amount of precaution.

The association is always willing and anxious to assist its members when they are victimized. At the same time, the association appreciates the great assistance that can be rendered by its members in maintaining such safeguards as may be used to the end of minimizing the number of successful crimes. In this way losses to members would be reduced and the protective fund preserved for the more effective and systematic handling of unpreventable cases.

A source of considerable annoyance is what might be termed the "petty criminal," such as the person who draws small checks on banks in which he has no funds. As a rule, the plans of such persons can be very easily thwarted if members will simply be influenced by their good judgment instead of sympathy, a plausible story, or the insignificance of the amount involved. These small misdemeanor offenses are more difficult for us to handle successfully than are the offenses of greater magnitude.

Please bear in mind that lack of diligence in preventing crime is an encouragement to criminals; also that every petty case taken up by the association works to the disadvantage of the association's efficiency in dealing with cases of a more serious nature, for the reason that our protective fund is necessarily drawn upon for the one to the disadvantage of the other. The assistance of every member is eagerly sought to the end of preventing crime and increasing the success of our already efficient protective department.

For your information we give the following data concerning the protective work that has been accomplished during the past year by the Missouri Bankers Association in connection with bank burglaries:

Two rewards of $500 each have been paid—one for Chas. Wilde, who was sent to the penitentiary for five years for assisting in holding up the Bank of Aldrich on the afternoon of December 12, 1907; and another for Harry O'Neil, now serving a fifteen year term in the penitentiary for robbing the Bank of Camden Point on the night of December 27, 1907.

Clyde Reed, who was caught with O'Neil on the same charge, broke jail May 10, 1908, and is now at large. Recently a man giving the name of William Turner, voluntarily confessed to the Kansas City police authorities that he was implicated with three others in this burglary.

T. C. Jackson and J. N. Hartnett have been sent to the penitentiary for ten years each for burglarizing the Citizens Bank of Rocky Comfort on the night of November 26, 1908. The association's reward of $1,000 is pending. When these burglars were caught, over 75 per cent of the stolen money was recovered.

Pat Billings, a young boy, has been sent to the Reform School for a term of five years for stealing a small amount from the cash drawer of the Bank of Noel during the cashier's absence at lunch hour.

Two suspects have been arrested, with reasonable assurance of their guilt, in connection with an attempted robbery of the Farmers Bank of Bogard, which occurred on the night of February 20, 1909.

The fact of the association's standing reward of $500 for each burglar that attacks a member is becoming widely known among officers of the law, not only in Missouri, but in other states as well. In view of the large reward offered by the association, the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation offers a reward of $200 in Missouri for the apprehension and conviction of each person that attacks a bank insured in that company; whereas in other states this company offers a reward of only half that amount. Members should keep their association reward signs prominently displayed. They serve the double purpose of a reminder to sheriffs and police officers, and a warning to anyone contemplating burglary.—W. F. Keyser, Secretary, M. B. A.

Mississippi Bankers Program

Secretary B. W. Griffith, of the Mississippi Bankers Association, has arranged a most attractive program for his next convention which will be held at Columbus, on May 11th and 12th. The response to the address of welcome will be made by J. W. McGrath, president of the Commercial Bank, Brookhaven. Among the addresses will be one on "Government or Postal Savings Banks," by Lucius Teter, president Chicago Savings Bank & Trust Company, Chicago, and one on the "Modern Pharisees," by E. L. Rice, Cashier Bank of Commerce & Trust Company, Memphis.

An interesting feature of the convention will be a debate on the subject "Shall we have a Uniform Currency? Issued by the Government(?) And through all Banks, State and National, on same terms?" The affirmative be conducted by C. A. Johnson, president First State Bank, Columbus; the negative by Sol. Wexler, vice-president Whitney-Central National Bank, New Orleans.

After final adjournment many of the delegates and visitors will take a special train for New Orleans to attend the meetings of the Louisiana Bankers Association which will be in session in that city on May 12th and 13th.

Plans for Simpler Paper Money

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Coolidge has approved a plan for systematizing designs for United States notes and coin certificates, thus carrying into effect a scheme of uniformity in portrait and general design for notes of the same denomination of each class. It will embody the ideas of officials of the treasury department, bankers, business men, and currency experts.

At present there are nineteen different designs for United States notes and coin certificates of various denominations. Under the new plan there will be only nine.

For instance, there are now two designs for five-dollar notes. The silver certificate bears the head of an Indian chief, while the United States note bears a portrait of Andrew Jackson, accompanied by a symbolic group of a frontiersman and family. The ten-dollar gold certificate carries a portrait of Michael Hillegas, the first treasurer of the United States. The silver certificate of the same denomination carries the portrait of Thomas A. Hendricks, the ten-dollar greenback a buffalo. There is equal variety in the other denominations.

Under the plan adopted, all classes of notes of each denomination will carry the same portrait, nor will any portrait be used which will not be immediately recognizable by every person who handles money. The one-dollar silver certificate will carry the portrait of Washington; the two-dollar silver certificate that of Jefferson. The five-dollar note, whether silver certificate or greenback, will carry the portrait of Lincoln; the ten-dollar gold and silver certificates and United States notes that of Cleveland; the twenty-dollar that of Jackson; the fifty-dollar that of Grant; the one-hundred dollar that of Franklin; the five-hundred dollar that of Salmon P. Chase, and the one-thousand dollar that of Alexander Hamilton.

The portraits of Hillegas, Monroe, Silas Wright, Lewis, Clark, Mansfield and others will be eliminated. The eagle, the buffalo, and the Indian head, which have proved to be easily counterfeited, also will disappear. All duplications will done away with.

The classes of notes will be differentiated by color and by other distinguishing marks. The new system of notes, it is believed, will tend to discourage counterfeiting.

Nebraska Group Meeting Dates

Four of the groups of the Nebraska Bankers Association have set the date for their 1909 meetings:

Group Two, Fremont; April 22d.

Group Three, Creighton; April 22d.

Group Six, Hot Springs; S. D., June 7th and 8th.

Group Four will meet May 12th but has not yet decided the meeting place. The other two groups have not decided upon dates. Announcement made by Wm. B. Hughes, Secretary.

Knapp Bros., Bankers, Fail

Utica, N. Y., April 14.—Schedules in voluntary bankruptcy of Knapp Brothers, bankers at Deposit and Callicoon, were filed in the United States District Court yesterday. They show firm liabilities aggregating $1,360,000 and nominal assets of $934,603. Banks in New York, Albany and Binghamton are secured for $1,048,644. The firm's assets includes notes of Outing Publishing Company, now in the hands of receivers, aggregating $750,000. Knapp Brothers also held $234,000 first mortgage bonds of the publishing company and debenture bonds amounting to $40,000. They also held 979 shares in the Binghamton Trust Company. It was a typical private bank, in business on the depositors' money.

Call to be Made on All Banks

Washington, D. C., April 15.—When the next call is sent out by Comptroller Murray asking the national banks to state their condition at the close of business on a date yet to be fixed, a similar call will be made throughout the country on savings banks, trust companies and private banks, all on a new form prepared by the national monetary commission, with the advice and consent of the comptroller. The new form differs from the old in technique only, being designed to ascertain with more minuteness the character of deposits, whether in gold, silver, checks or other commercial paper, and how withdrawals are made and pay rolls met.

The object of the general call is to try out the new form with a view to its permanent adoption and also to obtain for the monetary commission the status of all the banks of the country on a given day.

The Linton, N. D., State Bank recently increased its capital stock from $15,000 to $25,000.

President Taft and the Tariff

Washington, D. C., April 15.—The President's share in the framing of the tariff bill will be much larger from now on than it has heretofore been. Mr. Taft kept hands off in the house to a considerable extent, thinking that the situation did not hold out much hope of success and that it would be better to wait for the crucial struggle in the senate. The leaders of the upper house are now planning to shorten things as much as practicable and this policy has the approval of the President.

Express Companies on the Carpet

Washington, D. C., April 12.—A case of unusual importance will be heard in Chicago on April 26th by representatives of the interstate commerce commission.

It is that of the American Bankers Association against various express companies, in which the companies are alleged to practice discrimination against bankers in the transportation of money.

The companies are the American, Adams, United States, Wells-Fargo & Co., and Southern Pacific express companies. Enormous amounts of cash and securities are handled annually by the express companies, and if, as is maintained by the bankers, it can be shown that they do discriminate against regular banking institutions, a drastic order is likely to issue from the commission.

German Bankers Accused

Paris, April 13.—The French and English bankers who competed without success for the $15,000,000 Hankow-Canton Railroad loan to China have come out with a strongly worded protest against the German bankers who presumably have been successful. They charge that the Germans waived the "Tientsin conditions," by which bankers agreed in the future not to loan money to China, except on the understanding that the lenders be allowed to appoint a representative to oversee the expenditure of the money in question.

The Franklin Bank of Louisville

After increasing its capital stock from $100,000 to $200,000 the Franklin Bank of Louisville will become a national institution. Application for a charter will be made at once, and as soon as all of the Government's requirements have been fulfilled this will be granted. There will be no change in the officers or personnel of the directorate.

a concrete block bank building in Helix, work to be begun at once.

The Bank of Marrowbone

J. E. Pace has been elected to the cashiership of the Bank of Marrowbone, Ky., to succeed G. Davis, who recently resigned.

New Bank for Everett

Union Trust to Reopen

Providence, R. I., April 15.—The Union Trust Company, of this city, will observe the anniversary of its reopening, following a temporary receivership of three months, by paying $3,200,000 to depositors on May 4th. ## Purchases Oklahoma Bank

George W. Bellamy, lieutenant-governor of Oklahoma, has purchased the Oklahoma State Bank in Munhall from G. W. Burford & Son, who established it April 11, 1898. Recently the Burfords organized a state bank in Enid, which they will manage. Bellamy took charge at Munhall to-day.

Missouri Bankers

The executive council of the Missouri Bankers Association has issued invitations for the state convention at St. Joseph, May 5th-6th, the meeting to be held in the St. Joseph Auditorium. A fine speaking program has been prepared. The headquarters will be at Hotel Robidoux. Hon. A. P. Clayton, mayor of St. Joseph, will welcome the bankers on behalf of the city, and J. G. Schneider will voice the welcome of the clearing house. President J. R. Dominick, of the Missouri Bankers Association, will respond, while making his address on the annual review of banking progress in the state of Missouri. W. F. Keyser will report for secretary's office and A. O. Wilson will read the treasurer's report. The regular committees and the group chairmen will all have a hearing. The delegates will be seated by their groups, as indicated in the program. During the first day of the convention W. W. Bowman, secretary of the Kansas Bankers, will deliver an address on "The Significance of Present Day Agitation," and C. F. Enright, one of the best speakers in the Missouri Association, will represent St. Joseph on the program. His subject is "A Bank's Duties to the Community."

The Missouri Association has one important address each year by the best speaker obtainable. This year it has J. A. S. Pollard, the orator-artist of Fort Madison, Iowa, who will speak on "Foreign Exchange." At least that is the subject down on the program. Just what the humorous Mr. Pollard will say is something no one can anticipate.

The "big gun" on the second day of the program is C. H. Huttig, president of the Third National of St. Louis, on "The Financial and Commercial Situation." Mr. Huttig is an able member of the currency commission, and will be listened to attentively. Other speakers on the second day will be C. C. Evans, J. F. Downing of Kansas City, and J. F. Johnson, of New York. An important part of the proceedings will be the selection of two members of the executive council of the A. B. A., this will occur under the new provision of the constitution adopted at Atlantic City.

In the afternoon of the second day Virgil M. Harris, of the Mercantile Trust Co., of St. Louis, will talk on "Practical Legal Points for Bankers."

Mr. Harris permits himself to be interviewed from the floor while he is talking, and the delegates always indulge themselves freely asking questions on every part of the subject.

The St. Joseph banks will tender an informal reception to delegates and visitors, on Tuesday evening, May 5th. They will serve tea for the ladies present, in the parlors of the hotel on Wednesday evening. There will be a ball, a smoker and a vaudeville entertainment, from which the delegates and visitors may make their selections. On the afternoon of Thursday the ladies will be given a ride in automobiles, through the parks and boulevards of the city. It is the usual Keyser brand of program, a model for the cult.

New Bank for Lapwai

A new bank has been organized at Lapwai, Ida.

South Texas National at Houston

The new home being erected for the South Texas National at Houston is modeled upon the Central Trust Company building at Chicago. The resemblance is striking. Marble and bronze are to be used exclusively in the interior. Every modern convenience is being installed.

Charles Dillingham is president, J. E. McAshan, vice-president, and B. D. Harris, cashier. Deposits, three and a quarter millions.

G. W. Galbreath

G. W. Galbreath is back at his desk in the New Third National banking room, St. Louis, after a winter in Southern California. He and Mr. Huttig take turns at the helm and take vacations in turn also. The Third has not slipped backward, not a cog, since Galbreath first sat down at the cashier's desk. He and Huttig make a rare team.

Edward S. Lacey

President Edward S. Lacey, of the Bankers National, has returned from California, where he spent the winter, looking like a picture of health by one of the old masters. He said he enjoyed everything but the sanded greens on the golf courses. "Nothing can beat the middle states at anything" was his final comment.

Geo. D. Bartlett

George D. Bartlett of Minneapolis and the American Bank Protection Company of that city, was in Chicago last week. Mr. Bartlett still is the manager of the insurance department of the Wisconsin Bankers Association and one of the most popular bankers in that state. He has sold his banking interests at Stanley, Wis.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THE new California banking commissioner is named Alden Anderson, a man of widest possible banking experience, and known all over the state. Mr. Anderson was president of the Capitol Bank at Sacramento for three years, a member of the board of directors of the California National in the same city for six years, and was president of the California Banking and Trust Company of Sacramento for three years. On the first of last November he accepted the vice-presidency of the London-Paris National Bank of San Francisco and was made vice-president and assistant manager of the merger of the two institutions, now known as the Anglo and London-Paris National Bank of San Francisco.

IN addition he is of the soil, also, being an extensive apple grower and fruit farmer. He organized the fruit shippers and can have any public office he will take. The bank commissionership appealed to him and he had the refusal of it from the first. No other name was considered. The place under the new law pays $10,000 a year.

"PRACTICAL Advertising—the Art of Publicity"—by Truman A. De Weese, is the newest thing out on advertising. But oh! horrors! He cites (page 168) a big Chicago bank as king of the stupid offenders, in his chapter on bank advertising. Then he shows it might have been done. Publicity men will please take heed.

IOWA was happy last week. Not because Frank Gotch put down the Turkish rebellion in Chicago, alone, but because Iowa will be richer by several thousands. Not that Iowa bankers ever bet, for they do not. But Gotch doesn't blow his money back of the red lights, nor go into sure thing, wire-tapping ventures. He's an Iowan of the real kind. Believes in Iowa land; Iowa mortgages and Iowa banks. He's rich already and still piling it up.

THERE will be a special car to the New Orleans tri-state convention which ought to carry a merry party. The season will be young and the "brain fog" does not set in among the convention-goers until about August 15th.

THE Farmers National of York, Neb., continues to send out exceptional literature. Here's a part of a recent letter to non-depositors:

"I want to write you a letter that will make you think of 'the bank that always treats you right.' Can I write such a letter that when you have occasion to cash a check, no matter on what bank drawn, to deposit money, or to borrow money, you will think of the 'bank owned by nearly forty farmers and land owners owning over 12,000 acres (worth over a MILLION dollars) of York county land?' We are in a position to assist prospective buyers of farms, city property or a business, and you will be doing them, as well as us, a favor by directing them to us."

THIS year the Ohio Bankers Association will meet in annual convention at Toledo, June 14 and 15th. Headquarters of the association will be at the Hotel Secor, and after the adjournment of the convention the convention visitors will board a fine new steamer for a tour of the Georgian Bay district and a visit to Sault Ste. Marie.

"THE TREASURY" is the name of a very beautiful "magazine devoted to the safeguarding of funds and estates," published by the Union Trust Co. of Detroit. The April number cannot be beat and has the big clumsy house organ which would deceive you by pretending to be "a paper of general circulation" beaten a mile. Neither does the Union bunco its borrowers by "requesting" advertising, a species of secondary discount on loans. It really is fine.

"SMALL Depositors are Welcome" says "The Treasury." "Equal care and attention are given by the Union Trust Company to a deposit of $100 and a deposit of $10,000 or more. The so-called small customer receives the same courtesy and consideration as the person who transacts business in large sums. Many modest sums make up a great aggregate."

CHARLES E. WALTERS of Council Bluffs, Iowa, had the genius to discover a lucrative field in bank brokerage. In a recent circular to banks he says:

"Up to the time that the sale of banks was originated by this company there were practically few banks sold in the proper sense of the word. 'Transfers' were occasionally made from one interest to another in the same institution, evidenced publicly by a change of personnel in the bank's official staff. Sometimes ambitious young men were admitted to a minority interest. But sales, as sales, were infrequent and inconsequential. Sales of Montana banks to Ohio bankers, or institutions in any other state to bankers, living at great distances, were rarities and invariably accidents of some sort."

THE lake trip is the fad of the up-to-date bankers association. Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin will so disport themselves, mixing outing with business. Why not Illinois? The states could meet at Mackinac and have a four-state convention upon historic ground which even the A. B. A. big show could not equal.

DELAYED printing is the only reason members of the Council Club have not had an important letter from Secretary Ingwerson, at Clinton. Every ex-member of the big council will get one and the important thing is the answer. Let it be frank and prompt. The club officers are aiming to make the initial banquet at Chicago one long to be remembered.

EVEN Iowa might join the water wagon style and "go up the river." The rivalry between the fast water craft of Ft. Madison (Commodore J. A. S. Pollard) and those of Clinton (Commodore C. B. Mills) could thus be settled before good, impartial witnesses.

SIMON CASADY of Des Moines was in Chicago contemporaneously with the distinguished Mr. Gotch of the same state. The Central State Bank, under Mr. Casady's presidency is making rapid gains.

Governmental Banking

The highest development has been reached in France, but further powers to be given will extend the benefits to all—The plan as worked in Germany, Austria and Hungary—La Mar Middleton believes it adaptable to America, and gives his reasons.

Paris, April 10.—Having been engaged with the American Monetary Commission during most of the period of its European investigations, the writer has continued his observations. With no intent to influence or combat the opinions of the readers of the THE CHICAGO BANKER, I hope to furnish the truth about such features of governmental banking as all may appreciate whether he favors or opposes that plan.

The Postal Bank in France

Having developed the postal savings bank system to a degree not reached in any other country, the French government now proposes to enlarge the scope of the bank postoffice still further. It is planned to give the postoffice the right to do a general banking business, to accept funds for deposit, issue check books and reinvest the funds in a larger field than that hitherto allowed the ordinary, simple postal savings bank.

This plan has already been realized in Austria, and in Hungary and has been operating in Germany, since the first of the year. In the latter country no interest is allowed depositors, which differentiates it from systems working in other countries, and particularly from the French project which provides for an interest of not lower than 2½ per cent. It is in order to make possible this interest payment that the ministry of finance asks the right to reinvest deposits outside the limits laid down for the Casse d'Epargne, in which are invested the savings of the poorer classes throughout the country. On the contrary, the new postal bank is expected to attract the prosperous commercial class all over France, men who buy and sell and who have grown tired of the old-fashioned ways of payment through notaries of the chief towns in country districts and who want the bank at their elbow—who desire and need, in fact, a really up-to-date bank.

Best Fitted for Work

What organization in France is better fitted, asks the minister of finance, to fill this role than the French postoffice system, which has its ramifications in every town or hamlet and an ever-ready installation and machinery to transact any kind of commercial banking business? Indeed, there is no institution in France, neither Credit Lyonnais nor any other, so well equipped to be the bank of the farmer and the provincial merchant and manufacturer.

As a matter of fact, it is the provincial public itself which has put this new idea into the government's head. A good many years ago, but during the time of the republic, the same public tired of the postal money order, of the time necessary to cash it and the various kinds of red tape connected with it, demanded something more "handy" and got it, in the form of what is known as the "bon de poste" or impersonal postal check payable immediately on presentation and carrying along with it no necessity of its holder being identified. This is really postal money and passes from hand to hand like ordinary money. Of very perishable nature, however, it soon finds its way back to the post-office. Still, it has proved of immense value to the smaller business world, and has practically put the money order out of use. It is expected that the postal check, operating in a larger field and in larger sums, will find a still larger area of usefulness.

No Permanent Deposit Needed

The depositor will not be expected to maintain any permanent deposit in the postal bank as is demanded by similar institutions in Austria, in Hungary and in Switzerland. In these countries a sum of about $20 is required as a preliminary to opening an account, and when this is withdrawn, at the closing up of an account, the bank gets a certain percentage of it. Not so in France. The minister of finance has studied these foreign systems before framing his own bill and has observed that since the clientele becomes a very large one postal checks pass from one depositor to another, being debited or credited to one or the other's account without the opportunity often arising for a payment in actual money. Thus the banking department has always on hand a very substantial and practically stable fund with which to operate on its own account. In Austria, for example, at the present time, there are about 85,000 depositors in the postoffice bank who have on hand in the neighborhood of $1,500,000,000. During last year there was a movement from one account to another of about $1,000,000,000, the other $500,000,000 having been paid out in cash, a large part of which ultimately returned to the bank. Under these circumstances, and in order to attract and encourage the class which it is meant to benefit, the French postal bank will ask for no deposit of a permanent nature, and will in every other way try to do away with the minute annoying formalities and routine which made the notarial office a torment to past generations and an anomaly in the present busy age when, even in France, time is money.

M. Blin Gives His Views

The Daily News correspondent has in the past been greatly indebted to the administration of the French postal savings bank organization for accurate information as to its operation and its general history, and in particular to M. Gustave Blin, one of its officials who shows a truly passionate enthusiasm over the future of the postal department in the role of a bank for the people. He believes that the time will come when the main banking business of the entire country will be done by the postal administration, with advantage to the public and the French budget. Yet, in contrast to what seems the conviction in certain quarters in the United States, he sees no reason why other banking institutions need raise the hue and cry that their existence is imperiled, nor how any purely technical reasons can be invoked to prove that there is danger in intrusting a large part of the national banking interests to a governmental administration.

"There remains," he said to me, "a tremendous role for the unofficial bank to play, and the larger the country the greater that role. We are termed by financiers of the United States a 'small country,' yet some of the greatest banking institutions of the world have grown to colossal proportions here. In fact, you have scarcely one institution of the banking category so extensive as two or three that I could name here, even omitting the Bank of France. These do a kind of business forever outside the province of our schemes for the development of the postoffice bank. The floating of large loans, the establishment of industrial enterprises, the quick turning over of funds intrusted to their keeping give them a place in the national finances which it is certainly never our idea to invade. They are stock concerns; their business is to make money. Our aim is to provide a great public convenience.

Great Field in America

"A national committee composed of sound experts is to preside over the investments of such deposits as accrue to the postal bank. They will be invested in city, departmental or national, domestic and foreign bonds. Such investments constitute but a comparatively small part of the disposition made by the great French banks of their funds. Without having an intimate knowledge of all the conditions existing in the United States, we think here that with a population close on to 100,000,000, that country offers such a field for the postal bank as exists nowhere else in the world. At any rate private interests should not be allowed to dominate those of the public. In the many discussions on this subject, which I have had with prominent American bankers I have heard no valid argument against the prompt establishment of the postal system. It seems one which becomes more and more expedient as the population increases."

The passage of the new bill is a foregone conclusion. It is so much so, in fact, that the public printing officers have already gone to work to supply the 10,000 postoffices of France with circulars and other papers necessary for the information of the prospective clientele.

The Eagle Savings and Loan Company

The twenty-seventh anniversary of the Eagle Savings & Loan Company of Cincinnati was celebrated this week in Central Turner Hall, on Walnut Street. Nearly 300 members of the association attended. A sumptuous banquet was served. Speeches were made by Toastmaster Fred Tuke, Judge Bates, Joseph Meyer, Henry Rosenthal, Martin Boering and George Holz. The report of the secretary showed that the assets of the association were $419,000.

Florida Bankers and Sea Island Cotton

Live Oak, Fla., April 23.—The Florida Bankers convention convened here to-day with a large attendance and Secretary De Saussure had prepared a splendid program. Among the speakers was A. W. McLeran, of Wellborn, a known authority upon sea island cotton, a product upon which the future hopes of the Everglade section of this state may depend.

The address of welcome was delivered by Mayor R. E. McNeill, of Live Oak, the response being by C. A. Carson, of Kissimmee. President F. A. Wood, of St. Petersburg, reviewed banking conditions in Florida for the year. There was a C. P. A. address by Walter Mucklow and the general discussion of the session covered postal banks and deposit guaranty.

Among other things Mr. McLeran, in his Sea Island cotton address, said in part:

The Sea Island crop constitutes only one-half of one per cent of the entire American production. Its value is only about one per cent of that of the total cotton crop of the United States. Its culture is restricted by soil and climate to a narrow strip of the mainland of Georgia and Florida, and to the islands along the coast of South Carolina. Its marketing and consumption engage the attention of a comparatively small number of people. And yet Sea Island cotton is seldom mentioned without attracting immediate attention. It has played a part in the creation and in the development of the cotton trade, which is out of all proportion to its quantity and value, and it has had an influence on the history and economic development, not only of the southeastern portion of the United States, but also upon that of the British West India Island possessions. Only from eight per cent to twelve per cent of the crop is actually produced on islands; the balance being grown on the mainland from seed originally imported from the islands. The cotton is a black-seed, long-stapled cotton. It belongs to the group Gossypium Barbadosense, so-called because it was supposed to have been first found in the Barbadoes. It is said to have been indigenous to the West India Islands, a perennial plant growing wild there. The first reference to this West India Sea Island cotton is probably found in a pamphlet published in London in 1666, entitled "A Brief Description of the Province of Carolina on the Coast of Florida." This pamphlet contained the following:

"In the midst of this fertile province, in the latitude of 34 degrees, there is a colony of English settled, who landed there on the 29th of May, A. D., 1664. They brought with them most sorts of seeds and roots of the Barbadoes, which thrive in this most temperate climate. They have indigo, very good tobacco and cotton wool."

Another and still more definite reference to long-stapled cotton is probably that of Captain Roman, of the British army, who, while travelling in East Mississippi in 1722, wrote that he found black-seeded cotton growing on the farm of a Mr. Krebs, and also a machine invented by Mr. Krebs for separating the lint from the seed.

In the year 1733, General James Oglethorpe sailed from England for the purpose of founding a colony where the oppressed and unfortunate, principally the inmates of the debtors' prisons, might find refuge and begin life anew. Seventeen miles from the mouth of the Savannah river, he founded the city of Savannah, and named the infant colony Georgia. The records show that in the following year cotton was being grown in the gardens of the settlers.

In 1741, Seabrook's description of St. Simon's Island mentions the fact that the soldiers of General Oglethorpe's regiment planted small plots of land near their camps in cotton, which, when gathered, their wives spun and knit into stockings. In 1749, we read that the London Trustees of Georgia objected to the colonists spinning and weaving their cotton, because such a custom might interfere with the cotton manufacturers of Great Britain.

This West India cotton, however, bore little resemblance to the present Sea Island product.

At present Sea Island cotton is spun by only a very small number of spinners, yet the spinner who looks to the future and is determined to succeed is likely to be constantly saying to himself, "Spin finer." In order to do this, however, we must have the proper raw material. Cheap cotton will produce poor yarn. It cannot furnish the machinery and, therefore, it is likely as time goes on that an increasing number of spinners will be seeking Sea Island cotton, and will wish to have a regular abundant classified and reasonable priced supply. To all I would say, that the territory where Sea Island cotton is now raised, and especially in East Florida, is capable of producing twice or even three times the amount of Sea Island cotton now grown. A year ago the whole crop reached a total of 125,000 bales, which was the largest on record. A crop two or three times this size can be produced within the belt growing Sea Island cotton. We hope that the quality of our cotton raised in the United States will appeal to the users and spinners thereof, so that the demand will increase to such an extent as to justify a much larger crop than is now raised.

The smallest crop on record was reported for 1883, as 25,444 bales, of which Florida raised 14,073 bales. The highest average price on record (32 cents) was paid for this crop. The lowest price recorded was 11 cents for the crop of 1898. The largest crop was made in 1905 (123,364 bales) of which Florida produced 42,437 bales. The price of Florida cotton usually averages somewhat higher than Georgia's, but Carolina's range considerably higher than either of the two.

Bankers Trust Company

The stockholders of The Bankers Trust Co., St. Louis, have just voted to issue a half million dollars more stock at $200 per share, and four-fifths of this new issue of stock have been subscribed. They now have $500,000 capital, and a surplus and undivided profit of $200,000; and the increase will give $1,000,000 capital and $700,000 surplus.

The Bankers has been paying dividends at the rate of 4 per cent quarterly and can undoubtedly continue dividend payments at the same rate on the increased capital, as their business is quite profitable and rapidly increasing. The Bankers Trust is the only concern in the Mississippi Basin doing a regular trust company business and at the same time not receiving deposits. The officers are: J. E. Franklin, president; B. F. Edwards, vice-president; C. S. Marsh, secretary; L. S. Parker, treasurer; A. P. Mackley, assistant secretary; F. E. Williams, assistant secretary.

During the six years of its existence the company has paid regularly annual dividends—the first year 12 per cent, then 15 per cent, and for the past two years, 16 per cent. Additional profits of about $100,000 have been charged off against premiums paid for bank stocks purchased, the policy of the Company being to carry all its bank stocks at book value.

The company now has stock in over seventy country banks. Its holdings have a book value of $1,100,000 and a market value of probably $200,000 more than this.

Something more than half the banks in which the company is interested were established by it and the stock was obtained at par. Close touch with all these banks is kept through a system of semimonthly reports and regular examinations by a traveling auditor.

Lord Avebury on Peace and Happiness

A lifetime as a successful writer and a world known scientist fitted Sir John Lubbock, now Lord Avebury, to write upon peace and happiness in their true relationship to other attainable things such as wealth, power, knowledge, fame, etc. In his 75th year he has summed up the experiences of a lifetime in a book filled with simple, sensible advice on such topics as the proper treatment of the body and the mind, on education, on our attitude toward children, toward friends and enemies, on riches, on nature and religion—these form the subject-matter of "Peace and Happiness." From the experience of his seventy-five years, the veteran author brings to bear on a subject, which could not fail to be trite in the hands of a lesser man, his extensive knowledge of affairs, his scientific attainments, the wide range of his reading and observation. The result is an analysis of the elements of human happiness, distinguished for sanity of viewpoint, wisdom of conclusions and wealth of illustration and allusion. Lord

Avebury carries his learning easily, and the admirable prose style in which he conveys his ideas makes the book eminently readable. Published by the MacMillan Company, New York, at $1.50.

H. C. Chatfield-Taylor's New Book

Overpraise could scarcely be possible in the mention of the high ability which Chatfield-Taylor has brought to bear upon his favorite topic in "Fame's Pathway." His great achievement in writing the life of Molière gave him an insight into the times in which that great genius lived, the very atmosphere in which he moved. This impelled to put Molière into romance, which he has done in "Fame's Pathway." The early life and love affairs of the great French dramatist furnish the romance, the action and the characters. The Paris of Molière's day give color, all the color one could wish. Chatfield-Taylor, a rich dilettante with literary talent, is a devotee at the shrine of Molière. He gave the world the best history of Molière and his times and now the best love romance, written around the most popular Parisian of his day.

The illustrations, quite numerous, are by "J. O. B." (Compte de Breyville), who did such fine work in "Molière—a Biography" by the same author. Published by Duffield & Company, New York, at $1.50.

Marion Central Bank

The Marion Central Bank, Marion, Alabama, stands on the roll of honor of Alabama banks. It has a surplus and profits of $75,000.00 and capital of $50,000.00. The bank was originally chartered in 1872, and has successfully passed through the panics of 1873, 1893, 1907, without loss of confidence by its customers, and with increased business and profits after each trying period. The average deposits are about $300,000.00, with highest point of loans about $225,000.00.

The officers are James A. Moore, president; A. F. Armstrong, cashier; D. K. Mason, assistant cashier.

New Clearing House Association

Wednesday the old Columbia, (O.) Clearing House Association, which has been in existence for many years, passed out of existence and its place is taken by the new Clearing House Association, which was organized a week ago. So far as the depositors in the banks are concerned there will be no change noticeable except that all of the banks using the clearing house will have uniform hours for closing. Hereafter the 16 members and 10 other banks which clear through the members will open for business at 9 a. m. and close at 2 p. m., except on Saturday, when the banks will close at noon, and Saturday evening, when such banks as keep open that evening will open at 6:30 and close at 8:30.

All of the new rules, with the exception of the one requiring 25 per cent reserve to be maintained against deposits by members and 20 per cent reserve by non-members, will take effect to-day. The reserve rule will take effect October 1st. All of the banks which were members of the old clearing house are associated in the new organization, and its officers are the same.

This ends a long contest for possession of the bank. The bank failed in the fall of 1907 with $36,000,000 deposits. It was reorganized and W. B. Ridgely resigned the position of Comptroller of the Currency to accept the presidency. Subsequently Mr. Ridgely was ousted when Dr. Woods again secured control of the institution. Perry has been vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis, which is supposed to be backing the deal.

Fred. I. Kent Explains the New Travelers' Cheques

New York, April, 20.—The new travelers' cheques, issued by the American Bankers Association through the Bankers Trust Company, of New York, have become a reality. Bankers in every city and hamlet in the traveled world have been notified by Secretary F. E. Farnsworth, that the cheques are good for their face, and samples of the cheques furnished. They are very handsome and plainly state their value in the currency of the country where they may be used by travelers. On the reverse of the circular sent out the taker of the cheque is told how to reimburse himself for the funds paid out.

Fred I. Kent, who was the active chairman of the committee of the American Bankers Association, which began and carried on the war upon the express company travelers' cheque, was finally induced to accept a place with the Bankers Trust Company, of this city, there to supervise the actual introduction of A. B. A. cheques, the better and more aggressively to finish the battle so well begun. To make clear the whole matter Mr. Kent granted an interview in which he explained that, "In order to arrange a system of travelers' cheques that could be used by bankers throughout the United States, the American Bankers Association was obliged to select some one institution to arrange for their delivery to bankers, and also for their protection. As such a proposition was clearly within the province of a trust company, it only remained to make arrangements with some such institution along the lines suggested. Some members of the executive council of the American Bankers Association suggested that the Bankers Trust Company of New York be asked to undertake the matter. This company, not doing a commercial banking business, would not interfere with the deposit accounts of other members of the association, and having upon its board more members of the American Bankers Association than any other one institution, it was thought to be the logical company to undertake the matter for the association. The trust company officials took the matter under advisement, and at the request of the association made a careful investigation of the plan which had been suggested to them. This being found feasible, a contract was made with the association, under the terms of which the Bankers Trust Company agreed to introduce and carry on the plan for the association, making arrangements for the protection of its travelers' cheques, and as well, delivering same direct to bankers who desired to have them for sale.

"For the protection of all concerned, the cheques have been made as difficult to counterfeit as is possible, special safety devices having been introduced into their manufacture at very great expense. On this account there has been some delay in putting the cheques upon the market, but they are now ready for delivery, and orders are coming in from all parts of the United States. Many of the large New York and Chicago banks already have made arrangements to use the cheques.

"The Bankers Trust Company has no system of its own, but is engaged in carrying out its agreement with the American Bankers Association, under the terms of which it is bound to push the sale of the cheques.

A director in one of the large European banks examined the detail of the system recently, and expressed himself as being satisfied that it would furnish the best possible service to tourists, and stated that the European bankers fully approved of the action of the American Bankers Association, and would exert themselves to extend every courtesy to those carrying the travelers' cheques of the association. We enclose to banks a reduced fac-simile specimen of the $20 denomination. The idea is to have one form used by bankers throughout the United States. Such general use will make the forms become so well known to all who may be called upon to cash them that for safety and convenience they will surpass all other forms of travelers' exchange. The American Bankers Association travelers' cheques are not meant to displace letters of credit, but are intended to be used in conjunction with them, or by the tourist who carries too small an amount of money with him to make a letter of credit necessary.

"The American Bankers Association money orders, which have been issued for some time, are to have some changes introduced, which will considerably increase their value to the public and make them the best form of money order issued. The travelers' cheque carries its own identification, and is to be sold by bankers to those intending to leave their home cities or towns to travel in places where they are unknown and require identification. The money orders of the association are for sale to people desiring to remit funds to parties in other towns or cities. In such cases, those who receive the money orders are ordinarily in their home towns, and consequently identification will not be demanded. The money orders can be obtained by bankers direct from the American Surety Company of New York, who is handling this particular matter for the association. With these two systems being generally used by bankers throughout the United States, the banks should soon be able to take back all of the business along these lines now being done by illegitimate bankers."

New York Banking and News Letter

By J. R. MORGAN

This week the New York banks have gained from the Sub-Treasury $2,031,000 cash, and from the interior almost as much has been received on balance, so that to-day's weekly statement should show an increase in specie and legals of about $4,000,000. Loans should not disclose another heavy increase, so that the surplus may approach $14,000,000.

The movements of currency this week were heavier than usual. A feature was the large remittance of cash to Boston, there having been little exchange on Boston to be had in New York. At this season remittances are made for dry goods purchased in New England. Receipts were principally from nearby and Western points, and some amounts came from the South, although these last appear to be growing smaller.

The Sub-Treasury reports net receipts of $22,170,000 and net payments of $24,210,000, showing therefore excess payments of $2,031,000, against $671,000 paid by the government to the banks last week, and $5,820,000 paid by the government to the banks in this week a year ago.

Trust Companies Gain

An increase of $113,770,551 in resources and $116,239,741 in deposits of eighty-seven trust companies of the state from November 27th to March 24th last, is shown in reports made to the state banking department, according to a statement to-day by Superintendent Clark Williams. The total resources on March 24th were $1,540,430,110, and the total deposits were $1,253,684,591.

The aggregate loans made by trust companies on collateral on March 24th were $558,973,690, an increase of $38,505,063. Holdings of specie were $125,170,776, an increase of $38,000.

Guaranty Trust Company

Five new directors were elected at the annual meeting of the Guaranty Trust Company.

The new directors elected were: R. S. Lovett, Charles A. Peabody, Robert W. Goelet (all of whom are closely associated with Mr. Harriman), J. Rogers Maxwell, and U. P. Broughton.

The following directors, whose terms of office expired, were re-elected: Frederic Cromwell, Edwin Hawley, Levi P. Morton, Walter O. Oakman and James Speyer. In addition to the members named, the board also includes George F. Baker, E. H. Harriman, Alexander J. Hemphill, A. D. Juilliard, Oscar G. Murray, Daniel G. Reid, and H. H. Rogers.

Elected to Stock Exchange

Richard H. Swartwout, of the banking firm of Swartwout & Appenzellar, New York, has been elected a member of the New York Stock Exchange, and the firm will add a well equipped stock department to its present organization, which up to this time has made a specialty of bonds and railroad notes.

Receiver Appointed

John H. Sheppard, of this city, was appointed receiver for the firm of E. D. Shepard & Co., bankers and brokers. Application for the appointment was made by L. Laflin Kellogg, treasurer of the Yankee Fuel Company, the stock of which is mainly held by E. D. Shepard & Co. Mr. Kellogg asserted that Shepard & Co. had been in process of liquidation for a few months, and that the members of the firm had refused to turn over all the assets to a reorganization committee. The firm is composed of Edward D. Shepard and Henry A. Ensign, with Augustus T. Post as a special partner. The sums involved exceed $1,000,000.

Travelers' Cheques

The first 150,000 of the American Bankers Association Travelers' Cheques have been received by the Bankers Trust Company and sent out to issuing banks throughout the United States. Orders for the cheques are being received so rapidly as to severely tax the output of the American Bank Note Company, the engravers and printers of the cheques.

A vast amount of detailed labor has been necessary to bring the new Travelers' Cheque system up to a point where delivery of the paper to the banks could be made. Extensive correspondence with some 23,000 banks and bankers throughout the United States and several thousand banks of South America, Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia was necessary as preliminary to the inauguration of the system. In the meantime the very important and tedious work of manufacturing the scientifically protected paper and engraving the cheques has proceeded. The first finished cheques, serially numbered and printed with the names of issuing banks were received April 12th from the engravers by the Bankers Trust Company. As fast as the cheques are delivered to the Trust Company, an assortment of denominations is being forwarded under seal to the bank for which they were printed, with complete instructions, list of foreign correspondents, etc. Orders for the cheques are being filled in the order received, and to insure early delivery, bankers should order their cheques at once.

A number of travelers who sailed from New York this week supplied themselves with the new cheques and by this time doubtless some of the cheques will be in circulation abroad.

European bankers are co-operating cordially with the American Bankers Association to make the Travelers' Cheques in every sense international and to insure their instant success. Prominent continental bankers have expressed great satisfaction over the prospect of abating the annoyance cause by miscellaneous cheques with which Europe has been flooded by American travelers.

Exchange Memberships

E. H. Bagley and J. Clark Dean had their application for membership on the Chicago stock exchange favorably acted upon this week by the committee on admissions. Both are connected with the firm of S. B. Chapin & Co.

Kansas Land

The law recently enacted by the legislature of Kansas and approved by the governor of that state requiring all common carriers operating within the state to obtain permission from the state railway commission in advance of issuing any stock or capital obligations is so broad that capital issues put out by any railroad passing through that state even though it be incorporated under the laws of some other state, would fall under the supervision of the Kansas state commission. The law derives special interest from the fact that it was responsible for the temporary abandonment a month ago of the plan formulated by the Atchison management for the sale of $26,000,000 of convertible bonds.

New Bank Charters in Tennessee

Attorney-General Chas. T. Cates, Jr., of Nashville, Tenn., has delivered an opinion that the recent bank incorporating law passed by the legislature cannot be taken advantage of in an amendatory way. In order to receive the full benefits of the new act, with its double liability, a bank must reincorporate by surrendering the old charter and applying for a new charter under the new law.

New Bank Elects Officers

The directors of the new Farmers and Traders Bank of Laurel (Miss.) have elected the following officers: T. B. Bonner, president; K. C. Hall, vice-president; N. W. Collins, second vice-president, and Cicero Ferrall, cashier.

New Bank for Irapuato

A group of Guanajuato and Celaya capitalists are planning organization of a refaccionary bank, which will probably be called Banco Refaccionario del Bajio, according to Jose P. Bustamanto of Guanajuato, Mex. The bank will probably have a capital of $1,000,000, and will be located at Irapuato.

Alabama Bankers

The clearing house banks of Mobile have issued beautifully engraved invitations to bankers to attend the Alabama state convention, at Mobile, on May 11th-12th. W. P. G. Harding is president of the association and McLane Tilton is secretary. A fine program will be offered and the Mobile banks will again show their splendid hospitality in entertaining their guests and ladies.

More Tax on Corporations

The New Jersey senate has passed a bill increasing the annual tax on the capital stock of corporations formed under the laws of New Jersey.

The bill applies to corporations with $5,000,000 or more capitalization and increases the tax from $50 a million to $150. This would provide an annual revenue to the state of about $500,000.

It affects 200 corporations and would compel the United States Steel corporation to pay the state about $85,000 a year in addition to the $47,000 paid now.

Huntsville Banking Company

The new Huntsville (Tenn.) Banking Company has completed its organization with the following directors: J. I. Foster, John Hatfield, Philip Law, L. F. Boshers, T. S. Sexton, R. C. Jones, A. H. Dorsey, John N. Chambers, W. H. Potter, and L. Jeffers. The new bank is capitalized at $10,000, fully paid up, and will open its doors for business May 1st.

The Bank of Milltown

The Bank of Milltown (Ga.) has elected the following directors: J. E. Lewis, J. V. Talley, George B. Murrell, J. B. Strickland, J. J. Knight, W. L. Patten, M. C. Lee, R. L. Patten, and T. J. Crum. The officers chosen are: J. F. Lewis, president; J. V. Talley, first vice-president; George B. Murrell, second vice-president; M. W. Barger, cashier, and C. D. Tomlinson, assistant cashier.

French Postal Savings Banks

The latest statistics on French postal savings banks only come down to 1904. Then there were 7,883 banks, with 4,345,446 depositors and deposits, including interest due December 31st, of $229,158,290. The interest is 2½ per cent compounded.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Seeding conditions in the Northwest are reported by the local bankers as favorable. On the average spring farm work is up to the standard. Thomas Pierce, cashier of the Enderlin State Bank, N. D., says that 15 per cent of grain has been sown in his vicinity. Five per cent increase will be made in the wheat acreage. G. D. Nichols of the Fargo National, N. D., reports some backwardness in seeding, due to cold weather. M. D. Mawver of the Barnesville State Bank, Minn., says that seeding is somewhat behind. H. C. Peek, cashier of the Bank of Ellendale, N. D., reports seeding well started and about as early as the average. Durum wheat will cover larger area.

Opening of New Bank

The new Scandinavian-American National Bank of Minneapolis will open for business on May 15th. N. O. Werner, president of the Swedish American National, will be at the head of the bank. The other officers are as follows: Vice-presidents, C. E. Cotton, Andreas Ueland and C. L. Grandin; cashier, Knute Ekman. Mr. Grandin was president of the Peoples Bank and Mr. Cotton the cashier. Mr. Ekman was formerly with the Swedish American National as assistant cashier. The Farmers and Mechanics Savings Bank made a safe removal of its property from the National Bank of Commerce to its new building. The bank has been practically rebuilt. Fortunately at the time the overhauling of the building began the Farmers and National Bank of Commerce banking quarters were in disuse and the Savings Bank officials leased it for the several months required to make the changes in their own bank.

Minnesota Mutual Life

St. Paul men are boosting the Minnesota Mutual Life of that city by taking insurance in it to the amount of $250,000. Impetus to the movement was given at a banquet. After a searching examination it was reported that the company is entitled to the fullest confidence, and merits the unqualified indorsement and support of the business interests. In twenty-nine years the company has accumulated $20,000,000 insurance with income of more than $800,000 last year and payment to policyholders of $430,000. The members of the finance committee include Kenneth Clark, president of the Merchants National; George C. Power, president of the Second National; Donald S. Culver, vice-president of the National German American.

Judge J. W. Lusk

Judge J. W. Lusk, president of the National German American, is home from the south. He says: "If any man or woman wants to find a quiet, beautiful, resting place where 'Black Care' feels himself an alien, he should visit Summerville, S. C. It is a delightful place with an eighteen-hole golf course to prevent time from lagging unduly, but the course cannot be compared with that of the Town and Country Club. We stopped at Washington on our way home. As to the tariff, I do not think we shall see any revolutionary and harmful changes. We shall know nothing certain about the tariff bill until after the conference between the house and senate."

Personal Mention

J. R. Mitchell, president of the Capital National Bank, has ordered built a house of colonial design, two stories high with fifteen rooms. It is to be of brick. The site of the house has a frontage of 140 feet on Summit Avenue, the leading residence street of St. Paul. Adam Hannah, secretary and treasurer of the Savings Bank of Minneapolis, has returned from a foreign tour. O. M. Nelson, assistant cashier of the First National at St. Paul, read an address last week before the St. Paul Credit Men's Association on "Advantages of Co-operation in Banking." C. J. Peeples, vice-president of the American National, has returned from Chicago with the following words in his mouth: "Up in this part of the country we are feeling better and more hopeful, I believe, than in any other part of the country. Business men in Chicago are suffering from an attack of the commercial blues and it is even worst farther East. Here in St. Paul, Minneapolis and the Northwest we are decidedly more optimistic and in better shape than any other section of the country, so far as I am able to judge."

Stockholders must Pay

Judge H. R. Brill, of St. Paul, under the double liability law, has ordered that the stockholders of the former State Bank pay the Northwestern Trust Company, receiver, $100 on each share of stock held by them. The stockholders must pay in thirty days, in default of which the receiver is authorized to bring suit. A majority of stockholders will pay in sums ranging from $100 to $1,000.

Loss in Bank Clearings

In a way the recent consolidation of banks in Minneapolis has been disadvantageous, at least as resulting in a loss in the amount of bank clearings weekly, when compared with the totals of other cities. This is frequently misunderstood, in the light of the improvement in business. Comment has been made editorially by the newspapers on the fact that clearings are less than they were last year. "Where there were three large national banks, each formerly clearing a large volume of checks drawn on the other two, now there is one great bank doing business within its own walls," says one. "The volume of checks that formerly appeared in the clearing house reports between the three banks, is now eliminated from clearing house transactions."

Gipsy Smith at St. Paul

Even the bankers comment on the work which Gipsy Smith, evangelist, has been doing in St. Paul. Ben Baer, president of the American National, says: "The moral effect on business was unquestionably good. The effect was specific and general. The meetings had a good, wholesome effect on business, by raising the tone of things and encouraging individual responsibility."

Meeting of Group Nine

Crookston will entertain the Ninth Group of Minnesota bankers on April 28th. One hundred delegates will be present and the Commercial club is fitting up its new club rooms to prepare for the guests of the city. Some of the addresses will be as follows: "State Federation Work," Charles R. Frost, secretary of the Minnesota Bankers Association and of the Interstate Protective Association; "District Clearing House," W. D. Willard, cashier First National of Mankato; "Legislative Matters and Results," Senator A. D. Stephens, president Merchants National, Crookston; "Bank Taxation," Hugh N. Allen, Minneapolis; "Round Table," in charge of J. W. Wheeler, president of First National, Crookston.

Delegates to Seattle

Eleven delegates will go to the Seattle convention from the Minneapolis chapter of the American Institute of Banking. Nominations to date are as follows: President E. S. Jones,

J. C. Thomson, H. C. Libby, Gray Warren, Alonzo Atkin, L. E. Wakefield, C. B. Brombach. The election is not to take place until May 13th, but several nominations for officers have been named already. Among them are: Secretary, P. A. Sandberg; treasurer, H. C. Libby; member executive committee, H. E. Cobb. L. E. Wakefield, Gray Warren and J. G. MacLean are the team which will debate on May 15th with Chicago. They will take the negative of the question of the issue of credit currency by national banks.

Meeting of St. Paul Bank Clerks

The St. Paul bank clerks held their annual meeting last night and indulged in a debate on the subject of nationalizing all banks. Otto Wolff, of the German American, and Lawrence Drew, of the American National, were the affirmative, and T. L. Lee, of the Capital, and R. S. Sturley, of the American National, for the negative. The nominations were: President, H. R. Fairchild of the Merchants and Otto Wolff of the German American; for vice-president, A. J. Lee of the Second, John McGillick of the American and Leonard Flag of the Scandinavian American; for secretary, Theo. L. Lee of the Capital; for treasurer, S. R. Harley of the Second; R. L. Henley and C. G. Utz, both of the German American.

For executive committee: Frank Wichman, First; C. S. Dilther, Capital; E. B. Strate, Merchants; C. J. Gifford, Capital; J. A. Holmen, State Savings.

Delegates to the Seattle convention, to be headed by the new president: O. J. Schumacher, R. W. Lindke, W. K. Miller, Martin Ernest, Walter Honebrink, O. L. Nelson, Jacob Schaetzel, J. C. Engen.

President Pearsons and the committee, composed of R. W. Lindke, chairman, and H. R. Fairchild, O. J. Schumacher, John McGillick and A. J. Lee, are completing arrangements for a year's work covering three courses of instruction as follows: Practical Banking, Political Economy and Commercial Law. Instruction two evenings each week is contemplated and when the year's course is satisfactorily completed and an examination successfully passed a certificate or diploma will be issued. Competent and capable instructors will be secured and the work will be thorough. The value of such a system of training for young bankers cannot be overestimated. The chapters of the Twin Cities will co-operate in adopting the same plan next fall, and it is probable that the same instructors will be employed by both St. Paul and Minneapolis chapters.

Officials of the St. Paul banks are encouraging the local chapter to the extent that every president, vice-president, cashier and assistant cashier has signed an agreement to very generously support the movement and their annual dues as associate members, have been raised from three to ten dollars. This will permit the chapter to secure permanent and commodious quarters and to employ capable teachers as instructors in the courses.

The First National of Campbell, Neb., will erect a one-story building, 25x60; cost $6,000

Is Patten a Philanthropist?

To some James A. Patten of Chicago is the wheat king; to the poor who pay an increased price for bread he is the monster; to those who look at the matter somewhat more broadly he is a philanthropist. This is to be taken in no humorous sense. Attention is called to the fact by a well posted board of trade operator, that wheat last fall was selling at below its export price. It was being bought up by European speculators and shipped abroad at the rate of two or three million bushels per week. It was at this time that a great light dawned upon the mental horizon of Mr. Patten. He saw a shortage in the wheat crop and believed that wheat inevitably must sell at a much higher price than it was selling. He promptly entered that market with his immense resources, backed by a number of his friends, and it was his steady buying movement that caused grain to rise above the price at which it could be exported at a profit. It was this upward movement instigated by Mr. Patten alone, practically, which prevented the exportation of 25 or 30 millions of bushels of grain. Had these 25 or 30 millions of bushels gone abroad, the shortage of the supply in this country would now be that much greater than it is. An expert opinion believes that wheat would now be selling for not less than $2.00 per bushel had not the export been checked by the buying for speculation on the part of Mr. Patten and his friends. If this reasoning is correct, Mr. Patten to-day should be looked upon as an American philanthropist, in fact, if not from motive. At all events he has the very same privilege that any other American merchant has of buying when he thinks supplies are selling too cheaply, and of selling when there is an increased demand. There is not the slightest evidence that Mr. Patten has ever been misled for a moment with the belief that he is a wheat king, in the sense that the public views the matter, or that he has any intention whatever of attempting a wheat corner. He is a mature and seasoned speculator and refers to himself in his conversations as the wheat merchant. All attempts to corner the American wheat market have failed.

The two who came the most nearly to the goal were Harper of Cincinnati, and Leiter of Chicago. The result indicated it to be a fact that the nearer an operator comes to cornering the market, the greater his loss eventually will be. Mr. Patten declares without reserve, that he will sell his wheat long before it reaches its ultimate price, and that the creation of a fictitious price or the operation of a corner have nothing whatever to do with his present plans. In this his word must be taken, for his record in the past shows that he is entitled to belief when he makes a declaration of this sort. Mr. Patten's word in Chicago, where he lives, is the best, and is quite as good with the

Power in the Senate

There is talk of rebellion against the power of Mr. Aldrich to further dictate legislation in the senate of the United States. He gave us a useless money bill, although intended for "use," and calmly has set aside the house tariff bill for one of his own making. The senate and most of the government officials have grown accustomed to do his bidding. It is fortunate that he is so able, so just, and not personally mercenary in the use of his power.

Chicago has a big law firm which is said to do about as it pleases in the courts because it has been able to hire two or three exceptionally able judges from the bench at three times the salary they had been earning. The "power" came from delicately veiled hints that several more judges were wanted soon and many "tips" were circulated as to those in demand. Every name where the firm had litigation was used.

In the senate "power" comes in being able to have senators "retained" for big banks, railroads, steel companies, oil companies, coal companies, as special counsel. Then, most senators have sons, nephews, and others who want to work for the interests as named above. Some one can say who may get the jobs and this is "power." The man with the jobs at his command, whether in the ward, the city, the state, or the nation is he who can command attention to his wishes. Follow this line of thought and many obscure things will appear as in a vision.

A sensation was created in Washington circles over the statement made by Senator Aldrich in the tariff debate that the United States probably had reached the end of its ability to borrow money at 2 per cent and that authority should be given to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a higher rate of interest.

Senator Aldrich is an experienced financier. He generally knows what he is talking about, and although he has been affiliated with the great corporations to an extent which has made him unpopular with the masses and although his relations with the Rockfellers have identified him with the great Standard Oil system of banks, railroads, and manufacturing enterprises, it is none the less true that any such statement coming from such a source will be received by the people and given most careful consideration. The reason is that he has the "power" to handle the men in Washington who want to go to New York and do as the Gages, Cortelyous, Vanderlips of the last administration have done, and as the Cannons of former years have done. This is what the oracle Mr. Aldrich said, and doubtless is what his corporate associates want:

"Legislation also will be required in the pending bill to change the character of the bonds which may be issued. Existing legislation only authorizes the issue of 2 per cent bonds, which must be sold at not less than par. These could only be purchased by or for the national banks. It would not be possible to sell a considerable amount of bonds of this character at par. It therefore will be necessary to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds of a different class. Bonds redeemable at the pleasure of the government after a few years undoubtedly could be sold at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent, and the necessary authority could be given in this bill for their issue."

What Mr. Aldrich says to be necessary (after consultation) will come pretty nearly being what will be done. Jobs give power and he has the reputation of having jobs at will to give out in furtherance of agreed-upon plans for legislation and executive policies.

The New York Private Bankers

The banking department at Albany is after the private bankers of the state of New York, of which it is estimated there are not less than one thousand. Statistics gathered by Clark Williams show that failures total about thirty-five each year and that as a rule the deposits are a total loss. Private bankers give no capital security, publish no statements and have not been under state or national supervision. Superintendent Williams asks for a law putting all private banks under state examination (fancy this being done in Illinois) and compelling them to put up a cash bond (or securities) of from $20,000 up with the state, to guarantee their deposits.

Governor Hughes is backing up the demand and the incorporated banks are showing their fairness by backing up the banking department. The private bankers are trying to modify the demand to $20,000 bond and "no examination," the thing which most private bankers seem to dread more than anything else. Why is it?

In New York state the ignorant immigrant is the victim of his fellow countryman with a "bank." When the deposits justify, the "bank" closes and the banker retires to live on his easy money in the country from which he came. In the country it is different. The private banker gets mortgages on all the land

Spokane, Wash., April 22.—One million dollars is the estimated cost of a 14-story office building to be erected at Riverside Avenue and Stevens Street by the Old National Bank of Spokane, which, D. W. Twohy, president, announces has chosen D. H. Burnham & Co., Chicago, to prepare the plans. The structure which is to be completed early in July, 1910, will have a frontage of 100 feet in Riverside Avenue and 142 feet in Stevens Street, giving 198,800 square feet of floor space, not allowing for the light court, making it the largest building in Spokane. The building will be of the highest class fireproof construction, steel frame inclosed in concrete. The ground floor will be arranged for the use of the bank and for one or two railroad offices. The property will be taken over by a separate company and will be owned jointly by the Old National Bank and its stockholders. D. H. Burnham said:

"In erecting the Old National Bank building we will give builders all over the country a chance to bid on any part or on all of it. Where it is possible we will let the contracts to Spokane builders. Mr. Twohy has requested this of us, and it is the policy which we generally follow. The labor will practically all go to local working men and we will also buy our material in Spokane, so far as we are able. Under favorable conditions we can complete this building within a year from the time we begin. We have been able to finish other buildings as large in that time.

Additional Quarters for Exchange National

Edwin T. Coman, president of the Exchange National Bank, announces that to relieve the crowded condition of its counting room the bank will occupy the second floor of the Glenn building, adjoining the bank building. This building is owned by the bank, and is now occupied by the Sweeny Investment Company. It is reached from the bank building. The room to be occupied is 25x60 feet. It will be used by the bookkeepers and stenographers. The room is to be refurbished before the bank occupies it. Mr. Coman said:

"Increase in business has necessitated the employment of a larger force of bookkeepers and clerks and we have no room for them in our present banking room. To take over this room is the easiest way to provide the needed additional space."

Receivership Proceedings

Horace Kimball, receiver of the defunct Washington State Bank, has instituted suit in the Spokane county superior court to recover $4,000 from M. F. Setters, $2,500 from O. B. Setters and $3,884 from E. W. Swanson, former president of the institution. He alleges in the complaint that the money was fraudulently withdrawn. The bank was organized April 20, 1903, the complaint adds, by M. F. Setters, A. R. Swanson, O. B. Setters and E. W. Swanson, who, in order to have the two-thirds of the capital paid in, as required by law, gave their notes and checks for an aggregate of $15,000. The paper was made payable to the Washington State Bank and deposited with the Farmers & Mechanics Bank, which agreed to treat the notes and checks as so much cash on deposit to the credit of the drawers. Desiring to sever his connection with the bank, M. F. Setters drew out of the Farmers & Mechanics Bank the paper he had deposited as representing his part of the Washington State Bank capital. By the same understanding, O. B. Setters was allowed to secure possession of $2,500 of the bank's capital, represented by checks and notes, which he had contributed to the capital. By these withdrawals the receiver shows, the paid up capital of the bank was reduced to below 60 per cent, which the law requires shall be paid in. At the time the capital was so reduced, Mr. Kimball says, the bank owed $16,000 to depositors.

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the Associated Chapters A. I. of B. in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Independent Action and Universal Membership

"The Seattle Spirit" becomes "The Seattle Chapter News"

George R. Martin of the Seattle National Bank, a former treasurer of Chicago chapter, has been asked to retire from the editorship of "The Seattle Spirit" by the board of governors of Seattle chapter. His resignation was given and accepted because he mentioned in the March number of the "Spirit" the candidacy of W. F. Paull from the "Fellows," for membership on the national executive council of the American Institute of Banking. Seattle chapter had endorsed Frank Cerini, of Oakland, Calif., as the chapter candidate and the mention of Mr. Paull's candidacy along with that of Mr. Cerini's was considered by the members of the "Board" as an affront on their patience.

Mr. Martin stated in his letter of resignation that he had no apologies to make, and that he had considered himself the editor not of the board of governors alone, but of the whole chapter and that the paper was the medium, through which, every member of the Seattle chapter or any member of the Institute could express his views, whether on chapter or institute politics, chapter or banking affairs.

W. F. Paull, who announced his candidacy to membership on the national executive council of the American Institute of Banking last fall, made a statement to the Seattle chapter at its April meeting, explaining his candidacy and stating that the chapter's indorsement of Mr. Cerini, of Oakland, had no bearing whatever on his own candidacy. He said that as he is already a fellow of the national organization, the Seattle chapter delegates in the national convention would have no vote on his own candidacy, and that if he is elected it will be by the fellows. He advised the chapter to continue their support of Mr. Cerini, but also urged that there should be no more strife in the chapter over either candidate, as their candidacies would in no way conflict.

Mr. Paull explained his position in part as follows:

"My statement to-night is to show you that my candidacy does not in any way conflict with that of Mr. Cerini, of Oakland, and is to explain Mr. Martin's position in supporting me. The only act I have taken to promote my candidacy is to write each fellow and state my candidacy. The chapter will not vote on my candidacy and they will on Mr. Cerini's as we will be balloted on by two different bodies. The Coast is entitled to two members on the council and I shall continue in the race."

The chapter elected its delegates for the national convention as follows: J. Newberger, Puget Sound National; Harvey Barton, of the Seattle National; B. W. Pettit, of Dexter Horton & Co.; C. A. Nelson, of the Scandinavian American; C. A. Bemis of the First National; B. N. Schnoor, Washington Trust Company; O. B. Wooley, of the Union Savings & Trust Company; J. C. Glass, of the Bank of California; L. P. Schaeffer, of the Northern Bank & Trust Company; Roy Nelson, of the National Bank of Commerce; A. C. Kahlike, of the State Bank of Seattle; Arthur Goodfellow, of the People's Savings Bank; Arthur Drew, of the American Savings Bank & Trust Company; C. R. Marshall, of the Title Trust Company.

The following alternates were elected: C. J. Reilly, J. Stratton, R. S. Walker, P. B. Truax, C. Lamping, J. C. Harris, R. McClelland, Arthur Hoyt, L. A. Nichols, H. W. Hazen, L. Wood, H. C. Carlson, E. J. Whittey and E. J. Bishop.

The Board of Governors has voted to change the name of the chapter paper, which came out only last January, from "The Seattle Spirit" to "The Seattle Chapter News." The last issue of the spirit was the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition number which appeared April 9th. R. S. Walker, the associate editor who supervised this exceedingly creditable number, resigns, also H. H. Helwig, the circulation manager, and W. H. John, the advertising manager.

The new staff of the "Seattle Chapter News" is, Editor, W. R. Crawford, of the National Bank of Commerce, Associate Editor—not yet appointed; advertising manager, L. P. Schaeffer, Northern Bank & Trust Co., and circulation manager, W. H. Harris, Scan-American Bank.

Pittsburgh Chapter

Interest continues to grow among the members of the Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking, who are going in for intensive education in banking and its allied subjects. Review or quiz evenings are being held regularly according to schedule in preparation for final examinations. The first review in political economy was held Friday, April 9th, and was well attended. Prof. Joseph A. Beck, of the University of Pittsburgh, held those present down to two hours of solid work. The first review in practical banking was held Thursday evening and was also conducted by Prof. Beck. Those attending the reviews are satisfied that it is work for which they are well repaid and agree with United States Treasurer Charles H. Treat, who recently said in his address before Pittsburgh Chapter, "It will be an honor to be a graduate from the American Institute of Banking."

The next lecture in the banking course was held at the chapter rooms, Wabash building, Thursday evening, April 20th. The subject was "Savings Banks," and it was of more than ordinary interest.

The next review was on Friday evening, April 23d, and the subject was "Commercial Law."

Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Banking, of which Fred T. Loeffler, of the Lincoln National Bank is president, during the present season has greatly increased in membership, having gained over one hundred and twenty-five new members. This progressive organization of bank men now has branches at New Brighton and Washington, Pa.

St. Paul Chapter

Officers of the St. Paul chapter of bank clerks for 1909 were elected Tuesday night as follows: President, Harry R. Fairchild; vice-president, John McGillick; secretary, Theodore L. Lee; treasurer, G. P. Stensgard; executive board: C. S. Diether, E. B. Strate, Frank Wickman; delegates to Seattle convention: R. W. Lindeke, O. T. Schumacker, M. F. Ernst, J. C. Enger, Walter Honebruik and W. K. Miller.

The State Bank of Stratton

Henry Scheich, formerly connected with an Ethan, S. D., bank, has become cashier of the State Bank at Stratton, Colo., and has taken up the duties of his new position. He has always lived in Ethan, where his parents still reside.

Indianapolis School Bonds

The Indianapolis School Board will issue $75,000 in 3½ per cent bonds, for the purpose of erecting new school buildings and enlarging old ones.

New Bank Building in Hudson

Hudson, S. D., April 16.—The First National Bank will erect a fine new bank building on the old Farley house corner, one of the most prominent locations in town, as soon as the contractors can get their men to work. The new building will be 25x50 feet, and will be built of Bedford stone.

Chicago Stock Exchange Charges

Members of the Chicago stock exchange are discussing the question of making a straight charge of ⅛ per cent commission on all transactions on the exchange instead of charging a minimum of $2.00 commission for the purchase or sale of small lots. One element in the membership would like to see, on the contrary, the $2.00 minimum charge apply to business on the New York stock exchange instead of reducing the local commission to ⅛, the New York charge.

The Chicago stock market is essentially at the present time an investment one, and as such does a great deal of small lot business.

Joseph Chapman

Joseph Chapman, Jr., vice-president of the Northwestern National, left Friday for French Lick, Ind. Next week he will go on to Briarcliff for the meeting of his association committee. J. A. Latta, vice-president of the Northwestern, will go next week to Briarcliff for the executive council meeting.

R. H. Bloomer has been chosen vice-president of the Commercial National at Council Bluffs, Ia., succeeding F. C. Lougee. W. B. Price was made assistant cashier.

The Fidelity State Bank of Orofino, Ida., has commenced the erection of a new bank building.

Problem of the Country Check

Ralph C. Wilson of Chicago at Group
2 meeting of the Nebraska bankers at Fremont, April 22, 1909. :: ::

In discussing the problem of the country check, there is one interested party who can be entirely eliminated so far as any question of expense, time, trouble, or liability is concerned. This is the man who signs it, attaches a two cent stamp to the letter enclosing it, and starts it on its trip around the world. He cares nothing for its quick return. In fact, in his heart he may wish that it remain out forever, or until it is worn out by the endorsement stamps of the collecting banks. Every twenty-four hours that the check remains away adds to his interest at the bank upon which it is drawn, and, if it happens that he did not have the money there to meet it when he despatched it, he still is in no hurry for it to be presented for a final redemption.

It does not seem entirely equitable that the drawer of a check should reap all the benefits while the handlers and the payer of his order sustain all the losses. Suppose, for instance, a merchant in Fremont owes a bill of $1,000 in Utica, New York. Either for his own convenience, or for other reasons, he does not buy a draft from his local bank, but draws his check upon them and mails it to the firm in Utica. They, of course, do the logical thing, that is deposit it in their local bank. The local bank has no account in Fremont and anticipates that, if they send the check there direct for remittance they will meet a charge for exchange. So they also do the logical thing by sending it to their Albany correspondent for collection. Albany is in the same general position and sends the check to their correspondent in Philadelphia. Philadelphia follows suit by sending it to their Chicago account. Chicago, having a local account, would send it direct; otherwise, they would unquestionably forward it to Omaha, the center of the district in which the check is payable. The check has now been away from home nine days and has earned the drawer at 2 per cent, 49 cents in interest, and 12 cents would have been expended in postage, if the item had been handled singly.

In the meantime the Utica bank gave credit to their account for $1,000 and immediately set aside 15 per cent as a required reserve. Albany upon giving credit to Utica, set aside 25 per cent reserve, as did the banks in Philadelphia, Chicago, and Omaha, and in the meantime, the original credit being on the books of the Fremont bank, a reserve of 15 per cent was carried by them, so that during the time that the check has been in the air it has created a reserve requirement of 130 per cent, or $1,300 to protect the redemption of a $1,000 item.

This statement is not fictional, but, allowing for slight variations in the required reserves mentioned, is a statement that is easily verified, and shows when multiplied by, say a million, a tremendous economic waste. It shows that the use of the individual check in discharging debts at a distance is responsible for an enormous swelling of deposits, pyramiding credits throughout the chain of collecting cities, and piling up reserves greater than the original item. If this customer had stepped into his bank and bought their draft, he probably would have obtained it at par, if his account had been a profitable one, or paid for it at the current rate of exchange, and closed the entire transaction in three days. The losses of cost in handling, postage, exchange, and interest would have been eliminated.

The check is the perfection of elastic currency, but only in its quick redemption does it serve as a real benefit. If, in the example given, the Fremont bank had made an exchange charge for paying the check of say 1-10 of 1 per cent, or $1.00, who would have paid this cost? It seems to me as a matter of equity that the drawer of the check who has received all of the benefits should pay the cost, but he has escaped it entirely, and the charge is made to the bank who sent the item to Fremont for redemption. Theoretically, this charge is sent back through the chain of banks through which the check traveled, and is finally made against the receiver in Utica, who deposited the check in the first instance. There is no great reason why this firm should have received $999 in payment of a $1,000 debt, and, as a matter of fact, it is probable that this charge was absorbed somewhere between the five banks and was never made to the customer in Utica. In the process through which this check has gone, how can any one fairly and honestly say which one of the handlers should pay this cost? Or, can anyone dispute the fact that the party to the transaction deriving the real benefit should pay it? It seems to me in all fairness to the banks that this one question of who should pay the cost must eventually be thrashed out and put upon the one who received the benefit. There it belongs and there it must eventually rest. A man in Fremont, buying a bill of goods in another city and agreeing to pay a certain amount for them, is obligated morally and legally to lay down in the city where the debt is due the full amount, and not expect his bank, or his creditor's bank, or any other bank to step in and absorb this charge.

The question of liability assumed by every bank handling a check for collection is clear and unavoidable. The maker is out of it. He sits in the office and wonders how long before the check will come home to roost. He has no liability. If it should be lost in the mail, as thousands are lost every year, he rejoices. The interest on his balance has accrued every day, and he politely answers to the request for a duplicate that one will be issued if the original is not paid at the end of the current month. In the course of a year the loss of interest to the holding banks upon such items is a large sum. Again, the constant danger of the check being mis-routed, or an unusual delay occurring in forwarding it might compel the holding bank to pay the entire amount, if it could be proven that their negligence was responsible for the non-payment of the item. All of this risk has been dodged by the maker of the check, and put upon the banks who are reaping no benefit from his account.

It is the law of business that every question of expense in any transaction eventually must adjust itself until it rests with the one who should equitably assume it. This question of exchange, no matter by whom charged and no matter by whom avoided, is a question that sooner or later must be seriously considered and paid by the one who justly owes it. In the competition of a growing country, in the eager thirst for deposits by banks in reserve cities, and in the desire for profits by all the banks, it seems to be a case of catch as catch can, pay what you must and no more. Bankers sometimes overlook the fact that every check that is drawn upon them is an expense. Why would it not be proper as a first principle, looking to the settlement of this vexatious exchange question, that every bank should remit at par for the checks upon itself. This would prevent the local banker from encouraging his merchants to send their checks abroad so that he might be able to shave them when they were sent in for redemption. If every bank in the United States would agree to remit at par for checks upon itself, there would be no exchange question. Banks could receive items for deposit at their face without fear of loss, and one of the most annoying of the commercial features of banking would be eliminated at one stroke.

The function of the depositor's check is distinctly local and reaches its highest efficiency when forced to a quick redemption. In fact, it has no legitimate sphere in interstate transactions. A customer desiring to pay a bill in a foreign country would not consider the sending of his own check, realizing that it would not be a proper offering and would probably not be acceptable to the receiver; and for the same reason the payment of a debt at a distance where the maker of the check and the institution upon which it is drawn, is not known is a breach of sound banking practice.

The bank draft is the proper vehicle for remittances beyond the originating locality and its more general use is to be highly desired. While, of course, it is true that the system of the United States is made up of independent banks, each of which is desirous of increasing its own deposits, favoring its own customers, and making all of the profit possible for the stockholders, still there is the broader question of the profession and it is unfair for any banker to endeavor to separate himself from the profession at large. The interests of all banks are perhaps more closely tied than the units of any other line of business and it seems wise that any question, however small it may be, which affects all banks alike, should have serious consideration and equitable adjustment if such a thing is possible. It is not at all a question of banding together for the purpose of forcing depositors to follow a certain line of action. Customers, as a rule, are reasonable men and largely business men, who are amenable to a reasonable proposition when it is put to them in good faith.

The question now occurs that if the payment of exchange is a proper thing—who is to receive it? Upon what premises rests the title of the first bank receiving the item for deposit; or the bank redeeming it; or any of the intervening banks, to claim this as their profit? Why should it not be properly

W. F. ARNOLD
Treasurer New Jersey Bankers Association

divided equally among all of the banks through whose hands the collection has passed? They all have put some of their time into the transaction and yet it seems to be the common practice for the redeeming bank to take all of the profit. When a thousand dollar check is presented at the counter of a bank, the cashier, if he is in his right mind, would not offer $999 in liquidation of it. He would pay its face or not pay it at all. If all the checks drawn upon a bank were presented at the counter and currency demanded, it would entail considerable expense upon many banks to constantly ship currency for this purpose. So I think that in the majority of cases the payment of an item by draft upon the most convenient balance is an advantage to the bank and not an expense, and it would seem in this transaction that the item should be paid at its face the same as though it were presented over the counter.

There is another feature of this proposition which does not occur to us at first and that is the important one of reserve balances. In the scramble for par collections banks very generally keep balances in cities which are not naturally their drawing point, depending entirely upon transfer drafts for equalizing their reserve and placing it in convenient points for drawing.

Under a universal par remittance plan, banks would keep their reserves where they needed the money the most and they would not be forced to carry accounts for the sake of par facilities in localities where they naturally had no demand for exchange.

Further, it would allow a bank to carry fewer accounts and better accounts and would naturally place them in a position to receive better accommodations in time of decreasing deposits or an unusual demand for loans. Every banker knows that his balance with his correspondent is of importance in time of need and that a dozen reserve balances running pretty close to the edge are of little weight when accommodations are urgently needed.

Every banker, whether with a small or a large institution, should have absolute control over his reserve accounts and should not feel that he is obliged to keep certain funds at inconvenient points on account of this exchange question. As far as profits are concerned, I do not believe it could be shown that the banks which charge exchange upon their own checks, make any more money than the banks which remit at par, and there is one thing that is very noticeable in discussing this question, viz., that in the localities where high interest rates prevail there high exchange rates also prevail; and where interest rates are low, exchange rates are correspondingly low. It would seem to a man up a tree that where a bank is realizing a large interest rate on the balance of its customer that it would naturally lower the rate of exchange charged upon the redemption of its customers' checks, but this does not appear to be the case and from this point of view only it looks as though it were eager for profit and did not recognize the principle of equity in making the charge.

A discussion of the practicability of state clearing houses has been quite general within the last year and this indicates that the question of clearing individual checks and regulating exchange is beginning to attract the attention of bankers in all sections of the country. It occurs to me, however, that a state clearing house would aggravate the trouble rather than remedy it for the reason that the greater the facilities for clearing a customer's checks the greater would be the inclination to issue them and the mere fact that the bankers were arranging to care for them would be an encouragement and an acknowledgment of their necessity. The expense of maintaining a state clearing house would in itself stand in the way of a par remittance and it would furnish another stopping place for the wandering item before reaching the end of its journey.

It is apparent to a student of the exchange question that local conditions have nothing whatever to do with the regulation of charges for the reason that in many places one bank will charge an excessive rate, another a moderate rate and still another will remit at par. Again we find in districts where the majority of banks are glad to redeem their items without cost, there are certain cities which invariably make a charge, so there is no general custom even in the same communities, thus demonstrating clearly that it is a matter of individual choice and not an economic reason.

To a man who feels that the whole banking world rests upon his shoulders, or that he has a divine call to revolutionize the currency, the question of exchange charged upon a customer's check may seem a trivial matter, but it is my opinion that if more thought were given to the practical end of banking and less to the theoretical, we might accomplish a great deal more with considerably less wear and tear upon our gray matter.

It is of course clearly understood that the recognized principle of negligence whereby a bank is not a good collecting agent for checks upon itself, would stand in the way of a universal par remittance plan at the present time. This obstacle could be readily overcome by an agreement between the banks and their depositors, that in consideration of the waiving of exchange charges all checks may be sent for collection direct to the banks upon which they are drawn. The practical operation of this quick redemption scheme would be in effect a tremendous liquidation, forcing a great shrinkage of deposits, and at the same time unlocking millions of cash not reserve, which would be put back into the channels of trade.

The Commercial German National Bank

On Monday, April 26th, the Commercial German National Bank of Peoria, Ill., will be domiciled in its new quarters in the imposing Bennett building, just completed at Nos. 321 and 323 South Adams Street.

This removal gives to Peoria's leading bank a home on the principal business thoroughfare of the city, in the midst of the retail district. The banking room is 48 feet in width and 162 feet in depth, and the equipment which has been installed is of exceeding beauty and expressive of the substantial character of the institution itself.

The ground floor entrance leads through a vestibule 10x12 feet into a lobby 22 feet wide and 80 feet deep, the vestibule and entire lobby being floored with white marble mosaic bordered with marble of dark colors.

Flanking the lobby on either side are the quarters for the officers and nine cages for tellers, exchange, collections and discount clerks, all arranged with primary reference to the convenience of the patrons of the bank.

The counter front, top screen, ledges, pilasters and wainscoting are of specially selected English vein Italian marble. Dealing plates at all wickets are of imported Belgian black marble. All grille work and the large door at the end of the lobby, leading to the safe deposit department, is of solid bronze of the most pleasing design, while the wood employed is solid mahogany.

The money vault, the exterior of which is white glazed brick with marble cornice, is constructed of three layers of open hearth and five ply drill proof steel on a foundation of masonry and concrete. The massive armored door is 10 inches thick, built up of seven layers of steel, and weighs 25,000 pounds. When this door is closed any attempt to effect an entrance into the vault by the use of nitroglycerine or other high explosive would be absolutely futile. Notwithstanding the ponderous weight of the door it is so delicately poised as to yield to the hand of a child.

The book vault is of similar masonry construction and completely equipped with metal check files, deposit ticket files, document files, vertical letter files, cupboards, and steel book rolls, and is an example of beauty and utility.

The plan that has been followed is somewhat unique in many of its features, and the result will doubtless be highly approved by the large and growing clientage of the bank.

New State Bank in Chicago

Interests in the Pullman Company have organized and opened a new bank at One Hundred and Fifteenth Street and Michigan Avenue, in Roseland. The bank is incorporated under the name of the Roseland State Savings Bank. The capital is $200,000. The stock was subscribed for at $110 a share, the extra $10 over the par value being credited to the surplus fund, giving the bank a paid in surplus of $20,000.

John S. Runnells, vice-president of the Pullman Company and a director of the Merchants Loan and Trust Company, is president of the new institution. D. J. Davis, who for eighteen years was cashier of the Pullman Trust and Savings Bank, is cashier of the new bank. Although the institution has been opened but one week it already has $125,000 in commercial deposits and $5,000 in savings.

The directors are: E. F. Bryant, president of the Pullman Trust and Savings Bank; John S. Runnells, D. Mark Cummings, E. D. Hulbert, vice-president of the Merchants Loan and Trust Company; John T. Llewellyn, A. J. Smith, and Herman Fenings. The latter three directors are business men in the local community. The other directors are representatives of the Pullman Company interests and the Pullman Trust and Savings Bank.

The bank is expected to serve a population of something like 45,000 people, and will draw its patronage from the towns of Roseland, Kensington, and West Pullman. Employees of the Pullman Company gradually moved away from that town in order to buy dwelling houses and settle in Roseland and Kensington. It was thought by the Pullman interests that there was a good field for a bank in the locality chosen. There is one private institution which has $400,000 deposits.

The $200,000 capital of the Roseland State Savings Bank is in reality a diversion of $200,000 of the former capital of the Pullman Trust and Savings Bank. That institution had until January 1, 1909, $500,000 capital; becoming effective on the date mentioned this capital, at the suggestion of President E. F. Bryant, was reduced to $300,000, and in effect the former $200,000 was used in furnishing capital for the new institution, although a part of the stock in the new bank was sold to resident business men.

The Bank of Marked Tree

The stockholders of the Bank of Marked Tree, Ark., have declared a 25 per cent dividend. The following officers and directors were elected to serve the ensuing year: W. B. Miller, president; John A. Emrich, vice-president; Paul Leatherwood, cashier; the directors are W. B. Miller, J. A. Emrich, L. A. Ritter, M. A. Hazel, and M. J. Hazel.

Kansas City Bank Changes Name

The State Bank of Kansas City, Kansas, at a special stockholders' election voted to qualify under the new bank depositors' guaranty law of the state of Kansas. It was also voted to change the name to the Exchange State Bank of Kansas City, Kas. This bank will be four years old on the first day of May. It has 117 stockholders and 1,321 depositors. C. K. Wells is president.

Southwest Banking

Kansas City

In proportion to their population Clay Center and Clay county probably have more banks and larger bank deposits than any other county or town in Kansas. There are seventeen banks in Clay county and the population is only 15,146, according to the latest census. These seventeen banks have a total of $2,294,255.80 deposits. This gives Clay county a bank for every 891 persons in the county and $151.47 on deposit for every man, woman and child within the borders of the county.

Clay Center makes even a better showing along this line than the county as a whole. In Clay Center there are six banks. As Clay Center, according to the latest census, has 3,325 population, the town has a bank for every 554 inhabitants. These six banks have a total of $1,374,685.32 on deposit which means that for every man, woman and child in Clay Center $413.44 is on deposit in the town's banks. In the last year three new banks have been started in the county.

S. M. McAshan

"S. M. McAshan of Houston, (Tex.) has purchased stock in the Citizens' National Bank, Waco, has been elected a director and one of vice-presidents of this well-known financial institution, and will in future be one of the active managers of the bank," said J. S. McLendon, president of the Citizens' National Bank.

"Mr. McAshan comes to Waco from the South Texas National Bank, one of the strong and solid institutions of Houston and South Texas, and was assistant cashier and one of the managers of this bank. His father was one of the original organizers of this bank, and is now vice-president and one of the active advisers.

"A thorough bank man is Mr. McAshan, who has had a complete, comprehensive and practical training in this line. He is young, active and a man of great physical force and power in addition to the qualifications mentioned above. His coming to Waco will not only help the Citizens' National Bank, but this adds another excellent pusher to the forces which are making for a Greater Waco. He and his family will be a decided acquisition to the social and other interests of the city. Mr. Mc-Ashan has been wanting to come to Waco for some time, and availed himself of this opportunity to do so. He is already in the city and his wife will arrive in a few days."

Leaves Bank

It is reported that R. L. Reid has disposed of his interests in the Oklahoma State Bank of Walter, and has been succeeded to the presidency by W. H. Dyer.

New Bank of Commerce

The new Bank of Commerce, Lewiston, Ida., reports capital of $100,000, surplus $25,000 and deposits of $200,000. Wilbur S. Cheney is president; E. M. Ehrhardt and Theron S. Ward, vice-presidents, and James Aspoas, cashier.

Bank Swindler Caught

A bold attempt to defraud the Bank of Commerce, Tulsa, Okla., out of a large sum of money was frustrated and the would-be swindler, who says his name is George A. McManus, is now a prisoner in the county jail.

The bank had a telephone call from a man claiming to be C. C. Chartier, an implement dealer of this city, saying C. C. Chartier, Jr., his nephew, desired to open an account and would shortly present himself with a check for $4,000. Soon after McManus presented a check for the amount named and opened an account.

About closing time the young man again came into the bank, this time with a personal check for $2,250, and asked for the money on it. Thinking all might not be well, Chartier was called by telephone and told of what had occurred. He said it was news to him. McManus said that he is a native of Houston, Tex., but has been living in Kansas City.

New Bank for Wendell

The new First National Bank of Wendell, Ida., reports capital of $25,000 and deposits of $50,000. W. T. Smith is president; A. P. Screlchfield, vice-president; H. E. Barrett, cashier, and H. D. Jackson, assistant cashier.

Pass Guaranty Bill

The lower house of the legislature passed the bank deposit guaranty bill by a vote of 80 to 13. Gov. Campbell has announced that he will call a second special session in order to obtain action on the administration measures which the legislature opposes.

New Bank at Pioneer

The Pioneer Banking Corporation, Pioneer, Nev., is the title of a new enterprise, capitalized at $25,000. F. L. Warburton, J. Small and others are promoters.

National Banks and Guaranty Act

State Senator Quincy, of Salina, Kan., president of the Planters' State Bank, declares that national banks may participate in the new bank guaranty law in Kansas whether or not the Comptroller of the Currency authorizes them to do so.

"Although the Comptroller holds that national banks cannot participate," Senator Quincy says, "that does not prevent the stockholders of the bank from voting to use a part of the profits of the bank to pay the bank's share toward the guaranty fund. When the bank declares a dividend the government cannot step in and say what the stockholders shall do with that dividend, and if the stockholders desire to use it for the purpose of securing protection under the bank guaranty law they can certainly do so. The objection to the Oklahoma guaranty law was that it placed an unlimited liability on the banks. Of course, the Comptroller would not stand for that. The Kansas law distinctly limits the liability; hence that objection of the Comptroller is dis-

Kansas Banker Killed

Grover Walker, president of the First National Bank of Hoxie, Kan., was so dangerously injured in a motor car accident last week that he died.

Elects Directors

The new Citizens State Bank of Toyah, Tex., has elected the following directors: F. W. Johnson and W. D. Cowan of Pecos, Mrs. Kate Kendall, Mac. Sayles, Finley Holmes, V. Van Geison of Toyah, T. F. Tillar of Tillar, Ark., F. W. Johnson, president; M. B. Huling, Finley Holmes, Mac. Sayles, vice-presidents; V. Van Geison, cashier; P. K. Holmes, assistant cashier.

Rob Bank

Robbers wrecked the Havana Bank, of Havana, Kan., with dynamite early to-day and stealing $2,300, two robbers escaped. Before entering the bank the robbers cut the telephone wires entering the town, and after the robbery one robber offered himself as a target by cutting the telegraph wires in plain view of several citizens. The robbers were arrested later at Barttsville, Okla., by Robert Morton, a watchman, but before reaching the jail they overpowered him and escaped.

Banks Flourishing

Commissioner Dolley has this to say regarding statements of Topeka banks:

"The state banks of Kansas were never in a more flourishing condition than they are at this time and their future is most promising. The legal reserve on hand March 16th represents 40 per cent of the entire deposits. This is a splendid showing."

Move Headquarters

Headquarters of the Texas Loan and Guaranty Company have been removed from Dallas to Houston. Mr. W. E. Richards of this city having been elected president and Mr. Arch McDonald secretary. Within the next few days the funds now on hand will be removed to this city and placed on deposit. As soon as suitable quarters can be secured the institution will be in position to open for active business.

The Texas Loan and Guaranty Company already has $35,000 loaned out at interest and has about $75,000 on hand. It is proposed to make it one of the greatest concerns of its kind in the state. The board of directors is composed of twenty of the most prominent bankers in the state. Seventy-two bankers from almost every city and town of prominence in the state are associated as stockholders in the enterprise. Mr. L. P. Routt is the manager of the subscription department.

The transfer of the offices from Dallas to Houston was determined upon last Friday as a move to bring the company in more direct contact with the section of the state subject to greatest development. It was agreed upon by all of the leading subscribers represented, and the change in the official roster was made to suit the transfer in offices.

The company is organized to divert the flow of gold to the southwest from Europe and the north. There rates of interest are exceptionally low. Here 8 per cent is the regular amount. Money borrowed in large amount in the north may be distributed on good security at higher rates of interest in this section, with the increase of land values attendant upon the settlement of the country as an added element of strength.

Within two years the promoters believe $5,000,000 in gold will have been distributed through the Houston office of the company over the Southwest.

Contest Guaranty Law

A committee of bankers, members of the Nebraska Bankers Association, was selected at a meeting here last week to institute a suit in court to contest the validity of the bank deposit guaranty law enacted at the recent session of the Nebraska legislature.

Prominent lawyers expressed the opinion that the law was unconstitutional.

Answers Query

In answer to a query from J. N. Dolley, State Bank Commissioner, Fred S. Jackson, Attorney-General, has given an opinion that new state banks may participate in the benefits of the state guaranty fund only in certain cases. If a state bank organizes in a town in which the banks already doing business have refused to become members of the guaranty association the new bank may participate at once. Under any other circumstances a new bank must continue in business a year before it can become a member of the association.

Banks Consolidate

R. C. Ayers, president of the Commonwealth National Bank, gave out the following:

"At a conference of the directors of the Gaston and Commonwealth National Banks of this city, and John W. Wright of Tyler, and R. P. Wofford of Athens, arrangements were completed for the consolidation of the two institutions mentioned. This is the most important consolidation of banks that has ever taken place in Dallas, and by reason of the large surplus of the consolidated bank, is one of the strongest institutions of the kind in the country."

The new bank will be known as the Commonwealth National Bank, with $500,000 capital and $300,000 surplus, and undivided profits. The officers are John W. Wright, president; R. C. Ayers, vice-president; W. H. Gaston, vice-president; C. J. Sorrells, vice-president; Manton W. Jones, vice-president; R. K. Gaston, vice-president, and E. H. Crowder, vice-president; R. P. Wofford, cashier; H. L. Tenison, assistant cashier, and George H. Bird, assistant cashier.

To Help National Banks

The National Bankers Association of Kansas met in the Mercantile clubrooms in Kansas City, Kas., and appointed a committee to devise, if possible, a plan looking to the establishment of a bankers' deposit insurance company. The plan is to establish an insurance company that will perform the same duty for national banks that the Kansas bank guaranty law does for the state banks.

Many of the 208 national banks in Kansas would like to avail themselves of the bank guaranty law, but under an opinion of Attorney-General Wickersham this cannot be done. The plan is to have the proposed insurance company available to both national and state banks. The decision of the attorney-general also said that a deposit insurance plan would be illegal, but the bankers will try to devise a means that will be approved by Mr. Wickersham.

The committee which is to work out the plan is composed of the following members: Scot Hopkins, Topeka; J. T. Bringle, Osage City; J. C. Morrow, Washington; Charles Lobdell Dighton, and Charles Sawyer, Norton. The association adjourned subject to the call of the committee.

Homer A. Miller, president of the Iowa National, Des Moines, has returned from San Antonio, Texas, where he went with his wife who was quite ill.

To the Man Who Has Never Owned a Motor Car

You are fortunate to be planning now to buy your first motor car. You have escaped all the grief and expense suffered by owners of one, two, and four-cylinder cars—cars in process of development.

It is your opportunity to buy a perfected, high-grade car, a car infinitely superior to previous standards, and to buy that car at a price lower than is asked for several of the old-style models.

Some new buyers think it wise to purchase a cheap car first—for experience. But why make experience unnecessarily expensive?

To buy a cheap car first was wise when all automobiles were experimental. Then, all buyers took risks, and cautious ones took the least risk by purchasing the lowest-priced cars.

Today conditions are different. The experimental features of one, two, and four-cylinder cars have been overcome in the six-cylinder car. And there is no more reason why a buyer should undergo costly experimenting with cheap cars now than that he should write with a quill before using a fountain pen.

If you buy a cheap car, the better cars will outclass yours at every point, and make you regret your choice.

Profit by the experience of other cheap-car buyers. Every one of them, who can possibly do so, sells his cheap car as quickly as he can, in order to buy a satisfactory car.

Buy the right car first, and you buy a car to use (not to sell at a loss)—one in which depreciation need not figure. For this good car will have in it so many years of life and satisfactory service that it will have paid for itself before you will require its successor.

You can make your purchase of an automobile a safe investment by selecting a self-starting, sweet-running, six-cylinder.

WINTON SIX

Has all the advantages of other high-grade cars, and many exclusive advantages. Starts from the seat without cranking—a feature not to be had in any other car. Holds the world's record for low cost of maintenance—$1 for 4343 miles. Makes hill-climbing easy, is marvelously smooth and quiet, and goes the route like coasting down hill.

Made in the only big plant the world over that produces six-cylinder cars exclusively. We have made one, two, and four-cylinder cars, and know their shortcomings. That's why we make sixes only. Suppose you get the particulars about our 48 h. p. Winton Six at $3000.

First State Bank of Dongola

S. O. Boyd, cashier of the First State Bank of Dongola, Ill., came to Dongola in 1893 from his home town of Shawneetown, Ill., to become cashier of The Bank of Dongola, a new private institution owned by Benton, Holshouser & Cuhl. This bank was very successful. Upon the death of Mr. Benton in 1906 Mr. Boyd organized the First State Bank of Dongola, which purchased the assets and good will of the private bank. The First State Bank has a capital of $25,000 and surplus and undivided profits of $10,000. It has enjoyed a steady increase in business and is regarded as one of the best managed banks in the southern part of the state. Mr. Boyd thoroughly understands the business of country banking and enjoys a wide acquaintance in his section of country. The Fort Dearborn National Bank is the Chicago correspondent of the First State Bank of Dongola.

Secretary Rinaman has offered on behalf of the Illinois association a reward of $250 for the capture of the Woodlawn Bank robbers, as follows:

"On the night of April 14th burglars blew open and robbed the safe of the Woodlawn Bank at Woodlawn, Jefferson county, of $1,961.46. The protective committee of this Association offers a reward of $250 for the apprehension and conviction of any one or more of the guilty parties."

This was sent to all sheriffs and chiefs of police in the state.

New Members for Illinois

The fiscal year for the Illinois Association ends July 1st. Great advances have been made under Mr. Rinaman in the resurrection of dead memberships and the creation of new ones. The insurance and bonding business would have advanced more rapidly but for the disgraceful tactics of cheap companies in cutting prices and in cheaper bankers in accepting them. The value of cut-rate bonds and cut-rate insurance may well be questioned. The depositor should beware of a bank which is run on such a plan of bluff and buncombe.

"Bank Gutted"

In the trial of James H. Parrish, Thursday, S. F. Howie, of Central City, Ky., stated that he made a time deposit of $2,500 with the Parrish Bank, and that when he went to draw the money Parrish told him the bank had been gutted and could not pay him. T. A. Pedley, receiver for the defunct bank, testified, claiming that many of the notes held were absolutely worthless.

The Bank of Midland (S. D.) will erect a new bank building.

Ralph C. Wilson

Ralph C. Wilson, assistant cashier of the Bankers National, will become a member of the executive committee of the American Bankers Association this year. Mr. Wilson is the unanimous candidate for chairman of the executive committee of the American Institute of Banking, and under the new rule put into effect at Denver last year, he will immediately become a member of the supreme council of the A. B. A.

A banker ought to be ashamed to stand back and let others fight his battle for better laws; the war on criminals; the better education of the masses to banking benefits and the social uplifting of the profession. He should be a man and join the colors at the front.

The last statement of the institution showed it to be in excellent condition.

Shaw, former secretary of the treasury; vice-president and treasurer, William L. Folds; secretary, William E. Chapman; assistant secretary, J. H. Ogelsby; assistant treasurer, Charles F. Lafferty. The authorized capital is $1,000,000.

Special Examiner Appointed

The Clearing House Association of Philadelphia yesterday appointed as its special examiner William M. Hardt, who for eighteen years has been United States bank examiner here.

The Anchor Bank

At the annual meeting of the Anchor Bank the following directors were elected: Major A. M. Brown, John D. Brown, R. J. Stoney, Jr., W. D. Henry, G. C. Dellenbach, E. H. Straub, T. J. Keenan, L. P. Monahan and E. I. Myers, Jr. The last named is a new director of the institution and was elected to fill the position made vacant by the death of Theodore F. Straub. The Anchor is in excellent condition and is increasing its business in its new location at Diamond and Smithfield streets.

Ephrata National

J. Harry Hibshman and W. Leber have been appointed directors of the Ephrata National Bank of Ephrata, to fill the vacancies caused by the death of John M. Martin, and resignation of William P. Albright.

The City Deposit Bank

The City Deposit Bank held its annual election last week the former directors being re-elected as follows: James R. Mellon, David Blair, J. D. Lockhart, D. J. Kennedy, James A. Johnston, H. C. Frick, Hugh Murphy, W. N. Frew, Jos. R. Woodwell, William H. Goehring and E. S. Kuhn. The board organized by re-electing James R. Mellon president; David Blair, vice-president; Jacob D. Miller, cashier; H. W. Ludebuehl, assistant cashier.

This strong bank closed its fiscal year April 1st and had one of the most prosperous years of its history. It paid its eighty-third dividend, making a total of $430,000 dividends paid since its organization and its deposits are now nearly $3,500,000 a gain of about $400,000 since the call for statements last fall.

Franklin Trust Company

At a special meeting of stockholders of the Franklin Trust Company of Philadelphia, on May 27th, the proposition to double the capital stock to $400,000 will be voted upon.

Philadelphia Bank Statement

The weekly bank statement shows the following changes: Loans and discounts decreased $1,628,000; lawful money reserve increased $4,510,000; due from other banks increased $4,225,000; due to other banks increased $1,895,000; deposits increased $5,190,000; circulation decreased $3,000.

The Lititz National

The Lititz National of Lititz, Pa., failed to open its doors on Monday. It had a paid-up capital of $105,000.

No statement of the bank's condition has been prepared and the only information so far vouchsafed is that the institution had made some bad investments. One of the ventures in which the bank was heavily interested was a starch company. The president of the bank, Israel G. Erb, and one or more of the other directors are directors in the starch company. While not one of the enterprises which the bank financed is in trouble, the securities given for the loans were of such a character that the bank could not quickly realize on them. In banking circles it is believed the depositors will be paid in full.

It is stated at the office of the Comptroller of the Currency that the Lititz National Bank recently met with heavy losses which greatly impaired its surplus and capital. At the date of its last report the bank had a capital of $105,000, a surplus of $21,000, undivided profits of $8,776, and deposits of $234,090.

Ware & Leland, Brokers, Sued

In the præcipe it is set forth that Mr. Haase "sues as well for the county of Cook as for himself." No one at Mr. Haase's office could give information concerning the action. Mr. Ware said he never had heard of the man before and had not the slightest idea what was the basis for the action.

Des Moines, April 22.—Important changes in the state banking department have been made by Auditor of State John L. Bleakley as the result of the new law which gives Iowa a sixth state bank inspector. Frank E. Roberts, who has been chief clerk in the banking department, becomes chief bank examiner. C. B. Ellis, who has been security clerk in the insurance department, succeeds Mr. Roberts as chief clerk in the banking department. George Pennell, who has been in the municipal accounting department, is transferred and becomes bank examiner. It is believed that this new arrangement will mean much to bank inspection in the state and will necessarily result in greater confidence among the people though it may be truthfully said that Iowa people have never lost confidence in the banks of the state. Mr. Roberts expects to spend a portion of his time in the city but will make personal visits to Iowa banks and will seek to bring all state and savings institutions into closer touch with the people and the state department.

Group Meetings

It is apparent that the month of May will be a busy one for the bankers of Iowa. There are five group meetings announced for the early half of the month and it may be that still others will be added to the list so that all may be completed by the time the state convention is held in Waterloo in June. The group meetings thus far announced are: Group One, Sioux City, May 11th; Group Two, Fort Dodge, May 18th; Group Four, Decorah, May 6th; Group Five, Council Bluffs, May 13th; Group Nine, Creston, May 12th. Programs are being prepared but have not reached Des Moines bankers as yet.

Courts to Decide

The courts will have to decide whether Iowa savings banks or loan and trust companies may act in a fiduciary capacity or as guardians of estate, so Secretary of State Hayward has concluded. The Farmers Loan and Trust Company of Waterloo in its articles of incorporation included the power to act as guardian, administrator, or in a fiduciary capacity. Secretary Hayward had doubts whether such power was granted and referred it to Attorney-General H. W. Byers, who held that the Iowa laws do not permit service by these institutions in that capacity. The company thereupon sprung an opinion by former Attorney-General C. W. Mullan exactly to the contrary. In the meantime the legislature was asked to enact a law which would remove all doubts but this was lost in the shuffle. So now, Secretary Hayward has issued a certificate upon the articles as filed, leaving the mooted question to be settled by the courts.

Banks Appeal

The Des Moines city council has again precipitated that old question of whether government bonds held by national or other banks are exempt from taxation by refusing to comply with the request of the bankers of Des Moines and exempt such assessments. The assessor in passing about the city, assessed the bonds held by the Des Moines banks as if there had never been any discussions holding such bonds as non-assessable. Fourteen Des Moines banks appealed to the city council sitting as a board of review for redress and were refused. The result means fourteen appeals to the district court and the threshing out of the question once more.

Cashier Tries to Open Safe

Cashier Berst, of the Farmers and Merchants at Welton, has become convinced that modern bank safes are burglar proof. He tried for a week to open the safe in his bank and up to date has failed. The cashier closed the safe one night a week ago and set the lock to open the following morning. But the following morning, the safe didn't open. The director after the second day held a meeting and tried to coax the door open but in vain. An expert from Chicago tried his hand but the safe remained closed and another was sent for. For a week the time lock has baffled all attempts at opening and the end is not yet.

First National of Chariton

In order to settle in full the claims against them by creditors of the defunct First National at Chariton, Mrs. S. H. Mallory and her daughter, Mrs. Thayer, have tendered to Receiver Jamieson $100,000. The offer stipulates that the amount if accepted means the dismissal of the suits against them in the federal courts. The two women thus propose to sacrifice the property of the Mallory estate in Lucas county, consisting of a fine 700-acre farm, the old Mallory residence south of Chariton and several residences within the city. The offer came to the receiver while he was in Chicago, where he went to confer with the two women regarding possible terms of settlement. Much of the Mallory estate in Lucas county had been converted into cash before the bank failed.

New Trust Company

The latest in the way of trust companies is a proposed industrial trust company which the factory aid committee of the Greater Des Moines committee is preparing to organize. This projected industrial trust company will incorporate with a capital stock of $25,000. It will operate along lines similar to loan and trust companies. The funds of the company will be used towards lending aid to worthy business enterprises seeking to locate in Des Moines. The company is to be organized for the purpose of making money for the men who put their money into it and not from a philanthropical standpoint.

Settling a Bank Dispute

Down in Sidney, Iowa, they settle bank disputes in true wild western fashion, it seems. Mrs. C. M. Swearingen claims to have been worsted in a land deal in which Assistant Cashier Roscoe Williams of the Sidney Banking Company was a party. She made threat that she would shoot Williams on sight whereupon Williams armed himself. The woman saw him passing along the street and opened fire. Williams fired back but no one was hurt except a bystander. The woman was jailed and released upon giving bonds for $5,000.

George M. Reynolds in Des Moines

George M. Reynolds, of the Continental National of Chicago, was much sought by Des Moines financiers while in the city last week. They wanted to know his opinion of the financial situation, tariff revision, etc. Mr. Reynolds takes an optimistic view and declares that as soon as the tariff question is settled one way or the other, an era of genuine prosperity is assured. Like many another good man, Mr. Reynolds thinks the middle west gets a trifle the worst of it in the Payne tariff bill and is inclined to favor a tariff commission with systematic plans ahead instead of the hit and miss methods of present tariff revisionists.

Cashier Blackburn a Poultry Fancier

Cashier Harry Blackburn, of the Iowa National, has a new claim to fame. He is something of an agriculturist and his son is a poultry fancier of some distinction. Recently the young man discovered a remarkable egg, the product of one of his hens. The egg is a double affair with two complete yolks surrounded by two complete egg shells. The sample has been on display by Cashier Blackburn, who thinks that possibly he has a brood of hens that may double the profits in poultry raising.

Iowa Bankers Interested

Des Moines and Iowa bankers are not a little interested in reports from Chicago that the interstate commerce commission will take up the complaints of the A. B. A. relative to discriminations against banks by express companies in the transportation of money. They believe that the bankers will make a showing that will entitle them to the relief demanded.

Two Burned in Fire

In a fire which destroyed the barn of Ernest E. #### Supervisors Puzzled

The resignation of Iver Iverson as county auditor to become cashier of the First National at Northwood, succeeding N. E. Haugen, the new national bank examiner, has brought out a field of nine candidates for county auditor and the board of supervisors is puzzled.

Forger Convicted

Charles Brady, put on trial in Des Moines for forging checks of $3,200 on the Central State Bank of this city, disclosed a new idea in forgery by showing that he paid a tramp 50 cents to carry through the job started by Brady. Brady drew a ten year sentence in the penitentiary.

New Bank at Thayer

San Francisco's clearings of $36,740,483.27 for the week, a gain of 11.2 per cent over the corresponding clearings of 1908, $31,239,427.80, were less than $20,000 less than last week. Los Angeles banks cleared $12,981,763.32 for the financial week just ended, a gain of more than $1,000,000 over the previous week, and an increase of 28 per cent over the $10,134,208.01 clearings for the corresponding week last year. A gain of 24.2 per cent was reported in Oakland over last year's record, the figures being, respectively, $1,982,703.95 and $1,587,566.67; it was a material gain over last week, too. With clearings of $409,265.93 for the week, as against $426,585.56 for last year, San Jose registered a loss of 4 per cent. Stockton had clearings of $462,900.85, representing an increase, compared with clearings of $405,082.87 for the 1908 week of 14.2 per cent. Last year's corresponding week found clearings in Sacramento $785,643.28, while for the financial week just ended the record was $930,575.50, 18.4 per cent better. Fresno wired clearings for the week at $560,252.39. In San Diego the clearings were $990,819.87, 21.6 per cent better than the clearings a year ago, $814,664.68. Adding together the week's clearings for the eight cities of the state, a grand total of $55,058,770.09 is obtained.

Vice-President will Resign

Alden Anderson, former lieutenant-governor of California, and present vice-president of the Anglo and London Paris National Bank, has accepted the position of superintendent of banks of this state and will assume his new duties July 1st. Mr. Anderson will resign from the Anglo and London Paris National Bank, as the new law prohibits the superintendent from being connected with any bank, and may go East for several weeks to observe the workings of a similar banking law in New York and Washington, D. C. It is rumored that C. F. Hunt will succeed Mr. Anderson in the Anglo and London Paris National Bank.

Bank Officers Promoted

The death of J. C. F. Hull, vice-president of the American National Bank, has resulted in several changes and promotions. W. D. Stephens has been elected vice-president and director, W. W. Woods promoted from cashier to be a vice-president; A. M. Brown from assistant cashier to cashier and R. B. Hardacre auditor to assistant cashier. William Rhodes Hervey retires as vice-president but remains a director.

the opportunity presents itself. He is much impressed with the country and says that the possibilities of the Inland Empire are unlimited and there is no end to its future. "I find that the number of mortgaged business buildings in Spokane is comparatively small," he said. "There are few eastern cities of which one can say as much. With the rapid growth of the city taking place there will undoubtedly be a great demand for money on substantial retail business property. I find the conditions such that I may say there is no limit to the amount which we may loan in the city, as the opportunity presents itself."

Bank's Capital Increased

H. D. Warren, cashier of the Latah County State Bank of Deary, Idaho, and also secretary-treasurer of the central division of the North Idaho commercial clubs, said while in Spokane that the bank, which was established September 14, 1908, with a capital of $10,000, has found that amount insufficient to properly care for the business, and the paid up capital has been increased to $15,000. Charles D. Aaron, a director in the Detroit United Bank, and also in the German American Bank of Detroit, has become interested in the Deary bank. Justin A. Harsh, president of the bank, is expected in Deary from his former home in Tekonsha, Mich., with his family in a short time, and will make Deary his home. He will give his entire time to the interests of the bank.

Barton was not apprehended.

Taft Invited to Coeur d'Alene

Benjamin F. O'Neil, president of the Commercial State Bank at Wallace, Idaho, and chairman of the republican state central committee, said on his return from New York and Washington that it is likely President Taft will visit the Coeur d'Alene mining district and the Inland Empire next summer, adding: "Business in the east is fair and the outlook is good. There is no scarcity of money; in fact, there is more in the banks than there is demand for. The sooner the tariff is settled the better it will be for the entire country."

John Scott, formerly president of the Northwestern National Bank, of Sioux City, Iowa, is reported to be dangerously sick in Spokane. His brother, George Scott, is with him. The attending physicians believe he will recover.

Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining and Concentrating Company paid dividend No. 139, amounting to $45,000, on April 3d. This makes $225,000 since January 1, 1909 and $10,926,000 to date.

Special Notice

P. C. Kauffman, secretary of the Washington State Bankers Association, has sent caution circulars to bankers in eastern Washington, warning them against J. H. Gray, G. W. Watson, D. A. Harrison, Graves or Groves or as many other names as are necessary and who has defrauded a number of bankers in Washington and Oregon. The man has an original method of working, though he is an out and out forger. Mr. Kauffman says the man's plan is to visit a district for the purpose of buying wheat, hogs, or possibly to rent a farm. He would get the farmers to write their names in a book, ostensibly for the purpose of having their correct address. He then visited a local bank and asked if he could get a note for $200 or $300 cashed if some responsible farmer signed it, and receiving an affirmative answer took a blank note and soon after returned with the farmer's signature so cleverly forged as to almost defy detection and received the money and left. The man is 5 feet 11 inches, heavy reddish-brown mustache, hair streaked with grey, age about 45 or 50 years, roman nose, prominent cheek bones, shabbily dressed, wears a dark Fedora hat and looks like a rancher.

Cheap Money and High Prices

Speculation is running riot, not alone in stocks of various degrees of merit, but in wheat and cotton, both of which have been forced up to new high prices for the season. Justification for these movements is proffered by the manipulators, who can make out a good case, but the reason back of all others, whether pertaining to stocks, grain or cotton, unquestionably is an over-supply of cheap money, which the banks do not care to refuse to lend operators of considerable caliber.

"The American Bank Reporter"

To say that an American publication is in its 73d year is an indication that it must have been doing business when the country was quite new. This is the modest claim of the "American Bank Reporter" issued by the Steurer Publishing Company of New York, and containing a list of all the banks and bank officers in the United States and Canada. The titles and the names of officers are very clearly and correctly arranged in this publication, and the pages are indexed in a way that makes the "American Bank Reporter" the most useful bank directory published. It carries in convenient form all the necessary information which the daily user of a bank directory may require. The maps are sharply engraved and clearly printed, and carry with them a marginal index enabling the user of the directory to find any point on the map, as readily as if he were entirely familiar with the state.

"The American Bank Reporter" enjoys probably the largest circulation of any bank directory published, and being the oldest in the field has a prestige which none of the others enjoy. The Steurer Publishing Company was the first to recognize the necessity of a small pigeon-hole or pocket edition of a bank directory, and its neat little volume is circulated by the thousands by subscribing banks. The volume is called the "Desk Edition of the American Bank Reporter," and probably is the neatest and most convenient thing of the kind in print.

"Katrine" by Elinor Macartney Lane

"Nancy Stair" fixed the status of the author. Mrs. Elinor Macartney Lane, with the readers of the higher grade fiction. Now comes a new work—"Katrine"—which the critics predict will raise Mrs. Lane to a still higher position in the literary firmament. Added interest is given to this, her second masterful effort, because, unfortunately, it was her last. Mrs. Lane died while "Katrine" was in press. Mrs. Lane had written few books, but the place those few have won for her as one of the best known and best loved of American novelists is well deserved. It is quite five years since her last romance appeared. Those years have been given for the most part to the writing of this, which is probably her best work. It would be difficult to praise "Katrine" too highly. In its way it is perfect.

Katrine is a brave Irish girl, daughter of the drunken but talented manager of Ravenel Plantation in North Carolina, and the story is that of her love for the handsome Frank Ravenel, whose family pride forces him to tear himself away from her in spite of his own great love. Then there is her other devoted suitor, Dermott McDermott, strong, resourceful, a man of affairs and yet Irish to the core. When the scene shifts to Paris, where Katrine becomes a great singer, the warfare of these two men for her hand is lively enough to keep the action and interest at a high pitch. This keeps up until the proper ending of the beautiful tale. Published by Harper Brothers, New York, at $1.50.

Los Angeles Money Market

There is a complaint heard from real estate operators in Los Angeles because they find difficulty in obtaining all the money they desire in their business. There is abundance of money in the city for all legitimate purposes, mercantile and improvement. Merchants who can show their bankers that they have a need of money in their regular business transactions, that the money will be used in a safe way, are accommodated without question or delay at a 6 per cent rate. Dealers in real estate who can make the same satisfactory showing obtain money at from 5½ to 8 per cent.

California

Secretary R. M. Welch of the California Bankers announces that the 1909 convention will be held at Del Monte, California, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, May 27th, 28th and 29th. This, he says, will best suit the convenience of those attending, as May 30th falls upon a Sunday, the following Monday will be observed as a legal holiday; therefore, delegates may plan to remain at Del Monte over Sunday, utilizing the following day for the homeward trip without loss of business time. Among the speakers will be Governor Gillette. Mr. Welch is proud to announce that "The association is to be congratulated upon having an assurance from the president of the American Bankers Association, George M. Reynolds, president Continental of Chicago, that he will be with us. The CHICAGO BANKER in printing this item states: 'It seems that the California Bankers Association has landed the biggest fish in the puddle for its state convention this year.'" Mr. Welch announces that "Financiers from other states will be with us, including Mr. Rollin P. Grant, vice-president Irving National Exchange Bank of New York."

The regular program will include an address on "Clearing House Examinations of Banks," by A. Kains, examiner for the San Francisco Clearing House Association. H. de Saint Seigne, of the American National of San Francisco, will contribute a paper on "Foreign Exchange." It is proposed to hold a symposium on the "New Bank Act"—consisting of short papers by national and state bankers representing commercial banks, savings banks and trust companies, expressing their respective views, favorable or otherwise, on the law recently enacted. Complete program will be issued in due course when subjects of other papers will be definitely announced.

The bankers of Monterey and Pacific Grove are planning to provide diversion which will fill the available hours. The social features will include an informal reception and promenade concert on Thursday evening; visit to the Presidio of Monterey to witness dress parade of the U. S. troops on Friday afternoon; ball on Friday evening; and on Saturday the delegates and visitors will be taken on the famous seventeen mile drive, stop being made en route to partake of a Spanish dinner.

Two Popular Southern Association Officials

J. R. DOWNING

W. P. G. HARDING

Mr. Downing, the young president of the Kentucky Bankers Association, lives at Georgetown, where he is cashier of the Georgetown National. He has been an association worker from the first, and many of the policies which have governed this successful organization were proposed or promoted by him.

President Taft is the honorary president of this organization, and the active executive is the Hon. J. M. Dickinson. President George E. ### Commercial National Travellers' Cheques

Manager H. Lawton, of the foreign exchange department of the Commercial National of this city, already is distributing to the bank correspondents the new travellers' cheques, inaugurated by that bank. They come in $10, $20, $50, $100 and $200 denominations, in varying colors, to prevent mistakes. While there is nothing special about them as travellers' cheques, as they follow the usual lines of this class of paper, the new feature differentiating them from other issues is, that they are payable through both the London and New York clearing houses. This facility will commend them to bankers as tending to make them economical to handle above all other forms not so privileged.

So far they have been very cordially received by the Western correspondents of the bank and the general public, and Mr. Lawton is hoping great things in connection with them.

The cheques are furnished, firmly attached to a neat bill roll, bearing the bank's monogram in gold. The Commercial sets a new, high mark in the travellers' cheque field.

Mainly About Banks and Bankers

LOTS of people believe everything they see in print while some draw the line at the miraculous. The following paragraph from April 19th "Financial Age," however, sorely tried the confidence of at least one Chicago bank cashier. The paragraph states that:

"Charles M. Preston, State Superintendent of Banks in the early '90's, IS DEAD. AFTER THAT he was president of the Equitable Securities Co. of New York City."

IF the second sentence is correct then the Equitable possibly is maintaining a branch somewhere not contemplated even in the liberal charter laws of New Jersey. It's a queer story.

THE Kansas City paper does not say Dr. W. S. Woods "sold" his bank, only, that "he relinquished control to J. Wilson Perry," an officer of the National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis. Perhaps, like the time he relinquished in favor of Wm. Barrett Ridgely, there will be another sequel to the tale. Very few changes in the bank are contemplated.

JOINED in the deal is the "syndicate" stock, which D. R. Francis represented at the time of the failure. It looks now as if there ought to be nothing but harmony and prosperity, since all disturbing elements are said to have been eliminated. Mr. Perry is a native Missourian, 39 years old, and has been with the St. Louis bank seven years. W. L. Buechle, who succeeds Mr. Kemper, is a bank examiner, making with the cashier, two of these on the staff.

"WE propose to make it the best bank in the West," said Mr. Perry. "No St. Louis men are associated with me. Ninety per cent of the stock of the bank is held in Kansas City. Several of the officers and directors have chosen to increase largely their holding of stock." This is official and stock rose from $128 to $133 on the announcement.

THE Savings Bank of Baltimore has been sued by the depositors for a distribution of its $5,000,000 under the law which says "that the depositors shall receive interest as fixed by the by-laws, and that the 'surplus profit' shall be divided every three years." A by-law provides that every January the bank shall publish for the information of the community a report of its state.

SUCH threats have been heard at times in other cities where they have the mutual plan and both bankers and depositors will watch the outcome in the Baltimore field with interest. The five million nest egg of the Savings Bank of Baltimore has grown so large that it was feared liquidation might be resorted to by the incorporators at a huge profit.

CHICAGO has been blessed (or otherwise as you may think) with a number of bank directory publication houses. Not all have prospered as they deserved for this reason, although all are rated as good and serviceable. Now comes Anthony Stumpf, of New York, and he buys one called the "Bankers Encyclopedia" and hustles it off to New York to be "greatly improved." Never having seen the book one may easily believe that Stumpf will make it better. He is a master hand at the warming over of decrepits, as witness his Daily Banker, now a leader in its field.

OF course it's old by April 19th to announce that Charles L. Farrell resigned the vice-presidency of the Irving National Exchange Bank, which he did April 1st, but the "Financier" makes it news by having him resign the "presidency," forgetful of Lewis E. Pierson and his end of the destinies of the Irving.

THE Kansas nationals do not intend to be kept out of the running in the race with the state banks which will be operated under the new guaranty law. They will proceed under an insurance company plan, already launched by twenty-five of the leaders. Thus one more "popular" plan for the improvement of banking is under trial.

THE Mercantile Trust Co., and the Mercantile National, St. Louis, just like the Wisconsin Trust and the Wisconsin National, Milwaukee, are prospering greatly under the new plan of being able to do all forms of banking under joint management. The First Trust and First National, Chicago, testifies to the wisdom of the plan likewise. Several other big national banks have state charters up their sleeves, and more than one trust company could float a national at a big convenience to their patrons and at a profit to themselves.

THE "big four" in the St. Louis banking world, Festus J. Wade, Walker Hill, Charles H. Huttig and William H. Lee, were in the ranks of the fifty leading men from St. Louis who went to Jefferson City to protest in the state-wide prohibition matter. Such a lobby rarely is seen in any state capital.

THE privates in Illinois will probably court-marshal John L. Hamilton for desertion, now that he has incorporated as a national. Worse than this, his town of Hoopeston has elected a democratic mayor, the first in thirty-eight years. These are strange times.

AND now comes John Ring, Jr., the genius whose publicity work for the Mercantile Trust and the Mercantile National of St. Louis, has attracted so much attention. He has an article in "Printers' Ink" on "Savings Bank Advertising that Pays," in which he proves pretty conclusively that bank advertising differs, when well done, from other profitable advertising. He believes strongly in preferred position, next to pure reading, such as advertisers in THE CHICAGO BANKER get "free of charge."

"IN conclusion," says Mr. Ring, "give your advertising some of the same intelligent thought that is given other branches of the business. Let your advertising be looked on not simply as a necessary evil but rather as a dividend necessity. It will prove itself the latter if but given earnest, efficient and conscientious effort."

JUST as a hint to Joseph T. Talbert of Chicago and George Woodruff of Joliet the case of John C. Van Cleef of New York may be cited. He, too, was too busy to go into the mazes of upper Fifth Avenue society for a bride but chose, rather, his pretty and talented stenographer, a lady of good family and well educated. Let the banker-bachelor beware!

Banking Conditions in New Jersey

By President William C. Heppenheim at the Atlantic City Convention.    ::    ::    ::

I have the honor to welcome you to this, the sixth annual convention of our association, and to congratulate you upon our meeting here to-day under far more favorable conditions, financially, than we did a year ago. At that time we were in the aftermath of the severest and most far-reaching panic that this country has ever seen. We were then living and pursuing our business vocations under the shadow of the "big stick." To-day we are once more enjoying the benefits of that dear old constitution of the United States, the legacy left us by the great patriots and wise men of the Revolution, now interpreted and executed by a conservative statesman, our honored guest but two years ago, whose judicial and diplomatic training are evidence of the fact that for the next four years to come, peace, prosperity, and the pursuit of happiness, with good-will toward all men, will be his message to the people of our beloved country.

Our association, although but six years old, has a total membership of 236, an increase since February 1, 1908, of 27. There are 299 banking institutions doing business in the state of New Jersey at the present time, according to the last report of the Commissioner of Banking and Insurance, with total resources aggregating $526,699,400. During the year 1908 charters were granted to six national banks and three during the current year. The state institutions increased seven in number during the year 1908, and up to the present time, four of them being trust companies and three of them being state banks of discount and deposit. No new savings banks were organized since our last convention. There are 11 individual and private bankers authorized under chapter 130 of the laws of 1906, to do business in the state. Let us hope that when we meet again next year all of the financial institutions of the state of New Jersey, as well as all of the individual bankers above referred to, will be members of this association. A detailed report of the business of the association transacted during the past year will be presented to you later on by the secretary, in his report, and in the reports of the executive and legislative committees.

On May 30, 1908, an act of Congress, popularly known as the Aldrich-Vreeland Bill, was approved by the President, providing for the appointment of a national monetary commission and for the issue of emergency currency to the amount of $500,000,000, by the national government under certain conditions, which are familiar to you all. The act also provided for the formation of national currency associations. I find upon investigation, that the only association of that character which has been formed under the provisions of this act is the "Washington, D. C., National Currency Association," the formation of which was approved by the secretary of the treasury. The national monetary commission appointed by the president pursuant to this act has not as yet made a report to Congress, and from the various investigations in progress, it does not seem likely that any report will be made at the present session. Upon investigation, I find that the commission has been devoting most of its time to investigating suggested changes in the administrative features of the national banking laws, and by investigating the fiscal systems of England, France, Germany and the United States. It is to be hoped that when this commission makes its report, it will result in legislation which will for all time settle the difficult problems surrounding our present national currency. The Aldrich-Vreeland Bill settles nothing. M. Bossevine, the eminent Dutch economist, in speaking of this law, very aptly says, that "it merely serves as a temporary expedient; it is like applying a strip of court plaster to a severed artery."

The general business situation of the country continues encouraging. There seems to be a slow but steady increase in the buying power. It is doubtful if this will be expanded to any great degree until the new tariff bill has been passed, and until the outlook for this year's harvest is clearer; but sentiment, which in my opinion, counts for everything in the business world, from all indications, is undergoing a decided change for the better. Every bank in the country has more surplus funds seeking investment to-day than ever before, with perhaps the exception of the year 1897. Whenever the business men of this country begin to expand their business operations, which should occur after the tariff law is passed, the banks will be ready to lend them the available funds now on hand for that purpose, and the prosperous condition of the country which reached its zenith in 1906, should then return.

There is one matter that it might be well to refer to here. Within recent years a great many new institutions, both national and state, have been created, and are now doing business in our commonwealth. There hardly seems to be any necessity for any more institutions to be created at the present time, especially in the populous counties of the state. The national law, as well as the state law, have vested in the Comptroller of the Currency and in the commissioner of banking and insurance of this state, the discretion to either grant or refuse a charter or permission to do business in a given locality. This is a wise provision, in my judgment, and this discretion, for the next five years at least, should be very carefully exercised. The public is as much interested in the success of a financial institution as the stockholders are. A charter should not be granted in communities which are already being served by financial institutions, unless there is a public need for a bank or trust company in that community. Competition among the various institutions for business and deposits is getting keener every day. The tendency of a newly created bank or trust company to boom its deposit line by a virtual purchase of deposits in paying high and dangerous rates of interest to the depositors, is reprehensible and should be discouraged, if not prevented by law. No financial institution can exist which does business without profit, nor can a bank or trust company thrive which cannot get the support of the public. Therefore, the convenience of the public and the business community should be the sole factor which should guide our officials in the granting of new charters.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the members of the executive committee and the members of the legislative committee, as well as our genial and efficient secretary, for their very able assistance which they have rendered me during the past year in the transaction of the necessary business of this association.

Lucius Teter Before the New Jersey Bankers

Let me first of all thank you for the honor you have shown me in inviting me to appear before you. I appreciate that you are deeply interested in the subject which has been assigned to me, and I am not unmindful of the responsibility of representing so important a matter.

In considering for awhile the subject of postal savings bank legislation, I shall proceed on the theory that you are convinced of the undesirability of such legislation. Since you are students of finance, I take it for granted that you realize the folly of such a scheme.

While reviewing what I would say to you to-day, I was reminded of that thought provoking speech made at Denver by Doctor Woodrow Wilson. You will recall that he made it very clear to us that we, as bankers, should live nearer to the people; his idea being that while various miscellaneous people go about talking concerning financial matters, there is a certain aloofness on the part of most bankers which does not add to our popularity, but rather the reverse. He went further, and gave us to understand that since we are, by training, the financial men of the country, we have a responsibility in shaping the thoughts and actions of other people in these matters. So it is not my wish to-day to debate the postal savings bank question, but, rather do I wish to review the subject that you may have it clearly before you; the most important point that I can make at this time being the fact that it is necessary for each one of us to take some active part in carrying on the campaign of education, which should make it clear to the people of this country that from the point of view of Americans, the scheme is absurd, and if adopted, is bound to result in injury to the people themselves; indeed, a far greater injury to the people themselves than to existing banking institutions.

One of the most dangerous things in connection with the postal savings bank proposition is that it is superficially a very attractive thing. No one can deny the desirability of providing ample and secure depositories for the savings of the people. When the suggestion is made that our government, in which we all have so much confidence, should take charge of these funds, it at once appeals to us as an ideal thing. It requires much study and observation of men and affairs to come to a carefully matured opinion concerning the problem. Realizing the popular sound of the postal savings bank scheme, a certain class of politicians has made use of the subject as a basis for proposed legislation, and as a basis for speeches and literature, attacking existing bank institutions, and calculated to aggravate financial difficulties rather than to relieve them. So it is that while a very considerable element of Congress is striving earnestly and ably to work out a practical currency system that will go far toward curing most of our financial ills, another element would hastily put this postal savings patch on the crazy quilt of our present financial system; and while many able and honest bankers—and most of us are honest and some of us are able—are trying to bring about good banking methods and proper legislation in the several states, as well as endeavoring to serve our communities to the best of our ability, there are a certain lot of unthinking socialists and so-called "popular" newspapers that talk of some form of protecting the depositing side of the banking business, even if the scheme employed should mean the taking of funds from existing banks, utterly disregarding the fact that it is of equal importance to the people that their funds should be distributed throughout the country and scientifically loaned for the handling of general business and in upbuilding communities.

From an American standpoint the question of the establishment of postal savings banks presents considerations worthy of notice; in fact, the character of our government and the purpose for which it was founded are so different from those of the countries abroad that it is important to consider at the outset whether it is a proper function for the Federal government to engage in business of any kind. A review of the constitution of the United States does not give proof that it was the thought of the founders of our government that it should engage in business; in fact, one is impressed by the fact that the powers granted the Federal government appear to be limited to those general national functions that seem to depend exclusively upon the Federal government for execution; for instance, the national defense; regulation of interstate commerce; settling of questions between the states themselves; caring for navigable rivers and harbors; coining money, etc. Later this has developed into caring for our colonial possessions, the reclamation service, Panama Canal, forest reserves, etc.

Let no man go home feeling that the responsibilities I have indicated to day belong to some one else and that a committee will succeed in defeating this legislation, and that some one who has less to do than you is going to do your share of the work in bringing people to a better understanding of the business of banking. There is much for us all to do, collectively and individually. Having once convinced the people that we can be trusted to work out these problems for them, we must keep diligently at the task of perfecting our banking system. Go home resolved to spend a day next week explaining to your directors and other business men in your community, the error of the postal savings bank plan. You will find that these men can quickly grasp the point, that government competition means just so much less money for your community. Ask those men to write to their congressmen, telling them that they do not want a postal savings bank law passed. If you will do this, and every banker will do it, there will be no postal savings bank law. Nor does our responsibility end here. We must see to it that our state and federal statutes are made so that our banks can gradually evolve into more and more ideal institutions, profitable and satisfactory alike to the customers and to the owners.

Bank Guaranty

Washington, April 28.—Most of the rumors, now in circulation about the condition of national banks in the states where there is a system of state guaranty of deposits in operation have been denied by the Comptroller of the Currency. He said that his office was taking no initiative to get Congress to pass any law that would permit the national banks to participate in a state bank guaranty plan. If anything is done in this direction it will have to be taken up by the banks themselves. The comptroller's office regards its sole duty as merely to carry out the Federal law.

It is assumed that the banking situation in Kansas will be about the same as in Oklahoma now. The law in Kansas will go into effect on July 5th, and it is now difficult to say exactly how far the national banks are going to be injured by the state banks having their deposits guaranteed.

When Oklahoma adopted its law there were about 300 national banks within the state. Now there are about sixty less.

Hugo E. Otte

Hugo E. Otte, vice-president National City Bank, has been nominated on the regular ticket for treasurer of the Hamilton Club. Mr. Otte is a good organizer and should prove a popular vote getter with the members of this big political organization.

Chicago Visitors

Mr. C. F. Enright, vice-president of the Missouri Valley Trust Company, St. Joseph, Missouri, visited Chicago Saturday. Mr. Enright says they are expecting a large crowd in attendance at the Missouri Bankers convention to be held at St. Joseph May 5th and 6th, but that everybody who comes will be made comfortable and have a good time.

Mr. Paul Watkins, director of the Second National Bank and vice-president of the Watkins Medical Company, Winona, Minnesota, with Mrs. Watkins, attended grand opera in Chicago last week.

Illinois Bank Robbed

About 1 o'clock a. m., April 24th, burglars blew open and robbed the safe of the McClure & Jacobs Bank of Arrowsmith, McLean county, of approximately $3,000. The bank's loss is covered by burglary policy carried with the Illinois Association.

The protective committee of the association has offered a reward of $250 for the apprehension and conviction of one or more of the guilty parties. The insurance company offers a reward of $100 for the apprehension and conviction of each of the guilty parties.

There is little or no clew to be had, except that two suspicious looking individuals were seen around Arrowsmith the previous day. Any information should be communicated immediately to R. L. Rinaman, secretary, at 1030 The Rookery.

Abner Smith Loses Out

The supreme court has affirmed the verdict of the lower courts, in Illinois, by which Abner Smith, who was promotor and president of the late Bank of America, was sentenced to a term in Joliet penitentiary. Said Smith: "It was folly on my part to imagine that I could operate a bank, and whatever losses came to the stockholders through that ill-starred venture were the result of ignorance and not of bad intent. I knew nothing of banking—that is the whole story."

Valentine Out of Continental

P. A. Valentine has sold the last of his holding of stock in Continental National, of this city, preparatory to financing the new Booth fisheries concern. A year ago Mr. Valentine was credited with holding 1,333 shares of the stock of the bank, and his wife held 243 shares. Part of the Valentine lot was sold several months ago, and the balance within the past month. It was all purchased by interests connected with the bank. Mr. Valentine was a director of the Continental for several years, but has not been since his permanent residence began in New York.

Effect of Guaranty Laws on National Banks

Most of the rumors now in circulation about the condition of national banks in the states where there is a system of state guaranty of deposits in operation were denied by the Comptroller of the Currency. He said that his office was taking no initiative to get Congress to pass any law that would permit the national banks to participate in a state bank guaranty plan. If anything is done in this direction it will have to be taken up by the banks themselves. The Comptroller's office regards its sole duty as merely to carry out the federal law.

It is assumed that the banking situation in Kansas will be about the same as in Oklahoma now. The law in Kansas will go into effect on July 5th, and it is now difficult to say exactly how far the national banks are going to be injured by the state banks having their deposits guaranteed.

When Oklahoma adopted its law there were about 300 national banks within the state. Now there are about sixty less. Although there has been on the average of six or seven national banks surrendering charters each month, the deposits of the remaining national banks have increased considerably. The Comptroller declares that the total deposits of the remaining national banks in Oklahoma are now greater than the combined total before there was a law there guaranteeing the deposits.

Canadian Dividends

Canadian companies will pay out $12,000,000 in dividends during the month. Canadian Pacific will pay out the largest amount.

O. C. Decker

Oliver C. Decker, assistant cashier of the American Trust and Savings Bank, Chicago, for the past thirteen years, will resign on May 15th to engage in another line of business, announcement of which will be made later.

Profit in Coin Making

While Uncle Sam makes the gold coin practically without cost to the owner of the bullion, he makes sufficient profit (called seigniorage) on the silver coinage and the nickels and pennies manufactured at his mints during the year to do a great deal more than pay all expenses of maintaining the mints and assay offices.

He buys the silver, nickel and copper at its bullion value, which in the case of silver costs about half the face value of the coin made from it. The actual cost of a nickel or five-cent piece, at the present price of metal, including the labor and coining expenses, is about two-fifths of a cent each, and the cost of a one-cent piece, including metal, labor, etc., is about one-fifth of a cent each.

In addition to the profits on silver coinage, the government has a source of revenue and profit from charges for refining deposits of gold and silver, charges for the alloy used in making the coin, assaying, making medals, sale of by-products from the refining operations, and the coining of money for other governments.

Ohio Banking News

The arrangements to inaugurate a new mail-pouch service between Cincinnati and New York City, for the benefit of those doing business with the clearing house in the latter place, and which went into effect last week, was hailed with delight by bankers of Cincinnati, as for the first time in their career were they enabled to have checks and drafts cleared through New York on the date of arrival.

Many Deaths in One Bank

William Johnson, president of the New Perry county bank of New Lexington, was in Columbus last week on business with local bankers and received word that the vice-president of his bank, Luther Stewart, was dead. In the last six months three of the officers of this bank, all well known in Columbus, have passed away. John Johnson, former president of the bank and father of the present president, died last fall. In January the vice-president died and Mr. Stewart, who died last week, was elected about two months ago to the vacancy.

Business Steadily Improving

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Ohio National of Cleveland, the regular quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent, payable May 1st, was declared and in addition the board transferred $50,000 from the undivided profit account to surplus account, making the latter now an even $300,000. The reports for the quarter indicated a steady improvement in general business conditions.

New State Bank

Incorporation papers for a new state charter bank at Cincinnati, to be known as The Court House Savings Bank, have been sent to Columbus. The new institution will have a capital of $100,000, and will take a lease on the banking room on the ground floor of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company building, at Court and Main streets.

Among those interested in the new bank are Eugene L. Lewis, one of the officials of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company; Louis J. Hauck, Val. Duttonhofer, Max Goldsmith, Charles J. Christie and John E. Bruce.

Cincinnati-Indianapolis Debate

The annual debate between the Cincinnati bank clerks and those of Indianapolis took place at the Business Men's Club last Saturday evening. The debate was on the merits of the central bank of issue and deposit. The winners were presented a silver loving cup. The judges were S. D. Fitton, Hamilton; W. O. Barnitz, Middletown, and an Indiana banker. The Cincinnati debaters were Henry J. Mergler, William Beiser and D. J. Lyons.

Leaves Fifth-Third National

H. A. Winans, assistant cashier of the Fifth-Third National, has resigned to take charge of the auditing department of the American Laundry Machinery Company in Norwood. Winans was formerly cashier of the American National and went to the Fifth-Third National with the merger.

Banking Notes

A new bank has been organized at Buckland. Alonzo Girton of Richmond, Ind., is interested.

A new trust company is being organized in Cleveland. Charles F. Laughlin is one of the promoters.

The Farmers State Bank of Callaway, Neb., has increased its capital stock from $10,000 to $15,000.

The capital stock of the Citizens Bank of Lake City, Minn., has been increased from $35,000 to $50,000.

The Security's Banking Record

The twentieth anniversary was celebrated by the Security Savings Bank of Cedar Rapids, Ia., Tuesday, April 27th, and the officials received many congratulations on the completion of twenty years of good banking. The Security Savings has become one of the most honored institutions of Cedar Rapids. It has encouraged savings and with its accumulations of savings it has made itself part of some of the largest undertakings in Cedar Rapids. In other words, it has helped to build up Cedar Rapids in two ways and both of them useful ways. The completion of the first eight-story building in the city last year was in itself a contribution to Cedar Rapids' growth.

The Security has been an example of sound and safe banking. Its affairs have all the time been in the hands of experienced men. There have been few changes in the personal work of the bank. Three of its officials have served continuously, namely G. F. VanVechten, J. R. Amidon and E. M. Scott. Mr. Scott, who is the active head of the bank, has made a record and a reputation. He has given twenty years of service to the bank. He has been not merely a banker for the patrons of the bank, but he has been adviser and helper of all who have gone to him. He is a banker who is trusted and a friend who is loved. Frank Filip, who is now cashier, has been with the bank fifteen years and his services have been second only to those of Mr. Scott. Mrs. Maude W. Carpenter, the ladies' teller, has been connected with the bank for eighteen years.

The bank has never had a better growth than during the last year. It has at the present time over 16,000 depositors and its resources are over two millions of dollars, of which a quarter of a million is represented in the form of increased deposits within the last year.

The Farmers Savings Bank of Oxford, Ia., has increased its capital stock from $15,000 to $20,000.

The Citizens State Bank of Stevensville, Mont., will erect a new bank on West Main Street.

Better Rates for Money

Gradually the rates for commercial loans are growing better owing to advance orders sent in by country merchants and the heavy investments which have been made by country banks in good bonds during the easy money period. The bonds give a good return and the reflex influence upon rates will still further increase the benefits. Farmers are buying seed and farm implements as never before for farming has come to be a most profitable business and not a mere means of livelihood.

Chicago bankers are talking a five per cent rate for time loans and expect to realize it soon. This doesn't refer to brokers' paper but to straight customers' loans. The surplus money which ran into so many millions in the banks last year has slipped away into bonds and refunding loans and rates in consequence will slide upward as the surplus goes downward.

The Patten wheat boom has stimulated planting expansion and this, in the country, means drawing of money from local banks, which in turn draw down their balances in the centers.

Another Bank in the Weiser Fold

C. J. Weiser, president of the Winneshiek County State Bank, Decorah, Iowa, David Clark, Jr., of the First National, Kenmare, N. Dak., and O. J. Clark of the Farmers and Merchants State Bank, Sherwood, N. Dak., have purchased the Tolley State Bank, Tolley, N. Dak. These gentlemen now own the First National, Kenmare, N. Dak., Farmers and Merchants State, Sherwood, N. Dak., First State Bank, Norma, N. Dak., First State Bank, Crosby, N. Dak. and the Tolley State Bank, Tolley, N. Dak. E. W. D. Holway of Minneapolis will act as auditor for these as he does for all other North Dakota banks in which Mr. Weiser is interested.

The Bank of Grand Prairie, Hazen, Ark., will erect a new bank building.

A Good Book on Socialism

The MacMillan Company, of New York, has brought out "Socialism in Theory and Practice" by Morris Hillquit, who is a socialist, and not merely an observer in this field. In placing socialism in its historical background Mr. Hillquit begins by showing how what we now know as capitalism was itself originally a revolutionary movement. Now, however, society has developed along such lines that capitalism becomes reactionary as opposed to socialism, which is revolutionary. "Socialism," he says, "is the manifestation of the working class revolt against the excessive individualism of the capitalists, just as capitalism appeared originally as the expression of the revolt of the bourgeoisie against the excessive centralization of the ancient regime." Compared with other movements of the masses to-day he says that the socialist parties emphasize the general interests of labor and train their members in administration and government, whereas the labor unions fight the immediate battles of the workers, educating them in economic rights, and the co-operative labor enterprises give training in the democratic management of industries.

Mr. Hillquit is a philosopher, a thinker and a keen observer. He will repay his readers many fold. He will make you think better of his friends and is certain to induce further study and research into the ideals of his struggling band. Price $1.50.

On April 1st the Monroe State Bank, Monroe, Wash., commenced operating as the First National Bank of Monroe.

Mississippi Bankers Convention

Secretary B. W. Griffith, of the Mississippi Bankers Association, already has sent out a handsomely bound copy of his program for the twenty-first annual convention, to be held at Columbus, May 11th and 12th. The address of welcome, which will be delivered at noon of Tuesday, May 11th, will be by the Honorable Henry L. Whitfield. J. W. McGrath of Brookhaven, will reply for the bankers. Following this president Oscar Newton, Jr., of Jackson, will review banking conditions in the state of Mississippi for the year of his administration. The balance of the session will be given up to business matters, and on Tuesday morning Lucius Teter of Chicago will deliver himself on "The Postal Savings Situation." Mr. Teter has the happy faculty of changing the title of his subject at each convention at which he appears, although in the main the address which he presents must be more or less confined to facts touching the present situation of the postal savings bank agitation. E. L. Rice, of Memphis, will follow Mr. Teter with his address entitled "Modern Pharisees." The balance of the morning session of Tuesday will be given up to ten-minute responses by the vice-presidents. On Wednesday a general debate will take place on the subject "Shall we Have a Uniform Currency Issued by the Government? And through All Banks, State and National, on Same Terms?" C. A. Johnston of Columbus will lead the affirmative and Sol. Wexler of New Orleans will present the negative. Speeches will be limited to ten minutes and members will be recognized in order by the chair. The business session of the convention will conclude on Wednesday morning and in the evening the members will depart for New Orleans to join the tri-state convention in that city, on May 13th and 14th. Special Pullman cars have been provided for all who wish to make the trip. A very large attendance is expected.

A. F. Greenwald has resigned as cashier of the German Savings Bank of Manning, Ia.

S. deposits $10,700,300, decrease $1,090,775.

The percentage of actual reserve of the clearing house banks to-day was 25.80.

The statement of banks and trust companies of Greater New York not reporting to the clearing house shows those institutions have aggregate deposits of $1,242,921,900; total cash on hand, $146,412,700, and loans amounting to $1,103,113,700.

New Directors Elected

Charles Francis Adams, second, of Boston, treasurer of the Harvard Corporation; A. A. Tilney, of Harvey Fisk & Sons, New York, and Dumont Clarke, president of the American Exchange National Bank of New York, have been elected directors of the Hudson Companies, the holding company for the Hudson and Manhattan Railroad Company, which operates the McAdoo tunnels between New York and New Jersey. The three new directors take the places made vacant by the resignation of Cornelius Vanderbilt, Gardiner Lane, and Andrew Freedman, who are directors in the Interborough Company operating the New York Subway, and who left the McAdoo Company when Mr. McAdoo applied for a franchise to extend his line to the Grand Central Station.

Bankruptcy Proceedings

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed in the United States district court last week against the brokerage firm of Ennis & Stoppani, members of the Consolidated Stock Exchange and the Chicago Board of Trade. The liabilities are alleged in the petition to be 1½ million dollars, and the assets $400,000. Lindsay Russell was appointed receiver.

Following the appointment of the receiver in the bankruptcy proceedings it was announced that Ennis & Stoppani had made a general assignment to Treadwell Cleveland.

The petitioning creditors in the bankruptcy proceedings were: Charles Sincere, with claims of $2,500; Ethel B. Newton, with claims of $250, and Fred J. Ringley, $2,395.

It is alleged in the petition that the firm committed an act in bankruptcy in paying over certain amounts to preferred creditors, and that property valued at $5,000 had been illegally transferred.

The firm's members are Thomas A. Ennis and Charles F. Stoppani. Judge Holt fixed the bond of Receiver Russell at $50,000.

Oklahoma Bankers

Secretary Charles L. Engle has prepared an advance program for his state bankers convention which will convene at 2 o'clock, May 18th, at Enid. The first day's session will be given up to the state bankers section and will have the usual preliminaries, consisting of an address of welcome and a response on the part of the association, after which C. C. Smith will discuss the "Building and Loan Association," and F. J. Wikoff will have for his subject "Bank Topics." J. W. Orr is to address the convention on "State Rights of Bankers," to be followed by a general discussion participated in by Governor Haskell, Senator Roddie, and Attorney-General West. The section will then adjourn and take dinner in a body at the Loewen Hotel.

There will be an evening session to be called promptly at 8 o'clock, at which all group secretaries will report, also the executive committee on new or unfinished business. At this session the president, J. B. Jones, will present his annual address entitled "State Bankers." D. M. Hailey will speak on "Trust Companies" and W. O. Jones, of the National Park Bank, New York, will speak on "The Correspondent," referring of course to the banks. State Bank Commissioner A. M. Young will select his own topic for an address which will close the evening session, unless there are prominent visiting bankers who wish to talk. At the adjournment cigars and refreshments will be provided by the bankers of Enid.

The first session of the regular state convention, at Enid, will meet on Wednesday morning, May 19th. Edmond Prantz will welcome the bankers and I. M. Holcomb of Oklahoma City will respond. A. D. Kennedy, president of the Oklahoma Bankers Association, of Okmulgee, will deliver his annual address, and Charles L. Engle will read the secretary's report. Regular order of business will take up the remainder of the morning's session. In the afternoon bank commissioner, A. M. Young, who addressed the state bankers section, also will address the general convention on the work of the bank commissioners department. Governor Haskell will speak, and C. R. Breckenridge of Fort Smith, Arkansas, will deliver an address on the "Postal Savings Bank." Bank Examiner Frank W. Bryant, of Oklahoma City, will deliver a short address followed by five minute talks by prominent bankers from different parts of the state. At the Wednesday's session there will be a whistling solo by Mrs. A. G. Barrett, of Blackwell, and a violin solo by Mrs. I. F. Richards, of Stroud.

The Thursday morning's session will be given up largely to the reports of the various groups and to an address by A. O. Wilson of St. Louis. The afternoon session, and the closing one of the convention, will hear an address from W. A. Brooks, of Oklahoma City, on "Legislation." J. P. Whatley, the state bank examiner, will lead in a series of five-minute talks, participated in by prominent delegates present.

The social events provided by the Enid bankers will include a reception for the ladies, an automobile ride through town, and a smoker at the Elks Club. On one afternoon of the convention the bankers will be taken to Spaulding's stock farm for a jack-rabbit shoot. Mr. Engle has humorously arranged that all bankers west of the Mississippi are to be barred from this shoot, "as Mr. Spaulding does not wish the jack-rabbits killed." This is supposed to be a reflection upon the shooting abilities of W. O. Jones and other Easterners who will be present. There will also be a ball and refreshments, at the Lakewood Park, and the ladies during their automobile rides will call at the homes of some of the bankers.

H. N. Tinker

H. N. Tinker of Ft. Worth is advising his banking friends by letter that "the Texas bankers convention will be held three days, beginning May 10th, and that the 11th will be spent in the way of an entertainment on the magnificent Buffalo Bayou, the banks of which are lined with magnolia blossoms. At a distance of about 18 miles from Houston, we come to the San Jacinto battle grounds, where Sam Houston and Santa Anna met in decisive battle, wherein Santa Anna's forces were defeated and routed, passing from there to the celebrated port, Seabrook, for dinner.

This all sounds good and Texas hospitality, being above par, a big attendance is expected.

Pike Adding Machine Absorbed

Newark, April 26.—The Pike Adding Machine Company, of Orange, this state, which has operated a factory in Mitchell Street for several years, has been absorbed by the Burroughs Adding Machine Company of Detroit. The latter has been occupied for some time past in the process of securing control of the various concerns that make adding machines in the United States. The Pike Company is one of the last to be absorbed.

A few days ago the plant was shut down, but to-day the hands were notified to return to work. It is expected that the Pike Company will continue to manufacture in Orange along the same lines as heretofore. The patents under which the local company operates are considered an advance over all others, and that fact made the capital stock a good buy, it was said, for the big, masterful Detroit concern.

The Oregon Bankers Convention

Secretary J. L. Hartman of the Oregon Bankers Association is sending out a preliminary convention announcement, calling attention to the fourth annual convention of his state association, to be held at Seattle, Washington, as a part of the tri-state convention, June 24th, 25th, and 26th. It is here that this association will meet with those of Idaho and Washington. The program has already been stated in THE CHICAGO BANKER and is to be the very finest possible, and a large attendance of prominent Eastern bankers is expected. He calls attention to the fact that the very low rates of fare granted to the Alaska-Yukon Exposition ought to be an inducement to those who wish to attend. The Oregon headquarters will be at the new Washington Hotel. Although but four years old, the Oregon organization shows an efficiency of 67 per cent of all banks in the state, on the membership roll. Secretary Hartman hopes to make this convention the means of adding many new members.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

The successful transfer of $13,000,000 in cash and securities last Saturday night from the Bank of Commerce building to the new Farmers and Mechanics' Savings Bank building recalls the fact that an astonishing amount of cash has been carried through the streets of Minneapolis in the last few years without loss. Banks have moved their locations, carting millions of money from one vault to another. Among them are these: German-American Bank, one block; Metropolitan Bank, one block; Minnesota National, one block; Northwestern National, two blocks; Security National, two blocks; First National, one block; Swedish American National, one block; Swedish American Savings, one block twice; National Bank of Commerce, half block; Farmers and Mechanics' Savings, half block twice in four months; Hennepin County Savings, 150 feet; Savings Bank of Minneapolis, one block. Previous to the last five years the Flour City National and the Nicollet National moved, and in the near future the People's Bank and the Union State will move. In St. Paul several removals have taken place with like security, notably that of the First National when it removed in its fine new building on Fifth Street.

Farmers and Mechanics' Savings Bank

The Farmers and Mechanics' Savings Bank has made special provision for the women depositors, of whom there are 25,000 out of a total of 53,000. On the first night in the new building the bank was thrown open for depositors as usual, and the women of the city were invited especially to inspect the new building. The wide range of race in the list of depositors of the bank is illustrated by the fact that John Carlson was the first male depositor, and Mrs. V. P. Riley the first woman depositor.

Chapter Meeting

Samuel R. Van Sant, former governor of Minnesota, was the speaker for the Minneapolis chapter of bank clerks last Tuesday night. The meeting was for the nomination of officers for the year and the naming of delegates to the Seattle convention of the institute.

Bank to Move

The Union State Bank last week closed a lease for part of the first floor of a building uptown from its present situation, formerly known as the Minneapolis club. New bank fixtures will be installed and an entrance will be cut in the corner of the building which itself stands on a corner. It will be more than sixty days before the bank can make the move. At that time the capital stock, which is increased from $50,000 to $200,000, will take effect. The new capital stock has been subscribed by business men not affiliated before with the bank and will increase the prestige of the institution.

Notices Sent Stockholders

Eleven hundred notices sent to stockholders and depositors in the former State Savings Bank of Hamline, and the former Citizens Savings Bank of St. Paul, to show cause why dividends should not be paid, received large response. The American Trust Company reported that it could pay 40 per cent dividend for the latter institution and 30 per cent for the former bank. Checks have been mailed for the amounts.

City Certificates Sold

Certificates for the indebtedness which the city of St. Paul annually incurs to anticipate the tax returns are being signed by the city officials. They will be dated June 1st. These certificates are sold preferably to citizens of St. Paul, estates, and small investors. The notes are highly prized as investments and the time for their renewal is waited with eagerness.

Hopes Blighted

The fond young hopes of the Interstate Protective Association, now a child of four months, have been blighted. A yeggman, or some yeggmen, have dared to come within the sacred precincts of the five states in the association and blow "soup" into the cracks of a bank safe. True, the citizens were aroused from their repose and drove the yeggman, or yeggmen, out of the town, but this all occurred since the manifesto was issued by Manager Charles R. Frost, to stay banished out of the realm. The yeggmen blew the safe of the Ostrander State Bank, Minn., into smithereens, but failed to get the money together in time to make way with it before the angry citizens gathered uttering imprecations upon their heads. However, the association takes heart, for this is the first attempt at bank burglary in Minnesota for some time. The watchful attitude of the association's protective force has been effective in keeping the yeggmen away from the small town banks.

Changes His Position

Augustin J. Koehler, bank reporter for the Minneapolis Tribune, has allied-himself with the staff of George D. Bartlett of the American Bank Protection Company, and will remove to Kansas City, from which he will sell the bank protection provided by the company in Oklahoma and adjacent territory. Mr. Koehler tried the newspaper business four

B. F. Saul

B. F. Saul, president of the Home Savings Bank at Washington, D. C., has been studying bank architecture in St. Paul. He was much pleased with the style of the new First National and may pattern his bank after it.

New Members on Stock Exchange

Bert Winter, secretary and treasurer of the Union Investment Company, which operates several banks through the Northwest, is one of the new members of the Minneapolis Stock Exchange. Fred W. Deau, the commercial paper broker, is another. The list now includes fifteen names and twenty is the limit. Membership will be confined to the dealers most active in buying and selling local securities.

On Trial

Trial of Arthur Z. Drew, former owner of the Bank of Hamline, has begun at St. Paul. He is charged with receiving deposits after he knew the bank was insolvent. Formerly Mr. Drew was a professor at Hamline University and he was interested in two banks between St. Paul and Minneapolis. Mayor Daniel W. Lawler is of counsel for the defense. The defense contends that the failure was brought about by an assessment made by the public examiner on Otter Tail County lands owned by Mr. Drew and held as assets of the bank.

Anamoose National

The Anamoose National, Anamoose, N. D., is a new Northwestern institution. Its capital is $25,000, and its officers are: President, J. Schmidt; vice-presidents, T. J. Gulack and W. E. Glozbach; cashier, W. C. Huack; assistant cashier, H. T. Riedell.

Farmers State Bank

The Farmers State of South Shore, S. D., is another $10,000 bank. Its incorporators are: O. C. Frink, H. W. Williams, Julius Hanne-man, G. K. Burt, and Anton Klix.

Has Sold Interest in Bank

President F. P. Ainsworth of the First Bank of Glenwood, Wis., has sold his interest to local business men and will become president of the Bank of Baldwin, which is reorganizing. The Glenwood Bank has chosen as officers: President, A. J. Vanderhiden; vice-president, Dr. P. A. Beebe; cashier, D. C. Coolidge; assistant cashier, H. L. Payne.

Ramsey County State Bank

The Ramsey County State Bank will open at St. Paul on May 10th, at 755 Wabasha Street, where the State Bank of St. Paul formerly held forth. The bank was organized on April 1st with $25,000 capital. The organizers are Peter Manderfeld of Minneapolis, H. H. Manderfeld of Mora, Minn., to be the cashier, and F. W. Waterman, to be the president.

Make Profit on Bonds

Banks in Northern Minnesota are reported to have made a profit of more than $100,000 in county and school warrants from the counties of Itasca and Beltrami. The county of Beltrami has been practically bankrupt for several years and its warrants have gone begging, as there were no funds to pay them. Knowing they would eventually be redeemed, banks have taken them at 50 cents on the dollar or less, and the legislature a few days ago passed a bill authorizing the county to issue bonds with which to refund its floating indebtedness. As soon as these bonds are issued the warrants will be redeemed at par.

"Our Plymouth Forefathers"

The Dana Estes Co. of Boston, has brought out a timely and interesting book entitled "Our Plymouth Forefathers," by Charles Steadman Hanks. Mr. Hanks is a Boston lawyer of high standing and an eminent golfer by right of priority and devotion to the "Royal and Ancient game," railroad investigator, and friend of President Roosevelt. He is as diverse in his writings as in his accomplishments and avocations. His contribution to Colonial history undoubtedly will take as high rank in its field as did his notable work on golf when it appeared seven years ago. "Our Plymouth Forefathers" bears evidence of the same painstaking care and historical research that characterized all of his literary work. Beginning with the departure of the Pilgrim Fathers from England and their settlement in Holland, the author traces the religious movements of the times that led to the expedition to America. The story of the Plymouth Colony and its relation to those stirring events in our country's earliest history is given with the impressive detail that is devoid of pedantry, while the style is simple, forceful and convincing. The work is extra illustrated with numerous beautiful double tone plates and has a complete index. Price $1.50.

The Art of Selling Things

According to the latest available figures more than six million persons in this country are engaged in selling things; and of this vast army fully one million are commercial travelers. It would seem, therefore, that there is a large audience for Mr. James H. Collins' entertaining little work entitled "Human Nature in Selling Goods."

Few persons have studied American selling methods to better purpose than Mr. Collins, or with deeper insight into the reasons for things as they are. In certain quarters it has been fashionable to look upon the drummer as a parasite—as a useless middleman and profit-snatcher, standing between the producer and the consumer. Mr. Collins overturns this silly fallacy, and shows that a live drummer is a real educator and a veritable advance agent of progress.

Private Bank Supervision

The new bills in the Albany legislature, putting private banks under bonds and making them subject to state supervision and inspection, is likely to pass. Such an act should be passed in every state in the union, where wild-private banking is tolerated. We like "wild-private" banking better than "wildcat" banking, although it means the same thing. The reform forces in New York have a tower of strength in the Wall Street Journal, a believer in strict banking laws of a supervisory character well administered. The Journal says: "That there seems need for such an amendment in the banking laws as will give the state some jurisdiction and supervision over the private banks now in operation, was evidenced by the recent failure of the Knapp Brothers' private banks at Deposit and Callicoon. The fact that a bank is not chartered by the state or national government cannot be given as a suitable reason why it should be entirely without supervision, or that any kind of wildcat financing can be conducted with other people's money without the depositors having any redress. Of course, it might be claimed that people should not deposit their money in private banks; but it is safe to say that the private bank can be as carefully and conservatively managed as any chartered institution. It is self-evident that a private bank cannot exist without public confidence. The very reason that this confidence on the part of the public is sometimes misplaced may point to a need for some kind of supervision."

This sentiment is growing in all the states and many western states have adopted such laws. Of the backward ones Illinois is the principal offender. Other necessary laws, such as attaching a penalty to the crime of securing loans by false statements, are side tracked for very fear that an inspection amendment shall be tacked on. Laws requiring certified statements from borrowers cannot pass lest some one wants as much from the bank in return.

Loan Shark Law Killed

Bankers and all good citizens will be sorry to learn that the imperfections of the Illinois loan shark bill were so vital that the state supreme court thought it necessary to kill the whole reform measure as unconstitutional. It ought to be possible to speedily prepare a new bill, avoiding the faults of the old, and to pass it at once. On the part of the court the blow to those who are conducting the warfare against the "sharks" is tempered only by the fact that down at Springfield is a bill designed to knock the daylights out of the money lenders by other means. The decision will affect it only in necessitating the change of a few words.

This arises from the fact that the supreme court seems to be of the opinion that there is a difference between "wages" and "salary," and that while the assignment of the former may be regulated by the legislature the man who earns the latter has an inalienable right to assign his future earnings as he pleases. Two of the justices, however, express in a special concurring opinion the idea that even the wage earner has the constitutional right to sign away his pay without the formalities prescribed by the legislature.

"The statute is unconstitutional," says the court, "because it abridges the right of men earning the highest salaries to assign or transfer their salaries in such manner as they see fit, there being nothing in the public policy of the state requiring or warranting the abridgment of their right to dispose of their salaries, and nothing requiring or warranting a statute giving such men the benefit that might with entire propriety be given the wage earners by an act in relation to assignment of wages."

The new bill seeks to make void any personal property or salary or wages loan in which the rate of interest charged is more than 4 per cent a month. As the rates now charged range from 10 to 33 per cent a month, it is expected this will practically kill the business. It also provides that the lender must give the borrower when the loan is made a memorandum setting forth the rate of interest, the amount of the loan, the time at which it was made, the date of payment, and the law in full. If this is furnished and shows a rate of interest of more than 4 per cent the borrower may demand back all papers he has given, including any security, and the lender forfeits the loan and interest. If it is not furnished the lender is liable criminally. Every good intentioned man in the state should help pass this bill.

Taft and the Tariff

It might be called a political party swindle in a case where a platform and a candidate pledged one thing and then used the party whip to do a directly opposite thing. Senator Aldrich boasts that the "republicans" never promised to revise the tariff downwards. All the party promised, said he, was to revise the tariff upon the basis of rates which would equal the difference in cost of production between this country and abroad with a reasonable profit.

This is what Mr. Taft had to say about it in accepting the nomination:

The tariff in a number of the schedules exceeds the difference between the cost of production of such articles abroad and at home including a reasonable profit to the American producer. The excess over the difference serves no useful purpose, but offers a temptation to those who would monopolize the production and sale of such articles in this country to profit by the excessive rate.

The people took Mr. Taft at his word and regarded the whole matter as a compact between the presidential candidate and the party promoting his election. Now Aldrich says, in effect, that the whole thing was a vote catcher and that he believes the alliance of the republican party with the protected interests is supreme and for the good of the people who, at times, get mistaken notions of policy.

Even after elected Mr. Taft said that he believed that "It is better to have no revision at all, better that the new tariff bill should die, unless we have revision of an honest and thorough sort." President Taft has provided about all of the positive pledges of downward tariff revision which have been thus far placed before the country. That this is fully appreciated by legislators is seen from the way in which his utterances are being referred to in Congress. Frequently the inaugural address or the speeches of the President during the campaign are cited as support for the view that a downward revision had been promised. One of the best examples of such use of the documents in question was seen during the heated debate of the 22d inst., when Mr. Taft was mentioned as the origin of the downward pledge and his inaugural address was put in evidence. Up to this time none of the republicans have been disposed to repudiate the pledge given by the President further than to say that conditions have changed.

The plain truth is that Mr. Taft has given no positive or final clew whatever as to his real views on the tariff. Mr. Aldrich has been inclined to complain because of his inability to get from the President definite statements as to specific lines of duties. Others who have been to the Executive Mansion have found the President disinclined to do more regarding the tariff than to sign it or veto it when it is sent to him. If the people are to be disregarded after having relied upon the promises and pledges of the candidate and the party, promising reduced duties on the necessities of life, the next congressional battle at the polls will be interesting.

Spokane, Wash., April 29.—Managers of eleven banks in Spokane report that if the next call of the Comptroller of the Currency does not come until the first week in May, they will be able to show deposits aggregating about $27,000,000, or $2,000,000 more than at any time in the history of the city. Most of this money is coming through new accounts, opened by recent arrivals in Spokane, who with others are settling in the Inland Empire at the rate of from 3,500 to 4,000 a month. The deposits in the banks amounted to $26,250,000 at the close of business on April, 17th. This does not include the deposits in the savings departments of the Union Trust Company and the Palace Store, and the range is from $100,000 to $7,500,000. The last call of the Comptroller was on February 5th, when the banks reported $24,831,000, since which time the gains have been steady. Savings accounts are also growing, but the exact figures in this are not available. There are also gains in clearings, the total for the week ended April 16th, being $7,857,206, a gain of 24 per cent over the same period in 1908.

Will Increase Investments

L. G. Fouse of Philadelphia, where he is president of the Fidelity Life Insurance Company, who was in Spokane a few days the week of April 11th, accompanied by Mrs. Fouse on the way home after passing some time in the Northwest and the Hawaiian islands, said that his company expects to increase its investments in mortgage loans in Spokane and the district, putting out more money in first class residence property and improved farm property in the best districts. He is highly pleased with the progress that has been made, he said, adding, that it exceeded his expectations. This is his first trip to the Northwest and the Spokane country and if indications count for anything there is every reason to believe that much of the Fidelity's surplus will find its way to this part of the country. The company is represented in Spokane by Frank Burman, who is manager for the district embraced in eastern Washington, Northeastern Oregon and Northern Idaho.

Organize New Investment Company

Bankers' Investment Company, capitalized for $25,000, has been organized by employees of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company and a number of young business men to invest in close-in real estate. The officers are: President, H. F. Williams; vice-president, Warren W. Tolman; secretary, Ernest Wiens; treasurer, Eugene B. Favre, who is also manager of the buying and selling department. It was at first intended to make the capital stock $15,000, but the applications were so much larger and more numerous than expected, many of them coming from outside the bank, that it was decided to increase the amount to $25,000. Fifteen thousand dollars of this is paid up and the balance of the stock will be kept in the treasury until it is deemed advisable to sell it, when the holding shareowners will have the first call.

Build New Railway

Colonel Albert M. Dewey of Spokane, president of the Okanogan Electric Railway Company, expects to build a line from Nighthawk, Okanogan county, to a point near the head of navigation on the Columbia river, announces that the bond issue of $3,000,000 has been sold to a French syndicate. He also stated that the line will be built to Spokane from the Columbia river and it is purposed to have another outlet at Seattle. This would make a line of more than 500 miles, forming connection with transcontinental lines at the eastern and western terminals, and tapping a rich agricultural and mining district in the Methow valley and Okanogan country in north central Washington, which are not now served with railroad transportation facilities.

Depositors Paid

One hundred thousand dollars was divided on a pro rata basis at La Grande, Ore., on April 14th, among 707 depositors of the Farmers & Traders' National Bank, as a result of the arrival here of 45 per cent dividend checks from Washington. There are several heavy creditors, but the average checks range between $50 and $100. When the bank failed many were left short of coin and only by careful financing have they been able to keep above board until the dividends were actually in the hands.

Who will Win?

Wet and dry factions at Wenatchee, Wash. are lining up for a fight on the proposed bond issue of $40,000, which will be decided at the election on May 8th. The promoters declare they intend to use the money to carry on work of improvement in the city, while the opposition contends that part of the money is to be used to take up the city's warrant indebtedness. It is expected the issue will carry.

School Bonds

State Treasurer Lewis of Washington has computed that old normal school warrants outstanding aggregate $108,799, that interest to June 8, 1909, will be $97,224 at 7 per cent, so that the new 3 per cent refunding bonds to be issued under the law passed by the last legislature will be for $206,023. New bonds will be exchanged for old warrants by the auditor and treasurer. They run 15 years, but the state has the option of paying in five years.

New Bank at St. Maries

Articles have been filed at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, incorporating the Kootenai County State Bank, with a capital of $15,000. The bank will be at St. Maries. The directors and officers are: President, William Dollar; vice-president, Roy C. Lanners; cashier, J. E. Fraulick; William Truman and J. Cullum, trustees. The bank will open May 1st.

First Annual Banquet

Thomas H. Brewer, vice-president of the Exchange National Bank, and H. L. Moody, representing the chamber of commerce of Spokane, and R. C. McCroskey, president of the Pullman State Bank, were the principal speakers at the first annual banquet by the Commercial Club of Pullman, Wash., the evening of April 14th, when Dr. S. B. Nelson of the Washington state college presided as toast master, also delivering the address of welcome. Dr. Enoch A. Bryan, president of the college, responded to the toast "Prospect."

CHAPTER RECORD

(Department of Chicago Banker)

An Open Forum Dedicated to the Associated Chapters A. I. of B. in Which to Advance the Great Movement for Independent Action and Universal Membership

Col. Farnsworth at Atlantic City Convention

Two years and a half ago we had a very successful convention in Atlantic City—I think one of the best we ever had—a most delightful place to have a convention, and I hope some time in the future, Mr. President, it will be our pleasure to bring the American Bankers Association again to your city. We anticipate at Chicago that we will have the largest convention in the history of the association. We believe we will have at least 5,000 people, and we know that the bankers of Chicago and the people of Chicago will be fully equal to the emergency.

This is an era of organization, the various units of which include combinations and trusts. During the past four or five years, a sentiment has been created in this country against combinations and trusts, and has even been so far-reaching as to produce prejudice against organization. There can be no great good achieved without some evil creeping into it, and while there may be occasion to criticize the combinations and the trusts, I am perhaps one of the minority in this vast country who believes great good comes from all of these aggregations. Legitimate organization for the advancement of business or social interests, when its activity is confined to specific lines, cannot but be of benefit.

I do not believe it is necessary for me to dwell on the benefits of organization. With the progress of the times in this resourceful country of ours, it became a necessity. We find it in religious denominations, in the arts and sciences, in business and commercial pursuits, the trades and in the professions, not only for the protection of extensive interests, but for the social welfare of mankind. This banding together of man, and of women as well, and brought together as you are here to-day, broadens vision from every viewpoint. It cements friendships that are everlasting; it gives an interchange of thought and experience which cannot but be of benefit to you in your chosen profession.

The organization of the American Bankers Association antedates all state organizations. The first convention was held in Saratoga, New York, in 1875, the object of which was to form an association of banks and bankers to solve the problem of the resumption of specie payments by the United States. History records that the efforts in this direction were successful. A permanent organization was formed in 1876 which has in a broad and liberal-minded way always endeavored to advance the welfare and prosperity of the country at large.

During the thirty-five years passed, no financial legislation of importance has been discussed or adopted by our government without having been considered by our association or its committees, and proper representation made before the banking and finance committees of Congress.

The first state association to organize was Illinois, in 1880. We now have throughout this incomparable union, forty-six state associations; most of them large, live and progressive organizations.

The New Jersey Bankers Association was organized in 1903, and in accordance with your last annual report, you had 209 members out of 291 banking institutions in the state. This is a liberal proportion. You have various features of association work that are prominent in many state associations and which are worked out in the interests of your members.

The committee on express companies and money orders has been engaged in a vigorous fight against the express companies of the country, with a view to placing with the banks the business which naturally belongs there and which is now being done by express companies. Another feature of this committee's work is money orders. The American Bankers Association money orders have been in use for some time. The foreign money order or traveler's check has recently been placed in the hands of the banks. This money order is guaranteed, as is the domestic money order; will be as convenient and complete as the express money orders, and will be payable in all parts of the world that entertains the American traveling public to any extent.

The standing law committee, of which your able and energetic secretary, Mr. W. J. Field, is chairman, has been active in the past in legislative matters, and this year is making a vigorous campaign in the state legislatures to secure the passage of a number of proposed laws which will appeal to the banking fraternity generally, among which are the following:

An act to punish the making or use of false statements to obtain credit.

A bill to publish derogatory statements affecting banks.

An act to punish those who draw checks or drafts on banks where they have no funds.

And a heavy penalty for burglary with explosives, and several other features which will prove of interest and benefit. In many states these acts have become laws.

The committee on uniform laws, which treats particularly of the uniformity of negotiable instruments, has succeeded in passing this law in thirty-six states or jurisdictions.

The committee on voucher-checks, in conjunction with committees from the financial departments of railroads, and a committee from the American Association of Public Accountants, have devised a number of forms of voucher checks and are now recommending same. These forms were published in our January Journal. It is hoped that this movement will largely reduce the use of the forms of voucher checks, now in circulation, many of which are not negotiable, are of all forms and sizes, and are a decided annoyance to the banks. That great interest is being taken in this movement is evidenced by the calls we are receiving for copies of the forms prepared, from the business as well as the financial institutions of the country. I think the overworked bank clerk who has to handle some of these vicious forms will appreciate the new departure.

The committee on credit information is working to bring about a plan whereby the bank purchasing commercial paper from commercial paper brokers can secure definite and reliable information as to the credit standing and the amount of paper issued, and offered by the commercial paper brokers for their clients.

One of two important innovations during the past year is the publication of a monthly journal. This journal brings to the members association news, announcements, and information that we know is thoroughly appreciated.

The second innovation is the establishment of a legal department which is presided over by Mr. Thomas B. Paton. General Counsel Paton gives his entire time to this work, is always available to the various sections and committees, and his department is ready at all times to answer inquiries from our members regarding banking laws in various states, and other questions of law between banks, or between a bank and its customer. The membership is taking full advantage and showing their appreciation of this department.

Thus, briefly, I have outlined the scope of our association's work without going into the lesser details of office work, systems and methods, the enormous correspondence with our large membership, the distribution of banking and currency literature, and the furnishing of information to banks, which comprises in its field from the genealogy of bankers who died seventy-five years ago, to the complicated questions as to the banking systems of the world.

We are now maintaining at our offices a commodious library and reading room for the benefit of our members when they come to New York City where they can have the service of our stenographers, and telephones while in the city; keep appointments with their friends if they desire, and have their mail and telegrams sent in our care. We extend to our members, and I extend personally to the non-members present, a cordial invitation to call.

Our paid membership has just now reached over 10,000. As an evidence of the loyalty of our membership, our delinquent list is only about two and one-half per cent of this number, or 250 banks which have not paid their dues.

Scranton Chapter

The Scranton Chapter of the American Institute of Banking, at its regular meeting, elected officers and indulged in the usual debate on the vital banking subject, "Resolved, That small depositors are more acceptable than large depositors." After a general debate, the affirmative was declared winner. E. H. Houser led for the victorious side and Alfred Hunt for the negative.

The officers elected were: President, L. A. Howell; vice-president, G. D. D. Gladding; secretary, E. R. Kreitner; treasurer, E. H. Houser; delegates to the national convention to be held at Seattle, L. A. Howell, C. H. Ross, N. F. Swisher, J. Benfield, of Pittston; E. F. Price. George C. Nye and W. B. Kramer were active in supporting Mr. Howell for the presidency.

Boston Chapter

The Boston Chapter of the American Institute of Banking held its opening meeting last Thursday in Faneuil Hall, with a most interesting program. Fred I. Kent, vice-president of the Bankers Trust Company of New York, spoke on "Man's Business in Life," and addresses were made by Rev. O. P. Gifford, D. D., of the Baptist Church in Brookline; Francis B. Sears, vice-president of the National Shawmut Bank; George E. Allen, educational director of the American Institute of Banking, New York; Frederick Cate, president of the Boston Bank Officers' Association; A. E. Havens, of Providence, a member of the executive council, A. I. B., and W. S. Meader, president of the Providence Chapter, A. I. B. An invitation to attend was accepted by members of the Boston Bank Presidents Association, the Boston Cashiers Association, and the Boston Bank Officers Association.

Homer Alberts will give an hour's talk on commercial law to the members of the Boston Chapter at the clearing house on the afternoon of May 6th. Charles P. Blinn, Jr., vice-president of the National Union Bank, will lecture on May 11th at the same place on "Bank Detail."

Diamond National Won

In the indoor athletic meet of the Pittsburgh Athletic Association at Duquesne Garden, seven teams representing banks and banking associations were entered, the race being won by the team of the Diamond National Bank, which was trained by Cashier L. E. Husemen, of the Diamond Savings Bank, formerly a runner of much speed and experience.

Pittsburgh Chapter

The Pittsburgh Chapter, American Institute of Bank Clerks, gave a fine minstrel show in Syria Temple, Thursday evening, April 22d, before a large audience. The program included a pleasing playlet "Perhaps," into which was introduced the minstrel. Singing, dancing, athletic stunts, speech-making, scenes from college and club life, were features. An exhibition of physical strength by Thomas and Hanzel, athletes, made a hit. After the minstrel program dancing held sway until one o'clock.

The performance was enlivened by jokes on city officials and politicians. E. S. Eggers, as the German senator, wanted to know "if the hump is removed how politicians will be induced to work on the level." J. S. M. Phillips and P. V. MacKinnie, in Scotch Highlander make-up, scored in singing and dancing.

The Pittsburgh Chapter has more than 800 members and desires to obtain the next national convention, so the proceeds of the minstrel show will be used as a convention fund to defray the incidental expenses. The officers of the Pittsburgh Chapter are: Fred T. Loeffler, president; E. B. Coll, secretary, and A. G. Wells, treasurer.

Tacoma Chapter

The Tacoma chapter of the institute held its monthly meeting on the evening of April 12th in the institute rooms in the National Bank of Commerce Building.

The following officers were named for the coming year: C. A. Brower, president; M. H. Janes, vice-president; Virgil W. Fell, secretary, and R. Jennings, treasurer.

The board of governors includes R. Jennings, C. A. Brower, Virgil W. Fell, Earl C. Robbins, Ernest C. Johnson, and M. H. Janes.

Attorney Charles E. George was present and gave an interesting address on the "Relations of Banks and State Legislatures."

Following a short talk by the newly-elected president, C. A. Brower, who is assistant cashier of the National Bank of Commerce, a bountiful dinner was served in the lunch rooms of the National Bank of Commerce.

Tacoma Chapter greatly regretted losing Mr. Johnson as president, but in Mr. Brower all are confident we have a man who will carry on the good work started by Mr. Johnson in a manner highly satisfactory to all.

All branches of the work are going on in a manner most encouraging, owing to the work of the officials of the chapter, its members, and the hearty support received from the banks.

Cincinnati Chapter

The Cincinnati Chapter of the American Institute of Banking entertained a large delegation from the Indianapolis Chapter last Saturday evening at a dinner at the Business Men's Club. The dinner took place early, and was followed by a debate between representatives of the chapters on the Central Bank idea. The Cincinnati men took the negative in the debate and opposed the establishment of a central bank with all their forensic power. Orville Littell, the president of the chapter, presided. The Cincinnati debaters were H. J. Mergler, William Beiser, and D. J. Lyons, all of whom are experienced debaters. The judges were D. Fitton, president of the First National Bank of Hamilton, O.; W. O. Barnitz, of Oglesby & Barnitz Company, of Middletown, and a representative banker from Indiana. The Indiana delegation remained over Sunday, and the Cincinnati Chapter elaborately entertained the visitors. The dinner and debate was presided over by ladies, and a number of the Indianapolis party were accompanied by their wives.

Chicago Chapter

At the regular meeting of the Chicago Chapter held Wednesday night, April 28th, Prof. J. T. Goode of the Chicago University gave a very interesting stereopticon lecture on "Chicago, City of Destiny." A short business meeting followed at which the following nominations for office were made. President, L. B. Brady, Sub-Treasurer, vice-president, R. Wheeler, Continental National; Finance secretary, R. R. Olson, Merchants Loan and Trust Company; corresponding secretary, F. Rowe, Live Stock Exchange, National treasurer, J. F. Yocum, Bankers National; Executive Committee, R. I. Simons, Merchants Loan and Trust Company, L. A. King, National City Bank.

The Auditor's Value to Both Bank and Borrower

By Walter Muchlow, C. P. A.

Those who attended the Florida Bankers convention last week had a treat in the fine paper by Walter Muchlow, C. P. A. of Jacksonville. Early in his paper, which covered all features of accountancy, Mr. Muchlow put himself at ease with the bankers by remarking that "It is generally supposed that mere novelty does not commend any proposition to a banker—rather the reverse. Therefore, I wish to remind you at the outset that the accountant is no new creation, but has a very respectable ancestry." Continuing, he said in part:

It seems to me highly appropriate that bankers and accountants should together discuss those matters which they have so frequently to face together. Like all other professions, each of these callings had a humble origin. The banker was merely a money changer; the accountant was merely a scribe. It would be superfluous for me to attempt to tell you gentlemen what a banker is, or should be; it is, I think, worth while to describe, very briefly, what an accountant, or, rather, what a certified public accountant is. In our own state he is officially described as follows:

"A public accountant is a person skilled in business and financial affairs, particularly in the accounts relating thereto; who has an office of his own and whose time, during the ordinary hours of business is not entirely under the control of any firm, person or corporation. He must have such moral standing in the community as will warrant full confidence in any statement issued by him."

It is not many years ago that, especially in the smaller cities, loans were made almost entirely upon the personal knowledge the banker had of the borrower. That day is rapidly passing, as is shown for example, by the fact that so many bankers associations have adopted standard forms to be filled in by their customers who desire credit. The day is not far distant when all bankers will insist that each statement be certified by an independent accountant; such a recommendation has, I understand, been made by the New York Bankers Association.

Now as to use of the C. P. A. to the banker; this, again is twofold: first, in connection with the banker's customers; secondly, in connection with the banker's own bank. It should be remembered that the banker needs customers' statements for two distinct purposes. They are required not only to indicate the amount of credit to be extended by the bank, but they are frequently required as a basis for arranging loans or advances to be made by others on the recommendation of the banker.

In the matter of insisting that a customer consult an accountant, the American banker is somewhat at a disadvantage as compared with bankers in those countries where some such examination is compulsory. You know, far better than I, how often there are presented to you statements which are inaccurate or which represent merely guesswork, and which are prepared by irresponsible men—to say nothing of those which are intentionally misleading. There is also another source of difficulty which is increasing each year: instead of, as was formerly the general practice, confining his business to one bank, the business man now borrows from several banks and not infrequently goes outside his own city in order to obtain a larger, or a cheaper, line of credit. Notwithstanding this, a banker feels unable to insist upon a certification of statements submitted, for fear such action will drive the customer to some more lenient institution.

There have grown up in the commercial world a large number of corporations which are formed simply and solely with the object of restricting, or avoiding, personal liability on the part of the investors; perhaps the most striking examples of this are found in what are known as the "one man" company and the close corporation. The people of the state having given the business man an opportunity to conduct his business without involving his personal credit, the same people may claim that, in return, the state—in this case, the public—is entitled to some protection in return and may insist upon a regular publication of the statements, by (or a regular audit conducted by) an independent accountant, for by such statements the public may inform itself as to the credit to which any enterprise is entitled. While it is true that our own statutes provide for the filing of annual statements with the comptroller of the state, it is equally true that the law appears to be more honored in breach than in an observance of it. My own impression is that public feeling is almost ripe here for the passage and enforcing of a law similar to that in force in England.

In this country there is one argument which could be used against such an act, for it might be urged that any such action on the part of one state would tend to drive business enterprises across its borders and into other states. The value of such an argument is a matter for discussion; it is not dissimilar to the argument already mentioned in the case of the individual banker demanding such statements from a customer. The difficulty in each case, however, is bound to disappear as soon as the demand is general.

Now as to the use of the C. P. A. to the banker himself. I take it for granted that every banker would vastly prefer to have the statement of every customer which is submitted to him, certified to in the matter we have been considering. If a banker advise a customer accordingly, would it not be perfectly logical for that customer to ask if the banker's own bank were audited? If the reply were in the negative, would not that customer be, to some extent, justified in quoting sundry homely proverbs regarding geese and ganders, glass houses, or motes and beams? The banker is regarded, in many ways, as a standing example to the business world. As a matter of example, then, is it not worth while to consider the question of bank auditing? Again, in each one of a large number of banks throughout the country there is one man who is responsible for the details of the bank work—not infrequently he is also responsible for the bank's discounts, for "discount committees" are only too likely to become lax after a few years of successful and smooth running business. Very often this man who really conducts the bank, is not one of the largest stockholders. Is it not worth a good deal to relieve him of the responsibility of saying that all he has done is right? Both he and his associates are, as a rule, better satisfied.

Still again, nearly every bank indulges in some form of advertising—by letter, by newspaper, by pamphlet, by burglar alarm system, and what not. Is it not a fact that a widely spread statement to the effect that a bank is audited regularly by an independent accountant is one of the best pieces of advertising possible and one which will tend to greatly strengthen the confidence of the public?

You may, of course, say that you are examined regularly by a national or state bank examiner; but, gentlemen, there is all the difference in the world between an examination and an audit.

More than one national bank examiner has expressed to me the wish that all his banks were audited and I have reason to believe that our state bank examiner would advise every bank in his care to be audited.

The chief purpose of the bank examiner is to see that the securities claimed are actually there. You are all aware that it is often a physical impossibility for a bank examiner to visit every bank in his district, even annually, and his visits are of such short duration that he is entirely precluded from entering into much detail.

A bank auditor, on the other hand, does go into the details; he sees that the daily work of the bank has been properly done; that errors have not been slurred over or hidden—in fact he brings to light any irregularities which may exist or may have existed.

The very nature of bank work often necessitates a certain hurry at the close of a day's business and this compels some haste and tends to carelessness which, sooner or later, generally means loss and which often is to be discovered through inaccuracies in some of the accounts other than those of depositors; for example, the audit of a bank's accounts with its correspondents as a rule shows very clearly the quality of work which has prevailed.

In all businesses, and especially in a bank, the moral effect arising from the knowledge that definite audits will be held is beneficial. It is only natural that work is better done when it is known that any shortcomings are likely to be brought to light in the future.

In a large number of the smaller banks throughout the country the capital is found by men of means who may, or may not, know something of the details of banking, and who engage a cashier who has practical charge of the business. There may be a discount committee, but the members find it difficult to meet regularly; business prospers, and the committee sinks into innocuous desuetude. After a time, some question crops up—the failure of a borrower, for example—which leads to difference of opinion, which in its turn leads to friction, which in the case of a bank is not unlikely to lead to suspicion of the motives which caused the action in dispute or, sometimes, even to suspicions as to the integrity of those concerned. Such a condition is sure to militate against the success of the bank and if in the case of nations the surest way to ensure peace is to prepare for war, so in banks the surest way to ensure prolonged confidence is to take steps guarding against any abuse of the confidence which exists. Few things are more sensitive to apparently slight causes than is the credit of a bank in the minds of its depositors and it is evident that such confidence cannot be sustained unless the officers of the institution have perfect confidence in each other.

I believe that it is the universal experience that a competent audit of a bank gives satisfaction to the stockholders, the depositors and to the officers themselves.

Even in banks where there is not the slightest suspicion of anything in the nature of dishonesty; it is surprising how often the force of old custom leads to a misstatement of facts which is unintentional. The discount register may reveal that certain associates have been allowed a greater credit than was realized, various names being used in the making of the notes. Overdrafts may not appear on the face of statements, as they are included in a total balance from some sub-ledger for inactive or unimportant accounts.

There is one phase of bank accounting which is unpleasant and on which we need not dwell—that is dishonesty leading to defalcations.

Of such cases we have had but few in our own state; but each one of those of which I have heard could not have occurred—or the loss, rather could not have grown to the dimensions which were reached—if regular audits had been made. In at least two causes, the accounts with corresponding banks showed at once and conclusively that the books did not represent the truth.

There is one other feature in the work of the public accountant which affects the banker and the business man equally and to which I invite your attention for a short time—it may be summed up in one word "Insurance."

It is, I suppose, safe to assume that we all believe in and that we all carry insurance in some form. It may be life, health, accident, tornado, or burglar insurance, or it may be in the form of fidelity bonds.

To obtain any tangible benefit from these, however, we must suffer and prove a loss. The regular auditing of books of account forms in itself an insurance against misstatements, errors, carelessness and fraud. The knowledge that such an audit will be made has its moral effect, as I have already said.

It is a common mistake to postpone the engagement of an accountant until a crisis is reached and, only too often, nothing can be done but to indicate the mistakes which may have been made and to show what those mistakes have cost. Just as surely as it is possible to minimize the chance of litigation by having agreements properly drawn by an attorney; just as surely as we may reduce the likelihood of illness by following the advice of a physician—so surely may the probability of failure be lessened by adopting and maintaining a proper system of accounting.

Kansas Bankers

Secretary W. W. Bowman, of the Kansas Bankers Association, has prepared an attractive program for the 22d annual convention of his association, which is to meet at Wichita May 26th and 27th. The first day's session is called for 10 o'clock in the morning at the Conistory, and after the usual preliminaries and welcoming addresses, L. S. Cambern, of Erie, will respond for the association. President W. M. Peck, of Concordia, in his annual address will review the "Messages of the Presidents" of his association from 1887 to 1900. In conjunction with this he will review banking progress and accomplishments within the state during his administration. The usual committee reports along with those of the officer will complete the forenoon session. In the afternoon of Wednesday there will be a general talk fast, participated in by all the bankers who wish to say anything concerning the general situation of banking. Commissioner J. N. Dolley will read a paper on the new banking law as adopted in Kansas. Next will come Lucius Teter, of Chicago, on his favorite "The Postal Saving Bank Situation." Mr. Teter has been down on practically all programs published thus far this year, and he has a message which the bankers are mighty glad to hear.

Kansas has a well developed group system and will give a large part of Wednesday afternoon session to the reports of the chairman and the various committees on group government.

In a separate meeting place on Wednesday afternoon the ladies will hold a convention on social lines, the program of which has not been announced. The principal session on Wednesday will be held at 6:30 p. m., and will take the form of a banquet to the visiting bankers tendered by the Wichita Clearing House Association.

On Thursday morning Judge S. E. Lobdell will speak on "The Banker and Public Sentiment," after which there will be a general discussion of legal questions led by C. C. Scoville, of Seneca. This is the session which everybody is invited to unburden himself of whatever may be depressing his spirit. The session will close with a report of the insurance committee. The closing session of Thursday will be given up largely to a paper on "Currency," by Arthur Reynolds of Des Moines, chairman of the federal legislative committee, of the American Bankers Association and member of the currency commission. At this meeting Cashier James T. Bradley, of the National Bank of Commerce, Kansas City, will discuss the duties of directors in banks. Having been the national bank examiner for a number of years, Mr. Bradley will have an interesting paper. This will close the convention.

Jared Irwin is the president and J. C. McClune, cashier of the new Farmers Savings Bank at Keswick, Ia. The capital of the institution is $20,000.

First National Bank

The First National Bank building at Seventeenth and Stout streets, the first building in Denver, Colo., to go above the old-time building limit, will be begun not later than the last week in May.

This was decided last night at a meeting of the officers of the First National Bank, which is to occupy the ground floor and basement of the new building, and the Puget Sound Realty Company, which is to construct it.

At the meeting the bank secured a twenty-five year lease on the quarters it is to occupy and purchased $200,000 of the bonds of the Puget Sound Company. The proceeds of the sale of $250,000 bonds were deposited with the International Trust Company as trustee, to be held for the Stratton estate, which owns the site, and which has given a ninety-nine year lease to the Puget Sound Company.

It is expected that the building will be ready for occupancy not later than June, 1910.

Gives Annual Dinner

President Robert C. Pruyn of the National Commercial Bank of Albany gave his annual dinner to the officers and directors of the bank on Saturday evening, April 17th, at his residence on Englewood Place. The dinner is one of the notable events of the year in Albany banking circles, and all the directors were present except Vice-President John E. Walker, who is away, and George H. Thacher, who is in mourning. President Charles H. Sabin, who is rapidly forging to the front with the National Copper Bank in New York City, came up for the dinner with Director Anthony N. Brady and Director Robert L. Fryer, prominent in banking lines in Buffalo, also was present. It was the understanding that the only outside invitation to the dinner went to Vice-President Thomas I. Van Antwerp, of the Union Trust Company, who for many years was connected directly with the National Commercial.

Big Bank Merger

The Bowling Green Trust Company of New York, which has been closely identified with the Gould interests, Edwin Gould being president, is to be merged with the Equitable Trust Company. The directors of both institutions have ratified the agreement of merger, and it has been approved by the state superintendent of banks, Clark Williams. The stock of the Bowling Green Company is to be liquidated at about 410, and no change will be made in the present capital of $3,000,000 of the Equitable Trust Company.

Doubles Its Capital

The Jefferson County Savings Bank of Birmingham, Ala., has increased capital from $100,000 to $200,000.

American Exchange National of Duluth

The American Exchange Bank has been converted to a national bank, with the title American Exchange National Bank of Duluth. It began operating as a national bank on Monday, April 5th.

The American Exchange was organized as a state bank in 1879, and it is one of the comparatively few banks that can show an unbroken record of dividend paying since that date. It is recognized as one of the stable and reliable banks of the Northwest.

Since the conversion of the Security Bank of Minnesota, Minneapolis, into a national bank, the American Exchange has been the largest state bank in Minnesota. Its capital was $500,000; surplus (earned), $900,000, and deposits, $6,500,000. H. M. Peyton has been president of the bank since its organization. The directorate includes representatives of many of the most important business corporations of Duluth as follows: T. F. Colle, Chester A. Congdon, G. A. Tomlinson, W. C. Agnew, C. A. Duncan, S. G. Knox, Kenneth Clark, H. M. Peyton, A. H. Crassweller, and W. G. Hegardt.

The officers of the American Exchange National Bank are: Hamilton M. Peyton, president; Chester A. Congdon, vice president; William G. Hegardt, cashier; Isaac A. Moore, assistant cashier, and Colin Thompson, second assistant cashier.

St. Louis

Southwest Banking

Kansas City

The house passed, without a dissenting vote, the Missouri Bankers Association bill, giving the bank commissioner increased powers in dealing with state banks. The same bill was introduced in both houses. In the senate Lane attached his bank guaranty bill to it on engrossment. Ever since the change was made the senate seems to have forgotten the bill.

Friends of the bank bill in the house were afraid to call it up for passage for fear a bank guaranty clause might be attached, or, at least, because a fight might be started on the bill because it lacked a bank guaranty section.

Last Friday, however, they decided that it was time the measure should be disposed of, and called the measure for passage. There was some surprise when nobody mentioned bank guaranty and the bill passed the house without discussion. The senate is more likely to pass the house bill than its own.

W. L. Buechle Resigns

William L. Buechle, one of the two national bank examiners in Missouri, has resigned to accept the vice-presidency of the National Bank of Commerce in Kansas City, Mo., following the election of J. W. Perry, of St. Louis, to the presidency. George T. Cutts, a national bank examiner, will be assigned to Mr. Buechle's territory. Mr. Buechle has already gone to Kansas City and taken up his work there.

Hunt for Fakers

J. N. Dolley, state bank commissioner of Kansas, is hunting for some men who he believes are doing some bank speculation in Kansas. According to information he has received the promoters have organized a bank in Enterprise and another in Anthony, under the representation that Senator John Overfield and Dr. A. E. Litchfield, of Independence, would make heavy investments in the bank's stock. The promoters promised to sell the stock they took as promoters to local capitalists after the bank was in good working order, and at that time, they said, Senator Overfield and Dr. Litchfield would make their investments.

The banks were organized, and when about ready to begin business the promoters appeared very anxious that the bank furniture and fixtures should be purchased from a certain firm. In both instances this was done, and the fixtures were very expensive sets. The local capitalists took over the stock of the promoters and the promoters disappeared. When the local men asked the Independence men how much stock they wanted it was found that Senator Overfield and Dr. Litchfield were not buying bank stock, or making investments at this time, and had not authorized the use of their names.

E. Snowden in the South

Eugene Snowden, Southern representative of the National Bank of Commerce of St. Louis, is in Louisiana in the interests of his institution. He will attend the annual conventions of the Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana Bankers Associations.

Resigns from Commerce Trust Company

Dr. W. S. Woods has followed his retirement from the National Bank of Commerce by resigning as president of the Commerce Trust Company. W. T. Kemper, who retired yesterday as vice-president of the Bank of Commerce, has been elected to the presidency of the trust company. The position of vice-president of the trust company vacated by the promotion of Mr. Kemper to the presidency, will not be filled for the present. Dr. Woods is the largest individual stockholder in the trust company.

"I have sold all my stock in the Bank of Commerce, but have not sold any of my holdings in the trust company and do not intend to do so," Dr. Woods said.

J. W. Perry, the new president of the Bank of Commerce, announced to-day that there would be no further changes in the officers or directors of the bank. D. T. Beals, the retiring president, may succeed Dr. Woods as chairman of the board of directors, which is the only vacancy in the list of officers.

New Law for South Dakota

Various state banking laws have undergone readjustment since the financial troubles of 1907, the movement for reform having been stimulated by the aggressive course followed by Clark Williams, New York State Superintendent of Banking.

On July 1st next, South Dakota banks will come under a new law which creates a state banking department under a public examiner and includes trust companies as well as banks.

Port Lavaca State Bank and Trust Company

Is the name of the new bank organized at Port Lavaca through the instrumentality of J. I. Cochran, for many years connected with the First National Bank at Meridian. Its capital stock is $50,000, and the following comprise the board of directors: W. R. Sells, C. T. Traylor, John B. and M. S. Mahon, A. J. Hoover, C. J. Spittal, and J. I. Cochran. The executive officers are: M. S. Mahon, president; C. T. Traylor, vice-president, and J. I. Cochran, cashier. The institution has a large list of stockholders, and as the management enjoys the confidence of the local and surrounding communities, it has bright prospects.

Atlas State Bank

Articles of incorporation have been filed for a new bank at Witten (S. D.), in Tripp County. The new institution will bear the name of the Atlas State Bank.

The organizers are: Fred and Charles Worcester, who recently came to South Dakota from Ireton, Ia., and H. F. Slaughter, of Gregory, this state. The bank begins business with a capital of $5,000.

Capital Stock Increased

The capital stock of the Boise City (Ida.) National Bank has been increased $150,000, or from $100,000 to $250,000, the increase being authorized by the Comptroller on Tuesday of this week.

By this move the officers and directors of the bank leave a surplus of $125,000 and undivided profits of $35,000. The increase had been contemplated for some time and met with the hearty approval of the officers who are: Frank R. Coffin, president; Timothy Regan, vice-president; J. E. Clinton, Jr., cashier; Fred Brown, and B. W. Walker, assistant cashiers. The personnel of the directors is as follows: Frank R. Coffin, J. E. Clinton, Jr., Timothy Regan, H. B. Eastman, Edgar Wilson, and Leo J. Falk.

The reason given out by the bank officials for this marked increase in the capital stock is that the business of the big banking institution has grown ever since it was established in Boise very rapidly. The deposits are over $2,000,000 and the increase in capital was necessary to handle the additional business, it being the policy of the bankers to provide every safety for its depositors, and to assure them and the business world that it has every confidence in Boise and its prospects to become a bigger and wealthier city in future years.

No change has been made in the personnel of the officers or directors.

Bank Changes Owners

The firm of Johnson Bros. and their associates have disposed of the stock of the Lakeside State Bank at Lake Andes (S. D.) to John Absher, of Wagner, and Albert Amundson, of Lake Andes, and the latter parties will take possession of the bank immediately. The Lakeside State Bank is one of the strong financial institutions of Charles Mix County, having a capital of $15,000 and deposits of about $135,000.

Guaranty Bill Killed

Action of the Texas house of representatives last week in postponing the McDonald-Self Bank guaranty bill until Friday, May 2d, means the death of that measure. This measure is practically the same as the Senter-Hume substitute and provides for a bonding system, or acceptable security instead of the deposit guaranty as provided for in the Cureton bill.

Will Erect New Building

C. Harvey Smith has completed the plans for a new building which will be erected at the corner of Shoshone Street and Main Avenue by the Twin Falls Bank and Trust Company of Twin Falls, Idaho. It will be two stories in height, have a frontage on Main Avenue of 50 feet, and a depth of 125 feet.

Board of Trade Elects Officers

Pine Bluff's (Ark.) Board of Trade has elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, V. O. Alexander; vice-president, J. T. Lloyd; treasurer, E. C. Howell, secretary, J. L. Caldwell. The directors comprise the above officers and P. P. Byrd, Walter N. Trulock, S. C. Alexander, A. D. Hearn, F. L. Dilley, John B. Speers, J. E. Boyce, Z. Orto, Fred Fox, W. H. Westbrook, D. M. Bluthenthal, J. H. Mann, John F. Rutherford, J. B. Talbot, Charles Weil, J. W. Wilkins, and F. L. Clark.

A New State Bank

A new state bank at Toyag, Tex., has opened temporary quarters in office of Reeves County Mercantile Company, where business will be conducted until a new bank building is completed.

Kansas Guaranty July 1st

Under a ruling of Fred S. Jackson, attorney-general, the state banks of Kansas can take all of the preliminary steps necessary to become guaranteed state banks before the guaranty law goes into effect July 1st. By doing this it will be possible for all of the banks to be ready for examination July 1st, and the guaranty association will be in working order at once.

The Kansas bank depositor guaranty law does not become effective until July 1st. The law not being in effect until that time, there was a question of whether or not a bank could go ahead with preparation for the guaranty and then receive its certificate as soon as the law became effective. Some of the banks asked the attorney-general for a ruling on this proposition.

In order to take advantage of the guaranty law the stockholders of a bank must authorize the directors to call a meeting of stockholders for the special purpose of considering the guaranty plan. At this meeting the stockholders are to adopt resolutions declaring that the bank wishes to become a guaranteed bank, and authorizing the directors and officers to fill out the applications, ask for an examination, and purchase the bonds necessary. The bonds are to be deposited with the state treasury with cash amounting to one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the deposits in the bank.

Owing to the legal requirements of meetings it would require a month for a bank to make all of these preliminary arrangements. After the documents are all on file the bank is examined and if found to be in satisfactory condition a certificate is issued.

Declare Dividend

The board of directors of the Pingree National Bank of Ogden, Utah, has declared a quarterly dividend to the stockholders of 3 per cent.

Plan New Building

The Citizens Bank of Pine Bluff (Ark.) has just let a contract to architects in Cincinnati and Louisville for the drawing of plans for a six-story office building at Second Avenue and Pine Street, to cost, approximately, $175,000. It will be Pine Bluff's first sky scraper.

Elect Officers

The new Citizens Bank, Monette, Ark., has elected the following officers: R. E. Lee, president; J. D. Wallace, vice-president, and W. E. Johnson, cashier. The capital stock of the institution is $25,000.

Organize New Bank

A new bank has been organized at Chideste Ark., with a capital of $10,000. J. S. Phae will be president; W. A. Purifoy, vice-president, and W. G. Rushing, cashier.

Farmers State Bank of Capron

A. J. Sands has been elected president; C. Green, vice-president, and W. W. Morris, cashier, of the new Farmers State Bank of Capron, Okla. The capital of the institution is $10,000.

Caveat Emptor

The old-time business rule was "Let the buyer beware." That meant that if you bought goods which did not come up to the seller's representations and your expectations, the fault was yours and you had no redress.

Some concerns still do business on the basis of "Let the buyer beware." But we don't. We want the confidence, respect and life-long patronage of every Winton buyer. That's why we give every prospective patron the fullest opportunity to investigate and try out the self-starting, sweet-running and cheerfully help him to select a car best suited to his individual needs.

Also that's why we make Winton Sixes so good that the buyer gets more in a Winton Six than in any other car on the market. By giving more, we reduce our profit, to be sure, but it pays us in the end. Because when each buyer gets his car and finds how splendidly it performs beyond his expectations, he becomes at once an enthusiast, tells his friends, arouses their interest in the Winton, and helps us increase our business.

That's a highly satisfactory way to do business, and it is one reason why we can go home o' nights with clear consciences. You will like the way we do business, and you will love the Winton Six. When may we have the opportunity of showing you the best car of the year?

Louis Schreiber

The purchase of the entire banking business of the German National by the Old National of Oshkosh, Wis., was the banking event of the week. It was a complete absorption, even to the employees. All will be taken care of as the officials of the Old National say, is but just. Concerning the transfer we quote Louis Schreiber, cashier and executive officer of the consolidated institution. Mr. Schreiber said: "The transfer to us of the business of the German National Bank was an out and out sale, by accepting a liberal offer which we were obliged to make to acquire the additional business. The stockholders at their meeting discussed the offer, as well as the feasibility or reorganizing in the fall when the charter of the bank will expire. It was deemed advisable to accept our offer, not because of any weakness of the bank, for if that had been the condition, we would not have desired to acquire it.

"The uniting of the interests of the two institutions by sale, is in keeping with the tendency in other cities. The city of Oshkosh, with a population of only 35,000 has had seven banks and a trust company, which is too large a number for the size of the place. In LaCrosse, Eau Claire, and Racine, similar steps have been taken until in each of those places there are now only three banks. In the city of Grand Rapids, Mich., with 100,000 inhabitants, there are only ten banks and a trust company.

"The banks here have all been on a sound financial basis, but like any other, it is a business which can be too much split up and that has been the condition here. By the purchase of the German National Bank, we will increase our deposits from over $2,000,000 to about $2,500,000, and reduce the number of banks from seven to six.

The Old National Bank is the oldest in the city. It was organized in 1852, nearly sixty years ago, and its resources as shown by the February statement, were $2,587,392.81, with a surplus of $100,000 and undivided profits of $80,992.96. Its officers are: President, E. P. Sawyer; vice-president, Charles Schreiber; cashier, Louis Schreiber; assistant cashier, P. P. Fitch.

Iowa Group Meeting

Group Four of the Iowa Bankers Association will hold its next meeting at Decorah, Iowa, on Thursday, May 6th. D. B. Allen of Arlington, Iowa, is chairman of the group.

J. D. Johnson Dead

James D. Johnson, president of the Kokomo Trust Company, and executive officer of the trust section of the Indiana Bankers Association, died at his home in Kokomo, Ind., last week.

Mr. Johnson for a score and more of years had been a leader in business circles at Kokomo, and throughout the state he was known and respected as an able, upright business man and citizen. He organized the trust company of which he was president and managed it to great success. He was public-spirited, broad-minded, liberal, and capable.

The executive council of the Indiana Bankers Association met at the Commercial Club, Indianapolis, Thursday, and passed appropriate resolutions on the death of President J. D. Johnson, of Kokomo. Ross Wallace, Frank Martin, and J. A. Dellority were appointed a committee to attend the funeral.

South Dakota Group Meeting

The first annual meeting of Group Eight, of the South Dakota Bankers Association, closed at Huron, last week. The counties comprising the group are: Spink, Beadle, Kingsbury, and Miner, in which are located 63 banks, 52 being members of the association. The convention opened with invocation by L. K. Smith, rector of Grace Episcopal Church, followed with an address of welcome by J. W. Campbell, president of the group, to which W. T. McConnell of the Western National Bank, of Mitchell, responded, after which George C. Fullinweider, secretary, submitted his report. At the different sessions a number of addresses were delivered, and matters pertaining to banking interests were discussed, the proceedings being interspersed with numbers by the male quartet, composed of Messrs. I. A. Churchill, N. E. Walton, W. F. Long, and J. C. Dexter. The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year:

J. W. Campbell, of Huron, president; H. I. Ilston, of Lake Preston, vice-president; Geo. C. Fullinweider, of Huron, secretary, and R. F. Chenoweth, of Wolsey, J. A. Crane, of Redfield, E. O. Bratund of Roswell, and U. W. Ellis, of Iroquois, as the executive committee. In the evening, a special supper was served at the Hotel Royal, followed with an informal social and smoker. About 40 bankers were present from out of the city. Huron was named as the place for holding the next meeting.

Other Iowans

Editor THE CHICAGO BANKER: In your April number, I notice an item headed "How about C. B. Mills?" It appears he and Mr. Isbell are thought to be the only bankers in Iowa who can successfully manipulate a telegraph instrument. I wish to say right here, that the two above named gentlemen are not the only lightning jerkers on earth holding responsible bank positions, and to prove my statement will give you the names of five different operators who resigned good telegraph stations to go into the banking business, and they are all located on the C. R. I. & P. Ry., on a straight line of less than 75 miles length. They are M. J. Johnson, assistant cashier Forest City National, Forest City, Iowa, myself, cashier Crystal Lake Savings Bank, Crystal Lake, Iowa, A. T. Wherry, cashier First National, Swea City, Iowa, E. F. Knowles, assistant cashier Emmet County Bank, Armstrong, Iowa, and E. E. Hartung, vice-president Iowa Savings Bank, Estherville, Iowa.

Now if this list don't satisfy the brothers, I can dig them up a few more operators, that can put either one of them under the desk.

Yours very truly,

L. M. BICKAL, Cashier.

In and Around Pittsburgh

By
LATIMER T. LAWTON

Immediately upon securing the contract for the construction of the Second National Bank's new building, at Liberty Avenue and Ninth Street, the Thompson-Starrett Company of New York began yesterday to dismantle the old building, which was vacated by the bank several days ago. The wrecking of the interior of the building will be completed next week, and the work of razing the old structure will begin May 1st.

The plans are in the hands of Alden & Harlow, architects, and call for a ten-story structure fronting 36 2-3 feet on Liberty Avenue and running back 110 feet along Ninth Street to Exchange Alley. The first, second, and third floors will be occupied by the bank, and the other floors will contain offices. The bank officials expect to be in their new home by the first of next year.

Bankers Advertising Association

The Bankers Advertising Association of Pittsburgh is scheduled to meet at an informal dinner at the Fort Pitt Hotel on the evening of May 4th to discuss the following questions: (1) How much can a bank profitably spend for advertising per thousand dollars of new business received, indirect benefits being duly considered? (A) On savings accounts. (B) On checking accounts. (2) Are small bank accounts, the kind usually obtained from advertising, valuable? The association is now in its third year and has a membership of 42 banks in Allegheny County. The officers recently elected to serve for the ensuing year are: President, E. B. Des Moines, May 1.—Des Moines bankers are having many interesting discussions as to whether or not it is desirable and practical to so consolidate the city's institutions as to reduce the number to about half of the nineteen institutions of which the city boasts. Bankers say this is a larger number of banks than any other city of 100,000 and in the main they agree that it would be better for everybody concerned if there were about half this number. Bankers are seriously discussing the question but no one has suggested a method of consolidation.

"The plan is impractical for the very good reason that when it comes to eliminating the surplus banks, no one will want to be eliminated," said president Arthur Reynolds of the Des Moines National in talking over the proposition.

Bankers believe that Des Moines is not accorded the rank as a financial center to which it is entitled because the banks are not sufficiently solidified. The city has $3,000,000 bank capitalization. These are all substantial and prosperous but if the city had a half dozen big banks, bankers believe that Des Moines would be accorded a higher place than it now occupies among financiers. Something may come of the discussion though along what line, it is difficult to see.

Many Deaths among Bankers

The state has witnessed more than an ordinary number of deaths among those prominent in Iowa bank circles the past few days. John McDaniels for years president and leading stockholder of the Atlantic National at Atlantic is dead at the home of a daughter in Exira at the age of 94. S. B. Zeigler, president of the Fayette County National at West Union is dead at his home there at the age of 78. Mr. Ziegler was a leading Iowa banker and was consul at Aix La Chapelle under the administration of President Benjamin Harrison. L. L. Estes, president of the First National died at Webster City of prostatic troubles at the age of 77. He was one of the famous Spirit Lake Indian relief expedition in the late 40's, had resided in Webster City fifty-one years, and was an Iowa banking pioneer.

Visits Des Moines

David H. Moffatt, president of the First National of Denver and a wealthy western railroad magnate visited Des Moines last week and looked upon the streets which he traversed years ago as a messenger boy. He was a guest of his sister, Mrs. J. H. Strong who resides at 828 West Seventeenth Street, this city. President Moffatt first carried messages for the Exchange Bank of New York, back in 1854. When a boy he came to Des Moines with his parents and was a bank messenger in this city until he became clerk for A. J. Stevens & Co. in a bank owned by them. Later he went to Omaha and became cashier of a bank there which he left afterwards to engage in the banking business in Denver.

Swindled by a Telegram

A man giving the name of Clarence A. King secured $500 from the Citizens National of Des Moines upon a fake telegram from Omaha and tried to work a similar game upon other banks but failed. A telegram signed by the United States National of Omaha, supposedly, was received by the Citizens National, stating that Mr. King be paid $500 without identification. A short time afterwards, Mr. King walked into the bank, inquired about the telegram and upon being notified that it had been received collected the $500 and walked out. He tried the same game at the Des Moines National but assistant cashier C. A. Barr had telegraphed back for a verification of the Omaha telegram and had not received it when King called. King was told to call again but he scented trouble and disappeared instead. Later a telegram from Omaha showed the original telegrams were fakes. It appears that a stranger in the bank lobby at Omaha had sent the message by messenger boys to the telegraph offices and there is a prevalent belief that the bank which was buncoed may come back upon the telegraph companies.

A Bank Sued

Judge Hugh Brennan of the district courts of Des Moines has decided that the Iowa law which permits a bank to refuse payment on a check, even though there is sufficient money in the account to pay the check many times over, is unconstitutional. Accordingly the question, which has never before been raised, goes to the supreme court. Alex Buchanan & Sons of Omaha, sued the Century Savings of Des Moines for $8,000. This was the amount of checks given by L. R. Hough, now a Des Moines bankrupt, to the plaintiff. At that time, Hough had sufficient money in the bank to pay the check but the bank scented a coming bankruptcy and refused payment. The firm sued and the bank filed a motion to strike the petition on the grounds that the Iowa statute gives it the right to refuse payment on checks whenever it pleases. This statute the court declared unconstitutional and overruled the motion to strike. In making the ruling the court declared that the statute places the public at the mercy of the bankers.

Bankers Base Ball Team

Des Moines bankers are never backward in taking an active part in progressive movements. They have now formed a base ball team and have been duly enrolled as a member of the city league. The bankers who compose the team which is known as the "Bankers," is composed of the following employees of the various city banks: Pitchers, McDonald, Hughes, Gill and Rader; catchers, Roy Hazelwood and Guy Lee; first base, Blackburn; second base, Hahnen; third base, Milner; shortstop, Henney; left field, Bradley; center field, Pottman; right field, Griffin; sub fields, Chase and Hart.

Postpone Group Meeting for Ball Game

Speaking of base ball, there are no more enthusiastic fans than the bankers at Sioux City. They have postponed the meeting of Group One which was set for May 11th to May 12th, because it has been discovered that the Sioux City Western League team would not be in the city May 11th. Free admission to the big game on the afternoon of the 12th is scheduled for all who attend the meeting of Group One.

Must Renew License

Every notarial license in Iowa expires this year and Governor Carroll has sent out 7,300 notifications to that effect to the various notaries of the state. Each notary must file a bond of $500 for a three-year term. Some question has arisen as to whether the bonds of notaries given in surety companies must be approved by the county clerks. Governor Carroll holds that they need not be but that all personal bonds must be thus approved. There are few banks which do not have a notary or two on the pay roll.

Wisconsin Inter Bank and Trust Company Difficulties Adjusted

Milwaukee, April 26.—The state-wide controversy which has been going on for so many years in Wisconsin, happily has come to an end. The truce and final peace came about through joint sessions at the Pfister, in this city, between the legislative committee of the executive council of the Wisconsin Bankers Association and officers of various trust companies of the state, on bills pending at Madison.

Among the questions under discussion, bill 114S, now before the senate committee on banking, was the most important. This defines the soliciting and receiving of deposits on account as purely banking business, provides that no corporation shall do this banking business unless it is duly incorporated under this law and fixes a penalty in the form of a fine or imprisonment, or both, for a violation of its terms.

The following trust company officers were present: O. C. Fuller, Robert Camp, J. M. Pereles, L. M. Hanks of Madison, R. P. Wilcox of Ashland, C. C. Brown and Mr. Kavenaugh of Kenosha and Halle Stensland of Madison.

Of the committee of the executive council of the Wisconsin Bankers Association there were present: President E. C. Zimmerman, Wausau; G. W. Strohmeyer, Milwaukee National; A. H. Lindsay, Marine National, Milwaukee; Carl A. Rudquist, Ashland; E. A. Dow, Plymouth; H. A. Mollenpah, Clinton; W. J. Hobbins, Madison; A. N. Barney, Sparta; M. A. Graettinger, Merchants and Manufacturers' Bank, Milwaukee.

Mr. Graettinger on the Details

At the conclusion of the long drawn out session, Secretary Graettinger announced that an agreement was finally reached upon a measure which will take the place of objectionable amendments offered to bill 114S now before the senate committee. Under this agreement trust companies doing a banking business will reorganize under the state banking laws. They will thereby be legally entitled to receive time deposits but this does not include the right to solicit or accept commercial deposits nor will commercial loans be included.

"Under this agreement," said Mr. Graettinger, "the new measure will insure the payment by trust companies of taxes equal to those paid by banks. Trust companies will also be under the same restrictions and will be examined in the same manner by the bank commissioner.

"Under such a law as is proposed and agreed to by both sides, trust companies will carry 12½ per cent reserve on deposits. The minimum amount of capital required will be $50,000. Except in cities of the first class in which $100,000 will be the minimum.

"One-half of the capital but no sum exceeding $100,000 is to be deposited with the state treasurer in the form of mortgages and bonds, as securities against trust obligations.

"The money received by trust companies on time deposits and investments on account of these deposits will be held only to cover deposits. Practically speaking, money received on deposit will be held intact for depositors.

"The trust companies, under the new law, will continue to be known as trust companies and will have no right to be known as banks. The new measure will allow only national, state and mutual savings banks and trust companies to solicit, receive and accept deposits and will exclude all other corporations, associations and firms from doing any banking business.

"Some firms in the state attempting to serve as banks, although they do not call themselves such, will be prohibited under this new measure from doing a banking business.

"The prime object in coming to this agreement was to protect the banking public."

As Viewed by Oliver C. Fuller

Oliver C. Fuller, president of the Wisconsin Trust Company, and chairman of the executive committee of the trust company section of the American Bankers Association, when asked regarding the probable course of action to be taken by trust companies, should any of the various proposed bills now under consideration by the state senate committee on banking become a law, said:

"All of the details of the final bill are not yet fully worked out, and until they are, I do not like to comment upon it too freely, but I will say that if this bill becomes a law, it will undoubtedly be the most drastic trust company law in the United States, when we consider all its restrictions, impositions and limitations.

"It is unique in that it requires all money received on deposit to be separately invested and set apart for the protection of the depositors alone.

"In some of the states where trust companies accept the deposits subject to check as well as savings deposits and are permitted to lend money on commercial paper, or unsecured notes, such trust companies are required by law to invest their savings deposits in a different class of securities from their demand deposits and to keep them separate. That is very proper and I have always advocated it, but where trust companies can receive nothing but time deposits and can invest only in mortgages and secured loans, such a separation from its capital investments seems wholly useless. However, the commissioner of banking of this state seems to think that because we keep our trust funds separate, we should keep our deposits separate, so we yielded the point.

"The requirements of double liability of stockholders, and full bank taxes we did not object to seriously, but the requirement of the same percentage of reserves as that required of state banks is unnecessarily severe.

"The primary purpose of a reserve in a bank is to meet an unusual, sudden or unexpected demand of its depositors and is a wise and necessary thing for a bank, but since trust companies can have no deposits subject to demand, a large reserve is unnecessary and under our present law, none is required. However, the desire of all of us is to make the trust companies in this state as strong and as safe as it is possible to make an institution that receives deposits and manages estates, and if this bill becomes a law, that is what we will have accomplished."

The general satisfaction among banks and trust companies, that their troubles are so nearly at an end was apparent.

It is reported that I. E. Jones has retired as cashier of the Farmers Savings Bank, Oxford (Ia.), G. B. Rohret succeeding.

The Rio Grande Valley Bank and Trust Co. of El Paso, Tex., will erect a new bank building.

Outlook State Bank

Banking Notes

Work has started on a concrete building to be occupied by the First Bank of White Bluffs, Wash., which was organized recently with a capital of $10,000. The officers are L. E. Johnson, president; F. M. Weil, vice-president and W. J. Kincaid, cashier.

J. W. Anderson has succeeded D. F. Stayley as cashier of the Pullman State bank at Pullman, Wash.

A New Trust Company

A new trust company, with a capital stock of $500,000, is being organized in Houston. The entire second floor of the Scanlan building has been leased, and a large share of the stock is already subscribed. So far along has the work gone, and so rapidly have subscriptions been made, that the capital may be increased to $1,000,000. Mr. H. N. Tinker has the books in charge.

The new corporation will be known as the Bankers Company, and will be chartered under the laws of the state of Texas. Loans, real estate, rental, collection, public audit, abstract, accountant, publicity and legal departments will be maintained, but deposits will not be received.

Regarding the purposes of the corporation the following statement has been made:

In order to meet the urgent demand for a place of sufficient magnitude and strength to which application may be made for absolutely good first mortgage or vendor's lien notes; where persons seeking investments may expect to find good securities in amounts commensurate with their respective means available for employment, being a medium where the borrower and investor come together; also where reliable information concerning relative values of property may be obtained, with the view of creating closer relations with eastern and foreign connections to the end of filling a distinct need incident to the upbuilding of a country already demonstrated to be resourceful and rapidly increasing in wealth, for the enrichment of all concerned. It will not be the purpose of the company to promote speculative enterprises or to foster suburban enterprises, but to confine its business to legitimate, safe investments, and make its profits between its ability to buy and the demand from local as well as outside capitalists who want to invest.

The management will maintain at all times the highest standard of conservatism in regard to values and estimates, the main object being to build a reputation so that any one, however innocent or ignorant, with funds to invest can safely rely on this institution. Many ladies will probably desire to invest some idle funds in this way, and one particular feature of the office will be to make a ladies' department one of ease through which they may transact their business. A suite of rooms will be arranged for their convenience, which may be used in the way of small conventions or club rooms, as well as for the benefit of writing letters and talking over business affairs and investments, which will be thoroughly explained.

It is not the purpose of the company to come into competition with other financial institutions, as no funds will be received on deposit subject to check or otherwise than for investment in loans or security, and will differ from a bank in that the loans will all be secured by only a part of the actual values and will cover a longer space of time.

The men interested associate themselves together for a purpose which stands for not only the success of stockholders but others, as well as a guide to investors and the conservative element in the city and without.

The May Lippincott

"The Pomegranate Seed" is the long, completed novel in the May Lippincott's magazine. It is a clever love tale involving the heart throbs of a charming actress. The writer, Katherine Metcalf Roof, has had other successes in the literary field, but in "The Pomegranate Seed" has surpassed all previous efforts. There are the usual short stories by prominent writers, a feature which for years has kept Lippincott's a popular favorite among the fiction magazines.

A Lesson in Banking

The Japanese, as everybody knows used to despise business. They held that business meant selling something for more than it was worth—that profit meant the amount whereby the buyer had been deceived.

"We look on business more favorably now in Japan," said Jokichi Iwaya, the Japanese consul to Portland, at a recent dinner. "We now tell with scorn the money-counting story that in the past we told with approbation."

"According to this story, a banker of Yokohama took in a packet of bank notes in the presence of his son, who desired to learn the banking business. The man counted the notes in the usual way. They lay on the counter before him and he lifted them up, one by one, with moistened forefinger, murmuring, 'One, two, three,' and so on.

"But on reaching the last note the banker stopped. He didn't lift it up. Instead he tapped it with his finger, and whispered to his son.

"You must never lift the last one. Don't you see? It is just possible that there might be another underneath."

C. H. Huttig on the Financial and Commercial Situation

Missouri Convention

Acceptance of your valued invitation to address you at this annual meeting was prompted more by a desire to visit with you, than to attempt an elaborate exposition of views. One of the principal purposes of your organization is to meet for an interchange of ideas, and for the discussion of conditions and prospects. I therefore take it, that a brief review of the financial and commercial situation would not, at this time, be amiss.

J. A. DOMINICK

That a redundancy of money, and an over-supply of bank credits exist throughout the country, is well known, but the causes for this surplus are not so easily understood or explained. The transition from the extremely tight money conditions of the panic, to an enormous excess of loanable funds, at exceedingly low interest rates, in the short period of six months, is one of the most interesting phenomena of our financial history. It goes without argument that fundamental economic causes were at work to produce this radical change. The two most important of these were; first, the lowering in the prices of securities and commodities; second, lessened activity in commerce,—both tending to reduce the requirements for credits and money. This being true, too much significance cannot be attached to the influence of the volume of money on credits and the effect of credits and money on all prices.

Our present situation is, therefore, explained by the plethora of loanable funds, brought about by the reduced prices of many commodities and securities, and by a lighter turnover of goods. To these causes should be added the very potential one of an immense output of gold on a constantly increasing scale.

There still is another very important factor which must be given full consideration in passing on the influences that work for changes in the times. It is the conversion of liquid wealth into fixed capital investments. Among the most significant factors in producing prosperous conditions are the periods of railroad construction, erection of houses, office buildings, road improvements, harbor expenditures, etc. These constitute what is commonly designated capital investments. Many people have an erroneous idea of the true nature, and of the effect of these investments on a community and country. They argue that as the same volume of money continues to exist, no actual conversion of wealth occurs. One must look deeper into the subject to get the real facts. In periods of very active building operations, an increased percentage of the country's labor is employed in the manufacture of materials to be used in connection therewith. There results a corresponding decrease in the amount of labor in the production of consumable wealth, such as the products of the farm.

CHARLES H. HUTTIG

Now, by way of illustrating and emphasizing the important effect of an undue proportion of labor expended on the non-consumable wealth, let us assume a case, which, while wholly improbable, illustrates clearly the point under discussion. Suppose the labor of all sorts employed in this state, was confined to railroad construction, road building, the manufacture of building and other materials used in the erection of houses, bridges, etc. In the course of months, there will have been produced fixed, inconvertible, non-consumable wealth at the expense of the production of those things which are consumable,—with the result that all foodstuffs would be quickly consumed, and all of the cash of the state would have to be sent beyond its boundaries to purchase the necessities of life. The opposite results would naturally have been secured if all the labor of the commonwealth had been concentrated on developing, say for instance, agricultural products. This would be followed by an extraordinary increase in the money or cash

J. W. Butler for years was the faithful secretary of the Texas Bankers. When he gave up the place his loyal friends made him vice-president, and now they hope to elect him president of the association. # Mainly About Banks and Bankers

THE Third National, St. Louis, besides contributing Mr. Huttig to the speaking program at the St. Joseph convention, has, through Mr. Galbreath, sent out a fine red leather desk writing pad containing only the finest of embossed blotters. In the leather corner pieces is the famous Third National monogram which Mr. Galbreath has made so famous.

WHILE Messrs. Rosenthal, Rosenberg, and Rosenfeld,—the three roses—may not like it, lawyers agree that Peter Van Vlissingen is about the greatest, most effective witness ever heard in Chicago courts. He's a wonder. No wonder he could sell mortgages. There are hopes, too, that large sums may be recovered to be paid out to his many victims pro rata.

“EVERY bank in the state but one is a member of this association,” said President Dominick in stentorian tones at the St. Joe convention, “and I blush to speak its name”—he might have added. Really the “one” exception to Mr. Keyser's gentle sway ought to begin to be lonesome, if not ashamed of itself. Union labor would put it on the “unfair” list.

SECRETARY KEYSER of Missouri turned in net profits to the “reward fund” for the past year $9,300 from the sale of fidelity bonds and burglary insurance. Those stingy Illinois banks who get theirs at cut rates, although Secretary Rinaman caused the reduction, should read what President Dominick said at the St. Joe convention.

JUDGING from the trend of papers read at the Missouri convention the bankers of that state practically are a unit against both guaranty of deposits and postal banks. “What we need,” said the president, “is a rest from legislative threatenings.” A lot of bankers in other states will second the motion.

THE Columbia National, of Pittsburgh, between last two bank calls, gained in deposits $1,110,706.59. Modesty forbids us to say that the period of gain covers the time since they began to advertise in THE CHICAGO BANKER. Really, much of the gains come from the publicity department when an up-to-dater like

Geo. K. Reed, is given the reins. The Columbia is a comer.

SECRETARY GRAETTINGER will put his convention of the Wisconsin bankers on the “water wagon” this year. He has the big, palatial steamer, Virginia, which will leave Milwaukee June 25th, returning June 29th. The sessions will be held on board, on the way to Mackinac.

GOOD for Farnsworth! The membership of the good, old A. B. A. under his gentle methods has shown phenomenal growth. The net increase for the year to May 1st is 751. In April alone the growth was 211. Every prediction of his friends, made during the campaign for his election, has been fulfilled.

IF you do not read J. F. Downing's St. Joe address on “the responsibilities of the banker” you ought to be ducked in a rain barrel. A more sensible talk to bankers hasn't been made in years.

FRANK D. BRUNDAGE opened his “season” in the West with the St. Joseph convention. Doubtful if any man of his age knows more bankers; or, is known more favorably by bankers. The K. N. & K. interests are in fortunate charge.

H. N. TINKER of the Union Bank & Trust Company, Houston, is distributing a neat leather covered Texas Bank Directory, the shape and size of a single, pocket cheque book. It ought to make a hit.

DON'T overlook the Group 7, Illinois, meeting at Taylorville, May 12th. This covers seven of the best counties in the state. W. E. Turner and Homer Brents at Taylorville will make reservations for you.

OUR “Mainly About Banks and Bankers” department has made a hit, first with the readers of course, and then with the imitators. One paper has “Mainly About Brokers,” one has “About Men and Events,” one has “Banks and Bankers,” and thus it goes. One paper boldly copied the title line, verbatim et literatim, as they say at the Yards, but was so ridiculed that the plan was abandoned.

But we don't care. It is as it was with the young lady whose bracelet was fastened upon her arm with a gold padlock. “A lot of fellows think they are carrying the key,” she explained, “but the real key is carried by a man in Chicago.”

HERE is a part of a neat letter sent out by Frank Collins, of the National Produce Bank, to nearby and desirable customers. The letter concludes: “I will be pleased to call you at your office and confer with you relative to your banking needs, if you deem the present time and existing conditions opportune for the reception of a proposition from us to handle a part or all of your business.”

THE Peoples Trust and Savings Bank of Clinton, Iowa, is now the largest financial institution in Clinton County. J. H. Ingwersen is the president and an intelligent worker along good lines. He has a strong, loyal staff to help things along. CASHIER.

Wisconsin Convention

The annual convention of the Wisconsin Bankers Association for 1909 will be held on board the Goodrich Steamer “Virginia” during a trip from Milwaukee to the Mackinac Islands and return. The schedule will be as follows: Leave Milwaukee, Friday evening, June 25th, 8:00 o'clock; leave Green Bay, Saturday morning, June 26th, 11:00 o'clock; leave Mackinac, Sunday evening, June 27th, 8:00 o'clock; leave Green Bay, Monday afternoon, June 28th, 3:00 o'clock, and return to Milwaukee, Tuesday morning, June 29th. Arrangements for a stop at the “Soo” have not yet been concluded. Fare is only $14 per person, and early reservations are advised. Secretary M. A. Graettinger believes that this will be a most enjoyable event, and will enable bankers to form a thorough acquaintance with fellow bankers of his state. A list of good speakers will be provided, and the convention will be both instructive and beneficial to all who are present.

Banking Conditions in Missouri

Ladies and Gentlemen of St. Joseph: On behalf of the Missouri Bankers Association it affords us much pleasure to accept your proffered courtesies, and permit me to say, we do so in the same wholehearted and unreserved way in which you extend them.

We are delighted with your greetings. They could not be more pleasing to us. From what we have seen, and from what your spokesmen have announced, it seems you have anticipated our every pleasure and provided for them in your entertainment plans.

Knowing your reputation in the art, and splendid qualities of entertaining, this occasion has been one that we have looked forward to with something like childish impatience. And what can be more rejuvenating than a time like this, when the pressure of routine cares and responsibilities are removed from mind and heart, and our inner natures and better selves are touched to their awakening and are given a chance to respond in jovial lightheartedness to the companionship of friends, and to those delicate and elevating condiments of thought that indeed make intellectual intercourse "a feast of reason and a flow of soul."

Hospitality is the best testimonial of character that a man or a people can have. It is God's own insignium of greatness, for one given to it no longer lives within the narrow confines of himself, but at once, per se, naturally and involuntarily becomes a part of that larger and better world around him.

No wonder you have a splendid city here, commercially, socially and otherwise, because you are a splendid people.

It is our great pleasure and rare privilege to be the recipients of your hospitality on this, the occasion of our nineteenth annual convention.

It is indeed gratifying to see this splendid audience and the large number of delegates present, including some of our distinguished banker friends from outside of the state, and your cordial greetings, one with the other, betoken the good cheer you bear, also well established friendships, a renewing and strengthening of which are of themselves a feature of our association not to be minimized. Experience is a potential factor in our upbuilding; these annual conventions, therefore, where ideas are collated and experiences exchanged, have been and will continue to be of much benefit.

To serve to his best his day and generation, to make a livelihood and perhaps competence for himself and those dependent upon him, to give a full proportion of himself and his substance to those around him, and to come to the end unsullied and prepared for the fate that awaits him is the duty and laudable ambition of every man.

Human limitations are such, however, that, to meet with any degree of success in the pursuit of our undertakings, our activities, our very lives must be devoted to specialties, and it is well that it is so, for our desires being complex, men can group themselves into vocations and professions according to their various tastes, inclinations and endowments, each to his own specialty, and out of it results a homogeneous people of maximum resources and capabilities. We have chosen banking as our profession, and whatever we hope to be, whatever we accomplish for ourselves, and whatever we accomplish for our fellowmen, must come in its well doing.

The necessity for banking and indeed the practice of banking, I believe, began in the early dawn of time. In its initiative it goes back to the day when man began to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, and the wisdom of its practice was coincident therewith. The sluggard was told to go to the ant and learn the lesson of laying-by for a future and possible rainy day, and on this broad principle there has been developed a system of economics which underlies our entire social and commercial life. In its earliest stages this laying-by, or banking, was probably only of the mere necessities of human existence, but from that has come the storing in barns and elevators and warehouses, not only the products of farm, mine and factory, but also the depositing in our financial institutions of that which procures or purchases them, or in other words, the country's mediums of exchange, gold, silver and credits. The progressive steps in banking, like the development of men's necessities and surroundings, has been a constant growth and evolution. In our own generation the change has been very great.

Historical

Confining our remarks to the operation of that feature of it which relates to money and credits, it may be interesting to mention that even as late as one hundred years ago there were only about forty banks in the entire United States. There was no bank in the state of Missouri, or for that matter, West of the Mississippi River, until the year 1816—only 93 years ago. The first coin in Missouri of which there is any record, was in 1804. It amounted to only $12,000, and was brought over from Spain to pay the Spanish soldiers garrisoned at St. Louis, then a small Western village.

Missouri, and the entire West was again without any organized bank from the time of the closing of the second United States Bank, in 1833, until the big bank of the state of Missouri was chartered in 1837—only seventy-two years ago. There were, it is true, some private bankers in the state, and the Cincinnati Commercial Agency, which under its very broad charter could do almost everything, including banking, did business in Missouri, but there was no real organized bank in the state from 1833 to 1837.

In 1857, what was called the System of Seven Banks, was chartered, and from that time on state banks have increased rapidly until we now have in Missouri 993 of this kind. In 1863 the National Bank Act was passed and we now have 119 national banks. In 1889 the trust companies put in their appearance, and we have 37 trust companies. The total number of banks in the state at present is 1,149, holding an aggregate deposit account of $495,829,966.67, or $141.65 to every man, woman and child in the state.

In 1856 the deposits in the banks of the state were $1,500,000 or $3 per capita.

In 1860 the deposits in the banks of the state were $4,500,000 or $4 per capita.

In 1881 the deposits in the banks of the state were $57,650,000 or $26 per capita.

In 1892 the deposits in the banks of the state were $147,000,000 or $54 per capita.

In 1898 the deposits in the banks of the state were 176,000,000 or $58 per capita.

In 1908 the deposits in the banks of the state were $495,829,966.59 or $141.65 per capita.

It will thus be seen that this business to which we are devoting our lives is keeping step to the onward march of civilization, and is indeed an integral part in the development of this great Southwestern empire, the glories and possibilities of which are now but beginning to dawn upon us.

Missouri Bankers Association

The Missouri Bankers Association was organized in 1891. It is a voluntary association of the bankers of this state having a twofold purpose: 1st, that a better acquaintance and closer friendship may be had among our members, and 2d, that a safer, better, and more efficient banking system may be established. Every bank in the state except one is a member. This fact does not come by chance. From its inception to this good day our purpose and our labors have been along broad and liberal lines, realizing that the public good and our own are inseparably interwoven. During the 19 years of its existence no one can point to a low, selfish, or unjustifiable stand taken by it, and the result is our opinions on financial questions have weight in the councils of the people. Its record has been absolutely untarnished, and both in aim and achievements, one in which everyone of us can take just pride. We have held annual conventions, and they have been full of fraternal spirit. In the interim between our general annual conventions the association is controlled by an executive council, or board of directors of seventeen members, made up of the 12 chairmen of the different groups of counties into which the state is divided, and of the 4 general officers of the association, the president, vice-president, treasurer and secretary, and the retiring president. From the way these seventeen members are selected, it can at once be seen that the association is quite democratic and representative in its government.

In addition to this central body we have had several committees who have looked after special lines of our work, and the full details of the year's work will, during the proceedings, come to the convention through the reports of the secretary, treasurer, and chairmen of these different committees. For me to dwell upon them would be superfluous, but let me say that the fraternity is much in debt to these splendid gentlemen for their competent, efficient labors. There is a great deal of business handled by the Missouri Bankers Association, and it is handled in a businesslike way. I bespeak your careful attention to these various reports, for I hope all of our members will keep in close touch with the work, and that each and every member will do his full part for the good of all. Every bank in the state should carry its fidelity bonds and burglary insurance with our secretary, Mr. Keyser. Mr. Keyser has turned into the association this year about $9,300 from commissions re-when this bank was founded, Conestoga Wagons were used for conveying families and their household goods from one point to another; the first railroad was not built until 1830.

It is now 99 years since The Bank of Pittsburgh was founded, and it has been in continuous existence ever since, uninterrupted by the violent financial disturbances of the past century, and constantly increasing its resources and ability to serve its patrons. It desires to extend its collection facilities and its business with other banks and invites correspondence.

ceived on this business, which provides a nice reward fund for use in the conviction and punishment of those committing crimes and depredations against our members. The very fact that it is known we are well equipped for this purpose, no doubt deters many from even attempting burglary, robbery, forgery and fraud against our people. It costs no more to take insurance through him, and indeed his agency has been the means of getting the cost on fidelity bonds reduced to us in the past few years from $4 per thousand to $2.50 per thousand; and the cost of burglary insurance has been proportionately reduced. If you are not now carrying your insurance with Mr. Keyser, I hope you will transfer it to him.

The cost of cleaning time locks has been reduced to our members from $15 to $9 per lock. Taxes have been reduced and been made more equitable, although we are still paying much more than our just proportion. The cost of making transfers of currency has been reduced; a more satisfactory bill of lading has been obtained from the railroads, an exceedingly important matter; and in many ways our common good is being looked after.

General Conditions

Business conditions are at present generally sound. The prosecutions of large corporate interests with proposed changes in existing tariffs have had some deterred effects, but the past year has been one of steady recuperation from the depression of 1907, and it is particularly so in this section. Labor has been well employed at fair wages, and there has been conservative and healthy buying. Crops have been an average in yield, and have brought much above an average in price. With wheat bringing $1.25 per bushel, cattle 7 cents per pound, eggs 40 cents per dozen, butter 40 cents per pound, potatoes $1.20 per bushel, and all other farm products in proportion; and this being a large surplus producing state our agricultural friends are richer to-day, and are living better to-day than ever before; and this has naturally had a restoring effect on all other business undertakings. The railroads have handled increased tonnage and have enjoyed better earnings, our merchants have had better sales and our banks have shown better deposit and loan accounts, there has been no redundancy of funds to cause over expansion, and there has been plenty of money to extend all proper accommodations.

Deposit Guaranty

Notwithstanding these conditions, during the recent political campaign banks and banking have received a full measure of discussion. One of our great political parties has brought forward and championed the theory of a guaranty of bank deposits by a mutual assessment or tax levied upon banks. The other equally great political party, as an apparent off-set, has brought forward and championed the postal savings bank. Thus we are being grilled between the upper and lower millstones. I think I am safe in saying that 99 per cent of the bankers of Missouri are opposed to both of these propositions. In dealing with both, the people of Missouri have not lost their heads, and while some of our neighboring states have "gone off" after these, what we believe to be will-o-the-wisp panaceas, Missouri has, with her usual thoughtfulness and conservativeness, absolutely "stood pat" upon them both. We must be shown. Why has this saying come to be so often applied to the Missourian? It does not mean that the Missourian is afraid to pioneer in a good and righteous cause, but it does mean that he will not pioneer in a bad one. It does mean that he is attributed to acting with deliberation and thought.

The bankers of Missouri are strong believers in the guaranty of bank deposits, to be sure, and our daily concern is to conduct our respective banks in a way to assure the safe and prompt repayments of the same, but we do not believe it will be best promoted by a measure calculated to lower the standard of individuality or lessen personal responsibility, or by a careful and conservative banker having to endorse and stand sponsor for absolute strangers, or for competitors of opposite tendencies. We are unalterably opposed to the vain vagaries proposed on this subject by some of our impractical politicians—theories as unsound in principle and as impractical in practice as the 16 to 1 silver doctrine promulgated a few years ago. The phrase “guaranteed deposits” sounds well but when the proposition is examined into, it is found fallacious. The remedy proposed is inadequate in that, while a nominal fund is accumulated, and only nominal it is, a standard is lowered, and merit fails of its reward, essentials that are paramount in any business, and especially so in banking. A forced or involuntary guaranty, as proposed by our Oklahoma friends, is a serious infringement upon property rights, and to the conservative and prudent is without value received. The Kansas plan, since it provides only for a voluntary participation, escapes this criticism, but if the guaranty should have to be resorted to, the fund provided is wholly insufficient in time of need, and when the people found it to be a subterfuge and sham, a bad matter would be made worse and general distrust would result.

Postal Savings Banks

We are also equally opposed to the postal savings bank. We feel that the banking business in its general details is an undertaking rightfully belonging to our individual citizens, and not to the government. It is quite proper that the government exercise oversight over the circulating medium of the country, and the police power it exercises over the management and conduct of banking is wholesome and right, but further than that the government should not go. Why should the government enter into direct competition with the banks, both state and national, now so faithfully and efficiently performing the functions expected and desired of them? And in some vital respects actually putting a handicap on the business in its own favor, in that it proposes to pay interest on deposits, and make deposits with it exempt from taxation, while those in other banks are subject to tax; and worse than all, making these postal deposits immune from processes of law, thereby offering safe refuge for those wishing to defraud their creditors and escape their just debts. It is hard to conceive of the government putting itself in position to aid in such a thing. It would certainly be the most colossal system of branch banking the world has ever known, and would be a great move toward paternalism; and who would say that it might not ere long be followed by the government undertaking the ownership and operation of railroads and other centralizations of power inimical to our free American institutions. It seems to me that both of these bills are more political than economic. They do not originate with the people, for loss to depositors is an exceedingly rare occurrence. The total loss to depositors in national banks since national banks were established, is less than 1-20 of 1 per cent, and in Missouri the loss by state banks for the last four years has been less than 1-40 of 1 per cent; and there has been no loss at all in the past twelve months. It is reasonable to expect as good a showing in the future, for the business is being more and more safeguarded. Banking methods are being constantly improved. In this state a separate banking department was established in January of this year, making that department much more efficient in supervising and inspecting banks, and in addition to this the banks in the three large clearing centers in this state have at their own expense, and of their own volition, provided special examiners of their own, thereby very materially strengthening the banking situation. What we need is a little rest from legislation. Give us time to catch our equilibrium and let us have better enforcement of the laws we already have. Friction would then be removed from the wheels of industry, and smoke would rise from the chimneys of the factories of the nation like incense from the altars of faith.

Weak Places

And may I here give it as my opinion that the weakest place in American banking, as in American politics, and in American society, is in our American cities—in the great commercial and clearing centers. Our panics originate in our cities. In its flow, money congests in our cities and chokes up the arteries of trade, and in its ebb they are drained dry. One of the worst practices in banking to-day is the custom city banks have of paying interest to country banks on current daily balances subject to check. I well know the custom is tenaciously held to and is probably here to stay for some time to come, but there is a great element of weakness and danger in it nevertheless. When the crop movement is over and there is little activity in trade, the country banks build up their balances in the city banks in order to get interest. It is usually at the time the city banks need them the least. The city bank feels that it must get loans or investments to offset the interest it is paying. It may be spurred to take something it would not take if it were not paying interest on these deposits. In due time the crop moving period returns and the country bank needs its money at home; and the city bank is called upon to repay, and thereupon withdraws its credits extended to jobbers and others who possibly have in the meantime unduly expanded their operations, and it is inconvenient for them to respond. One credit withdrawn always cancels another, and often several of them, and a shock is given to business.

Another element of weakness, as well as a possible element of strength, is the way commercial paper has come to be handled. Those of us who remember the way cattle paper was handled fifteen years ago, through commission houses at our stock yards, can see much of similarity in this latter day business. There was much of the former that was sound and stood the test, and there is much of the latter that is sound and will stand the day of reckoning, but there is the same unprotected enticement and opportunity to the unscrupulous, and I have no doubt many concerns are getting lines of credit far in excess of what their responsibility warrants. I recommend that our members handle it with their accustomed watchfulness.

The business of the country is largely done on credits. We believe in our country, and we believe in each other; and we anticipate the future in contracting with each other. Bankers are much credited, and in turn are large extenders of credits. The total bank credits of the country are more than four times the total actual money of the country. The relation of reserves to credits, or the amount of actual money on hand available for the redemption or cancellation of these credits, is, therefore, vital to the banking business.

In times of business activity, increased credits are needed and consequent increased reserves to support them, but the amount of currency in the country is comparatively fixed, and here is another weak place in our banking system, for our laws require a fixed minimum ratio between credits and currency. The adjustment between the two can only be made in a flexible currency without giving hindrance to the business interests of the country. Our necessity in the panic of 1907 has probably proven the mother to the invention. What was done in that emergency furnished the remedy. It did the work, although without authority at law. The Aldrich-Vreeland bill was passed May 30, 1908, in a general way legalizing the plan, but it is recognized as only a temporary measure, and the currency commission will no doubt soon recommend another. The indications are that the report of that commission will be in favor of a central bank of issue, with large capital, owned by individual banks throughout the country, in proportion to their capital stocks. Time forbids me from entering into a discussion of it, but there is much in favor of such a plan, notwithstanding the fact it has many dangers. Can these dangers be sufficiently safeguarded?

Are the objections to it any greater than those to other plans spoken of, when those plans are compared, in promptness and efficiency? If such a plan were adopted, it should, in my opinion, be limited in its operations to transactions with the government and with other banks at home and abroad. In other words, it should not be allowed to enter into competition with other banks in the matter of receiving accounts from individuals, firms, and corporations, either in the way of receiving deposits or in making loans. If established, and the banks holding stock in it, should handle the entire banking business of the government, both in the way of receiving its deposits and paying checks for its disbursement, and indeed, in making loans to the government, if need be, under certain regulations.

On the other hand, could not the control of the issuance of assets or elastic currency by banks be put in the hands of a national currency commission of say six or twelve members, including the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, acting along the same lines as the clearing house committees in the time of the recent panic? I think it could. It would be a high grade commission, of course. Our clearing house committees were sufficient as a makeshift, would not a national commission, when clothed with necessary authority and acting with the support of the government be so? In either case this currency must be issued on actual value in the pledge of specific collaterals. It should be guaranteed by the government, and should be redeemable in gold. The collateral must, of course, be made acceptable to the commission both in amount and kinds, but the kinds should be such as is common among the rank and file of banks, and not restricted to a kind common among a few, as was proposed in the original Aldrich bill. In other words, it should be either acceptable bonds or acceptable commercial paper.

This currency should be subjected to graduated tax, insuring its retirement at the earliest logical moment. The tax should be

President J. F. Downing of New England National, Kansas City, on Responsibilities of the Banker

St. Joseph Convention

There is a great deal of agitation throughout the country since the panic of 1907 for safer banking methods. The Comptroller of the Currency has shown great activity with his twenty-nine articles of the new catechism for directors and other requirements calculated to safeguard the depositor's money. The people generally, and politicians in particular, have agitated for bank guaranty laws, and while this agitation is of value and may result in improvement in conditions in many ways, yet the real safety of a bank is dependent more on the character of the banker and his good judgment than on any safeguards that can be made by legislative or administrative action.

Many bankers, holding the position of custodian of the money of their depositors, fail to rightly appreciate their responsibility, forgetting that they are appointed as trustee of another's money. They conduct their banks as if they were handling their own money, taking risks in investments of a speculative nature that no conscientious trustee would consider for a moment. Loans are made to speculators in lands, oil, or even mining ventures, which would not be made except for a high rate of interest, or a share in the expected profits of the venture. No careful banker will ever let a high rate of interest influence his judgment of the security offered. The only successful banker in the long run is the conservative banker, the one who is thinking first, last and all the time of the safety of the depositors, and will not lend the bank's funds where he would be afraid to lend his own money.

The manager of a bank must be willing to forego opportunities for large profits to himself in speculative enterprises. You are all familiar with the cases where bank officers have been drawn into hazardous undertakings by their eagerness for personal profit, and when these enterprises have miscarried have been obliged to borrow large sums from their own bank to save their credit, resulting finally in their own downfall, and too often the downfall of the bank with which they were connected.

There are other ways of jeopardizing the safety of a bank besides the common and flagrant breaches of trust which we have just named. The inordinate ambition of some bankers to head the largest bank in the city or state has led to methods of business contrary to the well established rules of safety. One of the common practices of the would be great banker is the paying of high rates of interest for deposits in order to build up his business. This forces him to lend his money at the highest rate of interest, which in turn attracts only the most hazardous class of loans, while the safer business goes to his less greedy competitor.

A twin brother to this evil of high interest rates is the practice of absorbing the cost of collections of out of town items. This is a more dangerous evil than the other, because often not recognized. A large balance from a depositor covers a multitude of sins. We are apt to shut our eyes to the expensive items deposited, so long as the balance book shows a large credit to the customer's account. A close analysis of a large balance even at 2 per cent interest, will sometimes show that with the cost of the collections added, the account may be costing 4 per cent or 5 per cent, and that the balance shown on the books is merely a floating balance. A bank run on such loose methods as these will in time meet disaster, bringing disgrace to the banker and sorrow to the depositors.

A brighter day will dawn when bankers learn that a smaller bank, with business obtained on a profitable basis, is a better possession than the largest bank in the city built up by boom methods, where the earnings are swallowed up by exchange charges, interest on balances and bad loans.

When we as bankers appreciate our responsibilities to the community in which we live, and keep steadily in mind that we are trustees of the depositor's money, we will not be engaged in financing speculative ventures, whether they be oil or gas schemes, mining ventures, cement underwritings, trolley roads, office buildings, or land booms. The man who conducts his bank with the sole idea of receiving the deposits of the community and loaning them out to his customers, engaged in legitimate enterprises, on good security, either of business credits or collateral, at reasonable rates of interest, will prove a benefactor to the community and will enjoy peace of mind in his business, and when the whirlwind of panic sweeps the land, will be able to meet it without fear, knowing that his assets are real ones, and that the solvency of his bank is absolute. With this confidence in himself, he will inspire confidence in others.

The banker who knows his loans are carefully made, need never fear failure. As a writer has said, "The note case is the test of bank's solvency." I have never known a bank to close its doors where its loans were properly made. The banks which fail usually have a Walsh, a Morse, or a Heinze at their head, and the swift and sure punishment of such men will do much to discourage reckless banking methods, and will quiet the foolish clamor for bank guaranty laws.

Finally, the true banker should be thoroughly possessed of the spirit which is found in the captain of our ships at sea. It is an unwritten law among seafaring men that the captain of the ship must go down with the ship, never deserting his vessel as long as it is afloat. This spirit of devotion to his calling would make the banker risk his all, if necessary, in the preservation of his bank, giving up his own fortune, and even his life, to save the interests of the depositors who have entrusted their fortunes to his keeping. Not enough bankers appreciate the responsibility which rests upon them, thinking more of the personal profits to be made out of the business, than of the great public trust which is confided to their keeping. Unless a man possesses this sense of responsibility for the welfare of his customers, and of the community in which he lives, he would better never go into the banking business.

Chas. G. Evans of Sedalia Reports for Denver Delegates at St. Joseph

The thirty-fourth annual convention of the American Bankers Association was held at Denver, September 28th to October 2, 1908, inclusive, with about twelve hundred delegates and one thousand guests present.

Missouri was well represented by more than one hundred delegates and guests, which, by the way, was the largest number sent by any state—save Colorado; and as the Missouri membership in the American Bankers Association numbers only 341, this was a good representation. While this is a large increase in the membership over last year, this number represents less than one-third of the financial institutions in our state, and the membership should be much larger.

Col. J. D. Powers was the presiding officer of the convention proper. The first day, September 28th, was devoted to the seventh annual meeting of the savings bank section, with Lucius Teter, president of the Chicago Savings Bank and Trust Company, in the chair. The most important subjects discussed at this meeting were: "Guaranty of Bank Deposits," and the "Establishment of Government Postal Savings Banks," both propositions being condemned by an almost unanimous vote.

On the second day, the thirteenth annual meeting of the trust company section was held, and was presided over by Phillip S. Babcock, of New York. The address of welcome and the reply of President Babcock were very interesting, as was also the paper read by our distinguished fellow-banker, Breckinridge

Jones, of St. Louis, entitled, "The Trust Company—A Necessity."

The most important resolutions passed, and the ones that called forth the greatest discussion, were those condemning the guaranty of bank deposits and the establishment of government postal savings banks. Resolutions were also passed condemning both propositions.

The sixth annual meeting of the organization of secretaries of state bankers associations was also held on this day, at which our worthy and valuable secretary, W. F. Keyser, was elected to fill the important office of president.

On Wednesday, September 30th, the parent association was called to order by President Powers at the great Denver Auditorium—a magnificent building, admirably adapted for the purpose—each state being allotted a section on the floor, and each section designated by a banner on which was painted the name of the state.

The annual address of President Powers was masterful and strong, showing an intense personal interest in the welfare of the association. Col. Powers made many recommendations, which were generally adopted; among them, that the American Institute of Banking be admitted into full membership in the association and made a special section, and later, acting on his suggestion, the association passed a resolution to that effect.

The reports of the different committees were of unusual interest, and most of them were successful in their efforts. The report of the committee on express companies and money orders, of which Thornton Cooke, of Kansas City, is a valued member, showed splendid progress—the result of their efforts being that we will now have our own traveler's checks as well as money orders.

The addresses before the convention were entertaining and instructive, especially those of B. E. Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Toronto, Ont., and Prof. Woodrow Wilson, president of Princeton University. Would suggest that the members read these able and splendid addresses which will be found printed in full in the proceedings as furnished by Secretary Farnsworth.

Changes of material interest made by the committee on revision and amendments to the constitution were the elimination of delegates from the state associations in attendance at the state meetings shall select members of the executive and nominating committees and state vice-presidents.

The social features of this convention added very greatly to its success, and the entertainments furnished by the Denver bankers showed the generosity and hospitality of this great Western metropolis. The special features were a reception and ball in the splendid Masonic Temple on Wednesday evening, at which there was a large and representative attendance, and a trip over the famous Moffat Road to Corona on the great continental divide at an altitude of 11,650 feet. Three special trains conveyed the visitors up the steep grades of the mountains through 32 tunnels hewn through solid rock. A box lunch was served at noon, and on the summit of the mountain snowballing was enjoyed by many of the guests.

Northwest Banks and Bankers

By J. EDWARDS SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.

Opinion of St. Paul business men differs as to the practicability of the establishment of a sub-treasury in St. Paul, as outlined in a bill presented by Congressman F. C. Stevens. W. J. Dean, wholesale hardware, said: "I cannot regard the location of a sub-treasury at St. Paul as an unalloyed blessing. I should think you would see that. Would you consider that taking the money from the banks and putting it in the treasury would be any aid to business? Yet, that's what it means, to my mind. However, if the bankers and the people want it, as they seem to do, let them have it."

T. W. Griggs, wholesale groceries, said: "Were a sub-treasury located anywhere I think St. Paul is the place for it. As to whether it is a good thing for a city to have a sub-treasury within its limits, I don't know."

H. P. Upham Dead

Henry P. Upham, chairman of the board of directors of the First National Bank of St. Paul, died Saturday at his home. For fifteen years Mr. Upham has been declining in health. Two years ago he retired from the presidency of the bank and was made chairman of the board. Mr. Upham came to St. Paul in 1857 and since that time has been closely allied with the city's progress. He was a man of broad culture outside finance. He was a member of social clubs, Sons of the Colonial Wars, Sons of the American Revolution, Mayflower Society and the Wooster Society of Antiquity. He was connected with the banking house of Thompson Brothers in early days. He organized the City Bank in 1869, which was merged with the First National. He became cashier and later the president.

Annual Meeting, Group Nine

The sixth annual convention of the Ninth Group of the Minnesota Bankers Association, in the newly equipped rooms of the Crookston Commercial Club, was the most successful of the series in attendance and enthusiasm. In the resolutions the group indorsed the establishment of a separate banking department for the state and asked the governor to divorce the selection of superintendent and deputies from politics. It suggested A. P. White of Bemidji for the position of superintendent of banks. The group went on record against postal savings banks and government guaranty of bank deposits. Among the speakers were Secretary Charles R. Frost of the state association, W. D. Willard of Mankato on "District Clearing House," Senator A. D. Stephens on the recent legislation affecting banks, and H. N. Allen of Minneapolis on "Banking Taxation." J. W. Wheeler of Crookston had charge of the round table. Officers were elected as follows: President, T. H. Canfield, of Lake Park; vice-president, H. L. Wood, of Warren; secretary-treasurer, K. K. Peterson, of Rothsay; executive committee members, F. J. Evans, of Fergus Falls, and J. Maloy, Jr., of Moorhead. The next meeting will be at Bemidji.

Fills Vacancy

G. A. Lyon, formerly a banker in Iowa, recently an attorney in the office of the counsel for the First National Bank of Minneapolis has been elected assistant cashier of the bank. He takes the place which was made vacant by the death of Ernest C. Brown.

Send Gold under Guard

The Security National has just sent $40,000 in gold under heavy guard to the Fort Totten reservation in North Dakota to pay the Indians. The coin has to go around the lake at this time of the year, instead of across the ice as in the winter time, and the route is through lonely country. The Fletcher Bond Company, representing the United Security Company, felt that because of the unusually hazardous risk the shipment must be well protected against road agents. Twelve armed men went along with the Indians' money.

Fifteen banks in Minneapolis showed a total deposit account at the last call of $82,023,689. This is a decrease as against the February

The Chicago Bank Statement

Whether deposits are up or down the Chicago bank statement is a real reflex of western and national banking and business conditions. The call of April 29th found the state institutions up on account of not holding reserves to the extent that the nationals do, at a time when inland banks are drawing for spring seedling and repair work by farmers chiefly. As a result it was the state banks which made a new high record this time. Compared with the figures of twenty-seven banks on February 6, 1909, twenty-six state banks show an increase in deposits of $2,716,036. These twenty-six institutions embrace one absorption, that of the Royal Trust Company by the Central Trust Company.

The twenty-six banks under review show as a whole an increase of over $13,500,000 in loans since February 6th, or 6.43 per cent. Cash resources were lowered 10.26 per cent. Total cash means were, on April 29th, 32.60 per cent of deposits, compared with 36.50 per cent at the date of the previous published statements.

The nationals showed some contraction in deposits, due, as stated to withdrawals by country banks. A short time ago attention was called to the fact that country institutions have invested to a greater extent than usual their surplus funds in bonds, and are so well loaned up, that some of them are not only drawing down their balances at reserve and central reserve cities but are even borrowing. Evidently also they are looking a little ahead, expecting an improved demand.

Reports of the fifteen national banks of Chicago showing their condition at the close of business on April 28th have been taken as a forecast of a higher money market. The banks lost in deposits $12,050,707, or 3 per cent compared with February 5th, the date of the last previous call. While deposits ran off over $12,000,000 there was an increase of $1,100,000 in loans and a decrease in cash resources of over $10,500,000, or 6.4 per cent. In other words, while losing deposits the banks have continued to lend freely. Total cash resources are 40.05 per cent of deposits, compared with 41.49 per cent three months ago. The banks report business good and point to the new high record for April clearings at Chicago. They point to an increase of 12.5 per cent over the corresponding month last year, being the record for the month of April. For the first four months of the calendar year the banks show a gain of 16.2 per cent over the corresponding period in 1908. These percentages are the result of comparisons in detail of the actual figures which are rarely used in these columns, since THE CHICAGO BANKER is a reading and not a reference paper. The showing made by the Chicago banks is splendid.

Money Market Conditions

Reassurance is given to those who may have felt shaky about money market conditions from the fact that Fisk & Robinson, of New York and Chicago, have paid a handsome premium for ten millions of bonds drawing but 3 per cent. This firm has the reputation of being expert and careful analysts of those things which affect money market conditions. Buying standard bonds can be based upon no other condition than that there is no unfavorable apprehension upon the part of the buyers. The $10,000,000 New York state loan attracted bids of nearly $50,000,000, none of them below par. The bidders included the most important investment houses in the country, and no doubt applications represented in many instances actual orders for these bonds. The sale's remarkable success is a trifle surprising, in view of the acknowledged fact that investors, both European and American, have of late talked of yields of 4 per cent or better. Of course state bonds possess certain attractions for financial institutions that railroad or other non-governmental issues do not embody. Contrasted with the price obtained by New York City for its recent offerings of 4½ and 4 per cent bonds, the results announced at Albany suggest that the best class of investors have paid some heed to the savings bank investors governed so closely by the statutes.

The market effect of the high bid by Fisk & Robinson, "for all or none," will be felt in the coming bond sales. It is something to be able to set the pace in so conspicuous a fashion.

The address of Mr. Huttig, the progressive student banker of St. Louis, before the Missouri bankers at St. Joseph can be strongly commended as the opinions, not of a visionary or a theorist but of a successful business man and banker of first rank. Mr. Huttig speaks in plain, unmistakable language, in that friendly way for which he is noted. The bankers of his own, and of every state, will weigh well his utterances.

The convention season in this territory is open wherever Mr. Keyser has held his Missouri convention. It is a great state, has a banner association, and a secretary who is ideal. The only fly in his ointment is that one confounded banker who will not join the association. Poor banker, we would not want his lonesome job of being the only lamb outside the field.

The only Pollard didn't write his inimitable address at St. Joseph and it simply cannot be done in shorthand. "Joe" has learned the D. R. Forgan theorem that an address always is new—until it's printed. He probably can find opportunity to use it over again and his letter file shows the autographs of most of the secretaries.

Don't for a moment imagine that J. S. Calfee, cashier of the Mechanics-American of St. Louis, went to St. Joe feeling downhearted. Not with the deposits just tickling the thirty million dollar mark and threatening to go higher. No, he wasn't feeling so bad!

Ohio Bankers

The preliminary announcement for the Ohio convention is out as a "warmer-up" and promises a "fine time." Over one hundred rooms have been taken already (S. B. Rankin's word for it) at Hotel Secor, Toledo, for June 14th. A good speaking program is promised.

"On Tuesday afternoon," writes Secretary Rankin, June 15th, at 3 p. m., our party will leave Toledo on the steamer Hamonic, which has been specially chartered for our party for the remainder of the week. The itinerary, which later will be published in connection with the program, provides for a magnificent trip. The steamer Hamonic is just being completed. The party will be taken on this steamer from Toledo to Midland, Ontario, in the Georgian Bay, arriving at the latter point on Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock. A trip will then be taken on the steamer Waubic through the Thirty Thousand Islands, arriving at Parry Sound on Wednesday night at 8 o'clock. The party will then proceed on the "Hamonic" across the Georgian Bay and through the North Channel, to Sault Ste. Marie, arriving at the latter point, at 8 o'clock Thursday night, giving the evening and next morning at this point. The boat returning will leave the Soo at 10 o'clock a. m., Friday, and arrive at Toledo the next afternoon at 3 p. m. The cost of the trip is $31 per person, half rates for children, and covers "everything." A banker wanting more for his money would be under suspicion.

A Good Dakota Story

"The Watchers of the Plains" is a story of Dakota in the 70's, depicting one of the Indian uprisings that were so frequent and so terrible in those days. It is strong in plot, vivid in action, and of great interest. Seth is a character no one can fail to admire. The author, Ridgewell Cullum, has the rare gift of vivid pleasing description, without worrying his reader with details. Like the good brush artist, he knows when they should be suppressed to concentrate attention upon the principal object. There is a fine frontispiece in colors by Leyendecker and the typographical work and binding are superb. Published by George W. Jacobs & Co., Philadelphia, at $1.50.

Huttig on the Financial and Commercial Situation

holdings of the people of the state, and a consequent depreciation in property values, because of neglect.

The point is further illustrated by the condition of the manufacturer, who has expended too large a portion of his capital in plant and machinery, leaving his working capital inadequate for a normal and healthy conduct of his business. He is thus forced to secure the requisite working capital by borrowing, and when his indebtedness increases out of healthful proportions to his quick assets, he has put his entire business in jeopardy, especially in times of money stringency and panic.

Many of our bankers attribute the cause of the recent panic troubles to the fact that we have an inelastic currency system. One of my own arguments before the banking committee of the house of representatives at Washington, in December, 1906, was to the effect that if we did not secure a reform in our currency, our prosperity would culminate disastrously; that we had an inadequate supply of money to take care of the big volume of business, also to furnish the requisite funds for crop moving purposes. I still am of the opinion that our currency system is in sore need of correction; that flexibility (I mean by this, expansion and contraction in its volume) is most desirable and necessary, but I do not believe a widely fluctuating quantity of bank notes is a remedy for an overextended credit situation, bringing about an unhealthy proportion of credits to the country's basic money. The issuance of bank notes to meet an extra money demand affords relief in that direction, but it also has the effect of producing a still greater disproportion of the aggregate liabilities of the banks of the country, to the total volume of gold and silver. It is therefore clear, that the only real money we have is our gold, and the bullion value of our silver, and that in the last analysis, all of the deposits of the banks, in fact, all of the credits

Pacific Northwest Banking News

Spokane, Wash., May 5.—Reports from the wheat belts in eastern Washington, northern Idaho, southeastern Oregon and western Montana are that the wheat yield in the Inland Empire will be near the 80,000,000 bushel mark this year, as against 65,000,000 bushels in 1907, the banner year in the history of the Spokane country. Conditions are favorable for a bumper crop, as the frequent light rains this spring have kept the ground moist and free from drying and cracking. What this means to the farmers in this part of the Northwest will be better understood when it is known that 40 cent wheat is profitable, while 65 cent wheat becomes the basis of fortunes. More than 2,100,000 acres of land is in wheat this year in 13 counties in eastern Washington, which harvested 40,675,000 bushels in 1907. Aaron Kuhn, president of the Traders' National Bank of Spokane, who has just returned from a tour through the Big Bend wheat belt, west of Spokane, says the outlook is better than he has ever seen it in that part of the country, adding that a good rain in May or early in June will insure the banner crop of the state. Mr. Kuhn looks for higher prices than have yet prevailed at the beginning of the shipping season, as less old wheat than ever before will be carried over. Other local bankers who have visited the Palouse country, south of Spokane, report there is nothing to prevent the ranchers from reaping a golden harvest the coming summer. The ground is finely pulverized and the wheat is in excellent condition. There is an increase of from 10 to 15 per cent in acreage and conditions were never better.

Will Invest in Real Estate

Owen Burns, president of the Burns Realty company, who owns Inwood Hill in New York, for the purchase of which the Hudson-Fulton celebration committee is negotiating for $1,042,500, announces that if the sale is made he will invest $1,000,000 in local real estate. He already owns Inwood Park and First addition to Cannon Hill in Spokane and it is likely that his future investments will be in similar additions. The New York property contains 417 lots, valued at $2,500 each. The committee wants it for a park in connection with the Riverside drive extension and the memorial bridge approach. John E. Parsons, 52 William Street, New York, is negotiating the deal for the committee.

Debts Paid Clearing House

Two debts to the Spokane Clearing House Association amounting to $329,438 were wiped out by the payment of $2.58 at the close of business April 19th, thus setting a new mark. When the banks cast up their balances the Exchange National Bank went to the clearing house with $164,720.77 in its favor. Ordinarily when a bank goes into the clearing house with this large a credit it receives a large part of it in cash or clearing house certificates, the equivalent of cash, but when the balances were footed it was found that other banks had paid for the Exchange National $164,718.19, leaving $2.58 due the bank. The clearings that day amounted to $1,561,827, which was one of the largest in several weeks.

New Building for Sandpoint

Dr. R. N. Jackson, president of the Citizen's State Bank at Sandpoint, Idaho, said while in Spokane, April 22d, that $20,000 will be expended on a two-story brick structure. The lower floor will be used by the bank exclusively, while the upper story will be fitted for offices. The building will be 60x87 feet. The foundation will be built to support three stories, but at this time only two will be constructed. Thomas H. Brewer, vice-president of the Exchange National Bank of Spokane is interested in the company. Work will begin in May.

Spokane Deposits Greater

R. Lewis Rutter, secretary of the Spokane & Eastern Trust Company, the official depository of the Spokane schools savings bank, reports that the average deposit in Spokane is $11.75, as against an average of $4.25 for 101 cities with 35 per cent of the children depositing reported by J. H. Thiery of the Long Island school board, leader of the school savings bank movement in this country. Mr. Rutter adds that only one child in six is a depositor in Spokane.

Teller Found Guilty

J. A. Marcel, formerly a teller in the Exchange National Bank, indicted by the federal grand jury on 10 counts of embezzlement was found guilty of five. Marcel was employed in the bank from June 21, to August 28, 1908, and, according to the indictment he embezzled various sums of money passing through his hands. The case attracted some attention in the superior courts and a jury unable to agree was responsible for the case being taken to the federal court.

Department Store Opens Savings Department

The Wonder departmental store, of which F. R. Culbertson is president, has opened a savings department. It pays 4 per cent interest on money deposited and 6 per cent on the depositor's entire balance every month a purchase is made. It can not properly be called a bank. It does not handle checking accounts. It is designed as a convenience to its customers and to encourage trade, with savings inducements as a side attraction.

Ranks Tenth Among Ninety-Five

Spokane ranks tenth among 95 leading cities of the United States in the value of new buildings for which building permits were issued in March the estimated amount being $1,777,205, an increase of 100.5 per cent over March, 1908, an 130 per cent over February.

Bids for School Bonds

Bids from various parts of the country, some from southeastern states bordering on the Atlantic are being received for the $400,000 issue of bonds to be sold by the school board of Spokane on May 3d.

Banking Notes

W. T. Day of Castana, Iowa, formerly a banker, has come to Spokane as president of the Day & Hansen Security Company and the Washington Land Company of this city.

Justin A. Harsh, president of the Latah County State Bank, has reached Deary, Idaho, from Tekonsha, Mich., and has assumed his duties at the bank.

Practical Legal Points for Bankers

By Virgil M. Harris, trust officer Mercantile Trust Company of Saint Louis, before the Missouri Bankers Association

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I regard it as a distinct honor for any man, whatever his position, to be invited to address this association. In a running account which I have kept with the world for a period of nearly fifty years, there are many items, pro and con, and the balance is against me; but there is no item which has given me greater pleasure or satisfaction than the preference and confidence shown me by the Missouri Bankers Association. I very deeply appreciate the opportunity to again address you.

The Missouri Bankers Association is justly regarded the best and most perfect organization of its kind in the United States; this result is perfectly logical when account is taken of its large membership and the splendid management which it has received, the esprit de corps which exists between the officers and group managers, and then, too, the vast wealth and resources of the state of Missouri.

Do you realize that the state of Missouri has an area of 20,000 square miles greater than that of New York, 25,000 greater than that of Pennsylvania, and that it is nearly nine times as large as the great state of Massachusetts; the products of Missouri add annually to the wealth of the world a sum in excess of a thousand million dollars.

Before taking up for discussion the legal points on the program, I shall avail myself of a request to make some general statements on the subject of law.

* * * * *

What I have said to other conventions of bankers, I now say to you, and it is this; that the law is not an exact science, nor is medicine or theology, for the best physicians in the land tell us that there are in all materia medica only a few remedies which can be relied upon; and the religious denominations are divided into hundreds of sects following doctrines or opinions of as many philosophical or theological teachers; nor can the law be commercialized, for with the evolution of the sciences and commerce, it is ever changing and ever shifting. Nothing is ever decided until it is rightly decided.

However, there are some principles and decisions of everyday importance to bankers which are comprehensible to laymen and fairly well settled by our courts, and it is with some of these that I shall now deal.

(The subjects discussed are given below, with an outline of what was stated concerning each.)

I. The Proposed New Laws:

(a) An act to punish derogatory statements affecting banks.

(b) An act to punish the giving of checks or drafts when the person so giving shall not have sufficient funds for the payment of the same.

(c) An act fixing the liability of banks to depositors for payment of forged or raised checks, and requiring such errors to be reported promptly.

(d) An act to authorize banks to make payment to the survivor of joint depositors, and also giving the right of access to the survivor of joint renters of safe deposit boxes.

(e) An act to authorize banks to make payment of deposit to beneficiary in case of the death of the trustee.

(f) An act to authorize banks to make payment of deposits in trust on trustee's signing and using same words in which the deposit was made.

(g) An act concerning notaries who are directors, stockholders, officers, or employees of banks.

(h) An act with reference to instruments payable at a bank; confining the authority of the bank to pay to the day of maturity.

These laws merit serious consideration, and most of them are recommended by the American Bankers Association and have been adopted in several states; they have been presented to our legislature at its present session, and most of them have been, or will be, adopted.

2. Notice:

(a) There are a variety of notices which may affect the banker.

(b) Of paramount importance is a notice, in writing or verbally, to the effect that funds deposited to the credit of one person actually belong to another; upon such notice, it is the duty of the bank to withhold payment for a reasonable time to enable the party giving the notice to assert his rights in court. It should be kept in mind that the claim must be one of ownership and not of debt. It is the law of this state, and the general law of the land, that, upon receiving such a notice, the bank is required to hold the funds for a reasonable time. It may be asked: If such a notice is given by an irresponsible person, should it be respected? It is sufficient to say that the law will not punish a banker for doing that which the banker is required to do.

(c) A notice to stop the payment of a check, or notice as to the death of a depositor. Idle rumor and gossip, and newspaper notices, do not constitute proper notice; but it is the duty of every banker upon receiving notice by word of mouth, or in writing, to act prudently, and it is generally best to accept such notice as a proper notice. The bank can always protect itself by proper action.

I saw the other day a decision where an officer of a bank was at a banquet, and there a depositor notified him that he wanted payment of a certain check stopped; the banker forgot to stop payment, and the bank was held liable.

(d) Knowledge by a banker may be notice; and if he permits a deposit of funds in the name of one person, when he knows they belong to another, he is liable for such funds in a suit brought by the true owner.

3. Paper signed or endorsed "Trustee," "Administrator," etc.:

(a) Wherever paper is offered which bears a signature of one acting in a fiduciary character, the scope of the authority of such person should be definitely ascertained before acting upon such paper.

(b) An administrator never has the right to borrow money or to sell paper; his authority must come from the probate court.

(c) An executor may, or may not, have power, depending upon the terms of the will under which he acts.

(d) A guardian or curator receives his authority from the probate court.

(e) A trustee may be vested with innumerable powers, and they may vary greatly in character. The only safe rule in dealing with a trustee, is to carefully inspect the instrument or decree of court whereby he obtains his authority.

4. Telegraph and Telephone:

(a) The courts of justice do not ignore the great improvements in intercommunication afforded by the telegraph and the telephone; the natural operation and uses of these instrumentalities are facts of which the courts take judicial notice; the use of electricity has become indispensable; conversations conducted through the medium of the telephone do not differ in their essential character from other communications; in law they have the same legal effect; the instrument merely enables the parties to carry on conversation at a greater distance than under ordinary circumstances; the fact that the voice is not identified does not render the conversation inadmissible.

(b) The telephone should not be used in taking acknowledgments or affidavits.

(c) Notices received by telephone or telegraph deserve the same attention and consideration as those given in writing or by word of mouth.

5. Dower and Curtesy:

Dower: The life interest which a surviving wife has in the real estate of her husband; this interest is the use of a third for her life, and attaches at the moment of marriage or the subsequent acquisition by the husband of the real estate, and continues thereafter during the life of the wife.

During the husband's life, it is inchoate, a mere right or possibility, but it is a right, however, which the courts will protect. The husband cannot deprive her of it by conveyance to a third person, or by his last will. The law of dower has been in force for nearly a thousand years, and has always been highly favored; it is an old saying that the law favors life, liberty, and dower. A divorce granted to the husband deprives the wife of her right of dower, as it does the husband of curtesy.

Curtesy: The life interest which a surviving husband has in the real estate of his wife. It is a law of great antiquity, traces of it being found in the earliest English history. The birth of a living child is necessary to establish curtesy; it is enough that it lived but for a moment after its birth. Accordingly, it is said that curtesy is due rather to being the father of an heir than as widower of an heiress.

Curtesy extends to the use of the whole estate during the life of the husband.

6. Loans and Collections:

(a) Loans to corporations should be made to such only as have authority to borrow, and only for corporate purposes. Corporations and partnerships, as a general rule, have no authority to guarantee by endorsement, or otherwise, debts for the accommodation of others.

(b) Banks should refuse collections to which are attached onerous conditions, such as the payment of money upon the delivery of a deed which gives a good title, or the delivery of a deed if taxes are paid, or the payment of money where some question of law or some intricacy is involved. In the matter of collections, the bank should confine itself to the collection of money, and not assume responsibilities out of the ordinary.

In the handling of collections, the general rule, and the safe rule, is to send the collection directly, and not by circuitous route. It is always a dangerous method to send a collection to the bank upon which it is drawn.

7. Collateral:

It is the duty of the pledgee to use reasonable care and diligence to make collaterals available, and he is bound to use proper exertions to render the collaterals effective. If through his negligence or wrongful act or omission, the collateral is lost, he is accountable and liable to the pledgor.

(a) He must protest paper.

(b) It is his duty to demand payment as the collateral matures.

(c) It is his duty to collect interest and dividends, and no notify the debtor if same are not paid.

(d) It is his duty to foreclose a mortgage, provided he has the power to do so.

(e) If collaterals are worthless, the law does not require the doing of a useless thing, and under such circumstances, no steps need be taken on such paper.

(f) Whether the pledgee has used proper diligence is a question of fact.

8. Privacy and Silence:

In banking, as in other vocations, silence is often a virtue; if a mistake has been made, if an officer or clerk is short in his accounts, the prudent course to pursue, is to keep the matter quiet rather than to take the advice of others, unless it be your attorney. It will frequently develop that moneys may be recovered, if the matter is kept quiet, while if it becomes public property, this may be impossible. The relation of the banker and his depositor, while not confidential from a point of law, should be confidential in practice. The nature of one's account, the amount of his indebtedness, or the character of his collateral, should be matters which are inviolate. The banker should disclose this information only upon a proper order or in court.

9. Checks and Receipts:

(a) A bank is liable for the failure to pay the checks of its depositors, when there is money on hand for that purpose; and the rule is, that the smaller the check refused, the larger the damages. Checks should be paid in the order in which they are presented, and where a number of checks are presented through the clearing house, the total of which exceeds the balance on deposit, the whole number should be refused.

(b) Where the amount of a claim is unliquidated, that is to say, where it is not fixed or determined to be a specific amount by contract, or where a dispute has arisen with regard to the amount that is due from one party to another, and the debtor tenders a check to the creditor upon which, or in connection with which, there is a written statement that the check is to be in full settlement, if the check is accepted by the creditor and cashed, it amounts to a complete accord and satisfaction, and the creditor cannot thereafter maintain any suit against the debtor for any balance which he may claim to be due him upon such account.

But where the amount is fixed and determined by contract, and is not called in question by reason of any disputed offset, the sending of a check for a less amount with the statement written thereon that it is in full settlement, will not amount to an accord and satisfaction, even if the creditor collects the check; for, in such cases, there is no account stated between, nor meeting of the minds of the parties, with an intent on the part of each to settle a disputed claim; and the acceptance of part of the money which is due him by the creditor will not preclude him from maintaining a suit for the balance.

10. Wills and Probate:

Every man should make his will, and it should be done timely and deliberately. A prominent legal writer says: "It is astounding how frequently from indolence, procrastination, or superstition, men will postpone this needful act until the last. Some, like old Euclio in Pope, with the ruling passion strong (Continued on page 29)

The Missouri Banker and Missouri, by Walter Williams

The central commonwealth of America is Missouri. Here at the confluence of the two greatest waterways in the world is an imperial state.

Sometimes called Western, sometimes called Southern—Missouri is neither Southern nor Northern, Eastern nor Western, but central, with the best qualities of all. It extends farther north than Kansas, farther south than Virginia. Geographically it is at the very heart of continental United States. Located between the 36th and 41st parallels of northern latitude and between the 89th and 96th meridians of western longitude, Missouri is a part of the temperate zone, in which the work of the world is done. Here are wealth of resource and opportunity.

The annual death rate in the United States per thousand population is 16.3, while in Missouri the annual death rate is only 12.2. To express it differently, one-third more deaths occur annually in the other states of the Union in proportion to population than in Missouri.

While the annual birth rate in the United States exceeds the annual death rate 11.2 per cent, the excess in Missouri is 13.8 per cent. Missourians are born more numerously and die less rapidly than the citizens of the other states.

It is a state of many interests. Other states lead in one or two industries. Missouri is in front rank in all. Take twenty leading products of the United States and note a group of the six states which excel in each of the twenty. Missouri appears in every one of the twenty groups, while the next state appears in only eleven of the groups.

It is an agricultural state. Outside of the three cities of St. Louis, Kansas City, and St. Joseph, only 7.6 per cent of the population of Missouri live in towns of over four thousand inhabitants.

One-tenth of the corn grown in one year in the world is grown in the state of Missouri. Canada is a wheat country. Yet the state of Missouri grows two-thirds as much wheat as all of the provinces of the Dominion of Canada. "Our Lady of the Snows."

It is a live-stock state. It has more live-stock farmers than any other state.

It is a horticultural state. There are a third more apple trees in Missouri than in any other state. In a laboratory of a German university analysis was made of the finest fruit soil from all the world. The best two specimens came from the loess lands of Missouri.

Missouri Convention

It is a mining state. From it comes 80 per cent of all the zinc mined in the United States, 90 per cent of all the nickel, and a large per cent of the lead. Half Missouri is underlaid by coal.

It is a state of manufactures and commerce. The shoe center has shifted from the west shore of the Atlantic to the west shore of the Mississippi. Cheap fuel and the proximity to great and growing markets will increase the state's rank in this regard.

There has never been a general crop failure in Missouri. There are no lean years to eat up the years of fatness.

Its children are descendants of Cavalier and Puritan, of Virginia Dare and Priscilla Mullens, of the men of the Godspeed and the Mayflower.

In more recent years there has been admixture of the foreign element. This admixture has been of thrifty, easily assimilated, rather than of thriftless, unhomogeneous kind. Of the foreign-born settlers in Missouri—7 per cent of the total population—there are 124,000 Teutons, 27,000 Irish, and 14,000 Slavs. Seventy per cent of Missouri's population was born in Missouri—a striking commentary as to the value placed upon the state by those who know it best.

This is the state. This is the people which has made Missouri—a people fearing God and honoring man, of sane, not stagnant conservatism, jealous of religious, political, and industrial freedom, building home and church and school house, felling the forest, tilling the soil, digging the mine, toiling in the factory, and holding to high ideals of citizenship in public and in private life. This is the business stand of the Missouri banker.

What are its possibilities and its needs?

In modern commerce the banker is the business ally of the makers of the state. On four lines does Missouri, great in resource and marvelous of opportunity, need the Missouri banker to aid in making the most of resource and opportunity.
